One of the interesting discussions on the program took place around the question whether the conference should demand the right to strike for the industrial and farm workers. There were on the floor of the convention delegates who cried out against the word "strike" urging that it would frighten the farmers and drive them away from supporting the conference. They were ably answered by W. W. Fitzwater, president of the Farmer-Labor Union of Texas, who showed that the farmers of the South-West had learned to use the strike as well as the industrial workers and after his speech the problem was solved by demanding the right to strike for the farm workers as well as for the industrial workers.

The railroad character of the conference again comes out in the statement of principles in the fact that the only industry which the conference wants the government to own is the railroad industry. The railroad workers are concerned with their own affairs. They do not trouble themselves about the miners, or the steel workers, or workers in other basic industries who have had the same experiences which they have had, but try only to solve their own special problem—that of the oppression and exploitation of railroad workers.

This plank of the program illustrates well the narrow, self-centered ideas of the aristocrats of labor dominating the conference.

What Does Conference Mean to Workers and Farmers?

The question which presents itself to the workers and farmers of this country with this third conference for Progressive Political Action passing into history is: What relationship has the July 4th Convention to the great mass movement for a farmer-labor party which has been crystallized in the call for the May 30th Convention?

Can the workers and farmers, the rank and file organized and unorganized among the worst exploited of the industrial workers and farmers of this country, leave their fate in the hands of the aristocrats of labor who dominated the Third Conference for Progressive Political Action? Can they depend upon this conference organizing a political party and entering into the presidential campaign on the basis of independent political action? Can they take the chance of calling off the May 30th Convention and going along with the Conference for Progressive Political Action in the hope that on July 4th it will finally crystallize into a farmer-labor party?

The answer to these questions is an emphatic "No!" Any one who represents the mass movement for a farmer-labor party who makes such a proposal, is proposing the betrayal of this movement.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action is not committed to independent political action. At the Cleveland convention, after the old party conventions, the leaders of this conference may decide that one of the candidates nominated by the old parties will represent their special interests. These railroad organization leaders will sacrifice the interests of the great mass of farmers and workers for their peculiar group interests at Cleveland as they have done in the past if they find it to their interests. They would endorse a McAdoo or a Smith, or some other so-called progressive, if his platform is right on the railroad question, and leaving the farming and working masses in the lurch.

The Third Conference for Progressive Political Action has not made less important the slogan, "On to St. Paul for the May 30th Convention." It has made this slogan of greater importance to the farmers and workers of this country.

BRITISH PLUTES BREATHE EASY; PREMIER SPEAKS

No Trace of Socialism in MacDonald's Speech

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 13—Whatever fears were slumbering in the breasts of the capitalist class of England that the British Labor Party would make things hot for them on coming into office were dissipated when Premier Ramsay MacDonald, in the House of Commons, and Viscount Haldane, in the House of Lords, spoke on the policy of the so-called labor government.

Even Lord Curzon, notorious reactionary, in a speech following Haldane admitted that there was no trace of Socialism in the policy of the British Labor Party and said that the apprehension with which he viewed the formation of a Labor government had been sensibly relieved.

The government's program as outlined by MacDonald was one that would appear quite in place in the platform of the most reactionary Tory government. The most important statement of the new premier was his appeal for a world conference on reconstruction. This means capitalist reconstruction of course.

MacDonald thought that America might be willing to assume an active interest in European affairs if the European nations spent less for armaments. This was a slap at France, tho the British government is not far behind in warlike preparations. The British flag flies over one sixth of the earth's surface and the millions of colonials who are enjoying the doubtful blessings of British rule must be guarded by a liberal supply of bayonets in order to save them from themselves. The British Labor Party under the leadership of the yellow socialist will continue to "carry the white man's burden."

Like his predecessors, the former pacifist, MacDonald, declared that until other nations disarmed England could not put herself in a weak position by reducing her military and naval power. Of course, England must protect her loot. The peoples she has robbed must be prevented from regaining their property.

Britain will seek a world conference with the object of restoring order in Europe; will except American co-operation as soon as United States bankers feel that their investments will pay interest; favors co-operation with France, open diplomacy, expansion of British trade and commerce; has not thought of a capital levy. This was the main plank in the British Labor Party's program before the election.

MacDonald has in mind three world conferences to discuss a special meeting of the League of Nations to admit Germany to membership, to discuss the findings of the commission on reparations, and a disarmament conference after sounding America first.

ANTI-KU KLUXER TELLS OF THREE DAY KIDNAPING

Klan Disarmed, Peace Returns at Herrin

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MARION, Ill., Feb. 13.—Williamson county was quiet today under a disarmed peace, with state militiamen pacing scenes of trouble in Herrin, and others quartered here and at Johnston City.

Major General Milton Foreman today traveled over the county, urging the business men to lend their aid in keeping the district peaceful.

Sheriff George Galligan, Anti-Ku-Klux Klan leader, arrested on orders of Glenn Young, for three days dictator of the county under the guns of his liquor raiders, was brought back to Williamson county jail, where he was taken by Young's followers.

Galligan, charged by Young with a dozen other anti-klansmen with complicity in the murder of Caesar Cagle, of Herrin, which precipitated the strife that resulted in the 1800 state guardsmen being sent here, today told a thrilling story of a three-day kidnaping.

A prisoner in the county jail which he has occupied the last two years as sheriff; Galligan said he had been subjected to abuse and threats of death during the ride 150 miles north by automobile to Urbana.

After being held 24 hours in the Herrin jail, which was filled to overflowing with prisoners arrested by the "Tin Star Policemen" of Young, the sheriff with four others were put into automobiles and placed in the procession of the funeral of Cagle, which five thousand klansmen attended Sunday afternoon, Galligan said.

"We had no rest, no sleep, and were subjected to physical and mental abuse," he said.

The funeral procession drove from Herrin to Carterville.

"I figured we were to be bumped off in the Carterville cemetery," Galligan said.

"I told them if they couldn't find a place to do it, to give me a gun and I would save them the trouble. I was in misery with a high fever."

The four other prisoners were Jim Davis, Johnston City; John Garvaglis, health officer of Herrin; John Murray, and Jim McCanna, a special deputy sheriff.

GOD, NOT LABOR, OWNS THE WORLD, THINKS Y. M. C. A.

Chamber of Commerce Says Amen

By STANLEY BOONE
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

DETROIT, Feb. 13.—The gospel according to the Y. M. C. A. and the board of commerce—in which God is banker and landlord to whom we humans must pay rent, with no mincing of words or dollars—is given in the Budget Book With a Conscience, which is the Bible in the annual thrift week campaign this year.

"Certain cardinal principles are required to guide the conscience in God's Ownership," the preface of the little pamphlet says. "God, having created the earth and all that it contains, naturally owns it. In recognition of His rights as owner, conscientious believers in His goodness usually give a definite proportion of their resources to help establish His kingdom on earth."

"Partners" With God.

"God has made every person a partner with Himself in administering His estate for the benefit of the whole human family," the preface continues. "God's obligation to provide has its corollary in man's privilege to work. The earth yields its treasures to all who work and each should account for the portion received. This involves a separation of income into distinct compartments of which there are three: Giving, Saving, and Spending."

The workers on God's railroads and in God's factories, if they would be prosperous, should hurry to the nearest preacher or missionary as soon as they get their pay envelope and give away a large part of their wages before they go home to the wife and children. The minimum, by the way, is 10 per cent. This curious budget book goes on, "Under the Christian dispensation . . . not only is the giving portion set apart in a peculiar sense, but all the rest, whether it be saved or spent, is likewise used as a sacred trust. In the same way the acquiring of the whole income, as the disposing of it, is accomplished under a conscious sense of partnerhip with God."

Boost Real Estate Sharks.

On the opposite page of this introductory gospel an equal space is given to boosting the game of the insurance company, the banking house, the bond broker, the real estate dealer, the building and loan association and the retail merchant all in the name of "Pay Your Bills Promptly," "Work and Earn," "Make a Budget."

This budget, which was sold here for 10 cents, is the handiwork of the United Stewardship Council of Churches in the U. S. and Canada and the National Thrift Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

On the back cover is the further disclosure that, "If you have personal or family problems you would like to talk over with someone of experience, speak about them to a Y. M. C. A. secretary. He may be able to arrange for an interview with lawyer, banker, real estate dealer, building and loan association, priest, rabbi, minister, as you desire."

Daily Worker Makes Big Hit With North Dakota Farmers

By JOSEPH MANLEY.
Secretary, Federated Farmer-Labor Party

AT the Bismarck, N. D., convention of the North Dakota Non-Partisan League the DAILY WORKER created little short of a sensation. The issue of Wednesday, Feb. 6, which featured a front page analysis of the North Dakota situation and appealed to the delegates, acted as a real stimulant to the few militants in the convention. The general comment was: "The paper that publishes that kind of stuff knows what it is talking about."

It was interesting and instructive to note the enthusiasm of the farmers for the account of the big New York Lenin meeting, carried in another issue that reached them. They were overjoyed to learn that such a tremendous demonstration of city workers could take place. It may be a surprise to many, to quote one six-footer: "I've had enough damn democracy, I was three years in the army fighting for it, now I am bankrupt, without a home, I've even lost my wife. I'm ready to fight, yes fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat."

A few more stunts like this on the part of the DAILY WORKER and it will be on the map in North Dakota. The farmers, particularly the bankrupts, are ready to accept in increasing numbers the Communist analysis of their condtions and the leadership that it entails.

School Teachers Get Interested In Our Fight on the Firetraps

School children and their parents and labor unions have all expressed interest in the campaign of the DAILY WORKER against the firetrap schools of Chicago. Now public school teachers are becoming interested.

Yesterday a public school teacher, who has been following the campaign of the DAILY WORKER against firetrap schools, came into the office of the DAILY WORKER to deliver in person a letter, which she did not wish to sign because it would endanger her job.

To The DAILY WORKER: I have been following with interest the investigation of the fire-trap schools in Chicago made by your enquiring reporter.

I have been teaching in the Chicago schools for 15 years and know that everything your reporter says about our dirty old school buildings is true.

But what are we going to do about it? It is true that $4,000,000 in increased taxation was voted at our late election, but that is only a drop in the bucket. Chicago grows by leaps and bounds. It grows so fast that 100 new school children must be taken care of, and two new teachers provided every day of the school year. That means 400 new rooms must be built every year at a cost of $8,000 per room. At the present building cost the $4,000,0000 is spent on this one item of new buildings for elementary schools. The schools cannot be completed for two years. The building program was stopped entirely during the war, so it is away behind now. In September this year, 75,000 children were without seats. These children are on half-time, that is, they are on the street half the time.

One might ask, "Is Chicago so poor that its school children must suffer this poverty and need?" The answer would be, "No! Chicago is wealthy." Illinois is a wealthy state. But those who own the wealth of our city, the great corporations, the public utilities, the Big Business interests have no interest in the schools and public welfare.

The Chicago Teacher' Federation has been working on the school problem for 20 years. They have figures to show that the Big Interests of Chicago escape fully nine-tenths of their legitimate taxation. This is done thru the Board of Review of Cook County, which can be seen almost any day, at its pleasant task of cutting approximately $1,000,000 per day from the taxes of the rich. The burden of taxation is borne by the little fellow, who cannot hide his home or real estate.

Please have your enquiring reporter call upon the board of review. I believe that Mayor Dever has been asked to do so, by enforcing the tax laws, but he is not in a position to act. It is reported on good authority that the campaign contributions of both the Democratic and Republican parties are deducted by the obliging board of review from assessed taxes. While the Mayor is personally honest, it would be difficult for him to change this happy custom.

BAKERSFIELD, Calif., Feb. 13.—The Bakersfield National Bank closed its doors as a capitalistic institution at noon Feb. 2, and opened again at 2 p. m. as a labor controlled bank.

The change was made by the purchase by workers of 700 shares of bank stock which represented over two-thirds of the total and thus gave the control of the bank into the hands of organized labor. The legal transfer was made on Jan. 26 and was furthered by the efforts of Dr. Walter F. McCaleb, organizer of several labor banks thruout the country. The bank will open Saturday afternoons and evenings to accommodate workers.

The change of control of the bank was celebrated by a reception in the bank Saturday afternoon and a banquet at night.

BROTHER CHARLIE FINDS OIL TRUST IS VERY WICKED

Wants (Oil) Government to Seize Oil

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 13.—Governor Charles W. Bryan of Nebraska, brother of William Jennings Bryan, and Governor W. H. McMaster of South Dakota, today joined forces in what they declared will be "a relentless war against a nation-wide oil combine that is gouging the public out of millions of dollars."

Both governors have appealed to the federal government for relief from "unconscionable and unjust oil and gasoline prices," the Nebraska governor demanding federal control and regulation of the oil industry.

In an exchange of telegrams today, the executives pledged the support of their respective states to "an uncompromising" oil price fight and assailed what they termed "a universal policy of highway robbery."

McMaster, in his message to Bryan, said in part:

"Never in the history of the country has the oil combine so flagrantly and defiantly set out upon a policy of highway robbery.

"The hour is not far distant when the people will demand that Standard Oil and her allied interests observe the rules of fair play or the American people will destroy Standard Oil and nationalize the industry."

Governor Bryan replied with:

"The oil combine has defied the government, state and national, and has outraged all decency in its audacious corrupting of public officials to do its bidding.

"The confidence of the public in their government is shaken. Investigations do not stop the robbery of the public and threats of prosecution have ceased to scare the oil combine.

"It continues to tie up the oil producing agencies in one gigantic combination and to continue its strangle hold on the consumers of gasoline.

"The government should act by taking over the oil industry and regulate the prices and protect the public."

Relief Conference Organized at New Haven After Meeting

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 13—Following a mass meeting at which William F. Kruse told of his experiences and impressions of Russia and Germany, and of the help extended to the hungry German masses by their Russian fellow workers, a German Relief Conference was organized under the auspices of the F. S. R. of New Haven. Eighteen delegates represented three local unions, five fraternal organizations and eight other labor groups.

An executive committee was elected with instructions to canvass all local organizations in the interest of an enlarged conference to be held in three weeks. Contribution lists are to be circulated and a meeting and social affair is to be arranged in the heart of a strong German settlement just west of the city. Plans were also projected for a tag day.

Lathers Compromise Demands.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 13.—Union lathers here have compromised their original demand for wages of $1.87½ an hour and settled for $1.50 an hour. The hourly scale affects only metal lathers. Wood lathers will receive $8.75 per thousand laths applied instead of the old rate of $8. Metal lathers formerly received $1.25 an hour.

Cotton Kings Build More Mills In South Where 60-Hour Week Rules; Would Kill 48-Hour Week In North

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press Industrial Editor).

Demand that women and children be sacrificed to the god of the profiteer underlies the present move of Massachusetts mill owners to secure the repeal of the 48-hour law in that state.

For months the big cotton mill interests of the north have been building duplicate plants in the south where wages are low and the 60-hour week for women and children is legal. They have given New England labor a long dose of unemployment and part time. Now they say this will continue to grow worse unless a reduction in working standards is accepted.

If present conditions continue, say the mill owners thru their chief counsel, W. F. Garcelon, wages must be reduced. They hold it unfair for one state to be saddled with a 48-hour week while competing states have anywhere from 54 to 60 hours. And then as a sop to the sentimental they add that they would have no objection to a national 48-hour law which would put all manufacturers on the same footing.

Latest reports show Massachusetts mills operating thruout December at only 69% of single shift capacity while mills in South Carolina were operating enough overtime to bring their average to 6% over single shift capacity. Southern states with 16,747,046 spindles reported over four million spindle hours while New England 18,862,001 spindles only reported two and three-quarters billions hours of activity during the month.

From all parts of Massachusetts come reports of increasing curtailment. Fall River reported decreased output for the first week in February. Mills at Saundersville and L'wood have reduced activity from 40 hours a week to 24 hours. Similar reductions are reported at Winchenden Springs and Glen Aldne. Meanwhile investment of New England capital in the south continues. Remarking on it the National Bank of Commerce said:

Bankers Tell Why.

"Recent purchases of southern mills by New England interests and more especially the actual transfer of complete mill equipment from the north to the south have emphasized the acceleration of a movement which has been under way since at least the beginning of the century. The tendency for cotton manufacturing to make larger gains in the cotton growing states than elsewhere in the United States is partially due to greater accessibility of the raw material but more important than this has been lower taxation and cheaper labor costs. Not only are the wage scales lower in the south but the working hours are longer. The change may in fact be identified as part of the world-wide movement of the cotton textile industry to seek locations where lower labor costs prevail."

The world-wide movement here referred to includes the investment of British and American capital in the growing textile industry of China and India where workers toil for 10 or 15 cents a day and where 16 hours a day is not uncommon.

Silent About Oil, Noisy About 'Reds'; Is Defense Society

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Following the issuance of blue, white, green, yellow, pink, and other motley books by the prolific governments of Europe, the American Defense Society is about to publish a little Red Book of its own. It will be called, picturesquely, "Reds in America." This 400-page volume, which you will scarcely have time to read, will tell what every good American fascist should know. It will consist of documents, published in part by the Boston Transcript and placed at the disposition of the Defense Society by the U. S. secret service. Many of the documents may be classified as light summer fiction, tho more colorfully imaginative.

Soviet Delegate Will Participate in Naval Parley

ROME, Feb. 13.—A sequel to the naval parley held in Washington will take place here next Thursday at which a representative of Soviet Russia will be present. The conference was not held in Switzerland owing to the boycott of that country by the Russian government in reprisal for the assassination of Vorovsky, Soviet envoy to Lausanne.

The plans are at present for a secret conference tho the Russians will fight for open sessions. Besides the big European powers, leading South American nations will be represented as well as the Scandinavian kingdoms, Jugoslavia, Greece and the Netherlands.

The United States will not be represented even by an observer.

CANADIAN APPLE GROWERS GOING INTO BANKRUPTCY

Bankers Stop Loans to Ruined Farmers

By SYDNEY WARREN,
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

KELOWNA, B. C., Feb. 13.—Like the raisin growers of California, the fruit growers of the Okanogan valley, British Columbia's famous apple growing region, are being driven to the wall despite their co-operative organizations.

Last year's fruit crop was one of the biggest in the history of the valley but the growers will receive on an average only 40 cents a box for their trouble in cultivating, picking and packing a box of apples. Deduct from this sum the actual cost of putting a box of apples on the market, which is 80 cents, and it does not take a reparations committee to determine the financial status of the Okanogan fruit grower.

Just because the grower only gets 40 cents a box for his apples does not mean that the consumer buys his fruit proportionately cheaper, for this year he is paying from $1.75 to $2.50 for a box of good apples.

Play English for Suckers.

The price of orchard land was inflated by real estate operators during the war years when fruit prices were mounting skywards. Rough land barely set out with trees was unloaded on discharged soldiers, middle class English immigrants seeking to maintain their economic position "in the colonies" and that class of small business men, thrifty mechanics and the gullible who visualize an apple orchard with a bungalow and a modest share of prosperity. These were all good prospects and many of them bought orchard land for from $1,000 an acre upward.

Now since the bottom has dropped from the fruit market they are ready to dispose of their holdings for as little as one-third of what they originally paid for them in order to escape complete ruin. One man in Okanogan valley, who two years ago sold a house and an orchard of ten bearing acres for $16,000 now offers ten acres of bearing fruit land for $5,000.

Bankers Stop Loans.

The policy of the banks is not to lend any money to fruit growers already indebted to them for previous advances on their crops. This year they are refusing to advance any money on last year's crop as they have been advised that freight bills for the most part will be all the returns that the growers will get for their fruit. Stores in the valley that have been compelled to extend credit to the growers are also facing a crisis as wholesale houses are pressing them for settlement of their invoices.

Early last year the Okanogan growers brought Aaron Sapiro, co-operative expert, to the valley and he proposed a reorganization of the whole fruit industry. His proposals were adopted and 83 per cent of the growers signed under the new co-operative scheme, but despite elaborate co-operatives, the employing of high-salaried experts to handle the fruit crop, the fruit growers find themselves in the present hopeless situation.

Landlords Piling up Ever Greater Profits As Suffering of City Workers Become More Acute

his investment. Mr. Stewart Browne, President of the United Real Estate Owners' Association, made this confession before the Housing Commission: "I don't care whether they (the landlords) are Jew or Gentile, or whether they are rich or poor, but they are all more or less out to make a large profit, potential profiteers. . ."

The landlords and the builders have limited their construction work in New York State and in every other section of the country principally to the setting up of apartments which will give them the greatest profits. The findings of the New York investigators have led them to the conclusion "that most of the new construction is available only for one-tenth of the population with incomes of $5,000 a year or more. Even with the large amount of construction now under way, the Commission finds that it has brought but little relief in the housing shortage effecting the masses of the population."

Judge Edward F. Boyle, of the New York Children's Court, told the Commission that in the last three years there was just one house built in New York which would provide housing at $10 a room.

What this means to the workers is obvious. The landlords are out to make the biggest profits possible and they will build only houses that will net them the greatest return on their investments. Nowadays it doesn't pay the landlord class to put up houses for which the workers can afford to pay. Thus the new construction has solved the housing problem only for the wealthy class which never had a housing problem. The working class, having the greatest need for homes, was left in the lurch.

Profiteering Rampant.

There is no way of arriving at an accurate estimate of the mass of profits piled up by the landlord class. Two things are certain, however, First of all, the landlords have been taking advantage of the housing shortage to charge the most exorbitant rentals for apartments that are unfit to live in. Second, the rate of profit has been increasing in direct proportion to the increase of rent paid by the working class and the distress in which the mass of people find themselves because of the acute critical housing conditions.

The law that was enacted in New York to aid the construction of more houses by making new residential buildings tax exempt, has not helped the working class at all. This law has been used by the landlords to increase their own profits. Mr. Arthur J. W. Hilly, Acting Corporation Counsel and formerly chairman of the Mayor's Rent Committee, pointed out before the Housing Commission that there was great profiteering in such tax exempt houses. Mr. Hilly emphasized the fact that this profiteering was especially hard on the "white-collar" group of clerks and on other workers whose wages have not kept pace with the increased cost of living.

Appearing before the State Commission, a builder, Mr. John T. Campbell, testified that landlords could charge only $10 a room and yet make big profits. He estimated that at this charge the average landlord would make a net profit of 8%.

Mr. Campbell impressed the Commission with the fact that he had just completed a $288,000 tenement at 162nd Second Street and Woodycrest Avenue, which could be rented at a maximum of $100 a room and yet net 8% profit. He declared that he does not control the property and the rent for the apartment in this house had already been fixed at $20 a room.

Mr. Matthewr, another builder, told Industrial Commissioner Shientag, that many of the individuals who bought low priced houses, immediately raised rents. He said that in these old type houses the courts allowed $6 a room. On the basis the owners were receiving 30% on the money invested or 14% gross return on the rental value. These properties have gone up 100% in market price When Mr. Shientag was asked whether these landlords were getting a generous return, Mr. Matthews was quick to reply: "landlords today get what they have the nerve to ask for."

Ingenious Tricks of Landlords.

The landlord class has been very ingenious in devising ways and means of increasing rents, evading the laws and evicting the tenants who refuse to pay high rentals. One of the means employed by the landlords is to have the old tenant move out and then charge the new tenant a higher rental. In this fashion great impetus has been lent to the increase of rent in New York. Investigators have reported thousands of such contrived evictions. The preliminary report of the Block Survey conducted in Manhattan and Brooklyn in November, 1923, by the Housing Commission, cites the following illuminating evidence on this vicious practice of the landlords: "From one of the blocks came several reports of what they termed 'plagueing.' The landlord had installed electricity after imposing a raise of from 8 to 17 dollars per apartment. The poorer tenants who were unable to pay this increase were subject to coercion—the gas fixtures were torn out but electrical appliances were not installed so that the tenants had to remain in the dark."

Another trick employed by the landlords to boost profits is to play upon the race prejudice that exists in New York against Negroes amongst some people. Mr. Joseph S. Flynn, a member of the West Harlem Tenants Association, summed up this phase of the profiteering game as follows: "When a landlord does not succeed in getting higher rents, the first thing he does is put in a colored agent. After he puts a colored agent in the tenants become panicky and frightened and think the house is going to be sold to a colored man and then if the landlord does not succeed in getting an increase in rent, very possibly the house will be sold to a colored man. They eventually get more money."

One of the state investigators told me of another clever trick resorted to by the landlords to boost rents. "Take the four story house where I live on West 71st Street. The house was sold at $26,000. It then passed thru probably ten hands. Most of these sales were fake. Finally it was sold by the present owner for $45,000. Four of the ten transfers were in the same realty office. The bookkeeper, stenographer, and office boy were each involved in these purchases and the use of their names as agents brought a net profit of from $5,000 to $8,000 to the landlords."

Whenever a tenant seeks repairs or improvement in his house, the landlord utilizes this request for raising the rental. On this point the preliminary report of the Housing Commission declared: "When improvements or repairs are made by the landlord there is always an increase in rent. The landlord wants a $14 increase in rent on a $26 apartment if he is to paint and paper, is the report from two houses. A white sink was put in and a new stove, and the rent was doubled. Installing electricity or renovating the apartment was the occasion for a rent raise of 200%. More frequently no improvements are made even after an increase."

Testifying before the State Commission, Mr. Pancrazio Genonese, a mechanic, thus described this condition: "One landlord sells to another and says I am a new landlord and you have to give me a raise for painting. But they don't even after they promise and then another landlord comes and says I am a new landlord and want to put in electric lights, and you have to pay for electric lights and they don't get electric lights ever, but we have to pay the $50."

Mrs. Coff of the Madison House cited the following rather painful illustration of the cruelty and greed of the landlords. She told how a landlord had said to a widow with four children in a three room apartment: "Now you can open the electric light or not. If you open it and use my improvement you will have to pay $3 a month more. If you do not open you will remain in the dark." This tenant was forced to live by candle light to save the $3 a month increase. The only condition under which the widow could pay for the improvement was to cut down on her food which was already reduced to a minimum.

The landlords even stoop to fooling many a tenant into the belief that they are planning to occupy these abominable homes themselves. They thus succeed in having the poor move out and are consequently enabled to increase the rents for the new tenant.

Miss Blackman of the United Hebrew Charities told of this practice to the Commission, when she said: "In several instances which I cannot recall specifically, the landlords have tried to force the removal of a tenant on the technical ground that he wished the apartment for his own use. In all these cases our worker was able to prove to the satisfaction of the court that the landlord was using unscrupulous means in getting rid of his tenants so that he might increase his rentals considerably."

Have Iron-Clad Leases.

The landlords have devised a lease known as the iron-clad contract by means of which they bind the tenant to the most oppressive conditions and have them at their mercy. This device is, of course, against every principle of the law of contracts, but the government to date has not taken any steps to stop the landlords from enforcing this arrangement.

Even so conservative a magazine and authoritative a spokesman for the Wall Street bankers as the Commercial and Financial Chronicle has been compelled to describe this iron-clad lease in denunciatory terms. We quote in part: "An ordinary reading almost fails to show that the landlord is bound to do anything, unless to collect rent, but the most marvelous stipulation is that he may make 'rules and regulations' which he may add or alter from time to time, and the tenant agrees in advance to accept and be bound by requirements made and subject to revision thus."

Profit System At Fault.

The intolerable conditions to which the working masses are subject in the housing crisis are not due to the fact that the landlords are bad as individuals, nor is this sad state of affairs to be accounted for by blaming the landlords for their being afflicted with rapacious greed.

The crisis arises from the fact that industry and exchange are today conducted on a profit basis. The houses are manufactured for sale as commodities and not for use. Commodities are distributed to net the maximum profit possible. An analysis of the rise in the rentals of the homes of the workers involves an analysis of numerous other manufacturing processes conducted on a capitalist basis.

Thus the prices of building materials, according to the latest figures of the Department of Commerce, have gone up 106% since 1914. Out of each dollar that the home-owner pays for his house, the workers receive $.25, according to the information of Dr. John M. Gries, chief of the Division of Housing of the Department of Commerce. The other $.75 is divided among the manufacturers of building materials, contractors, speculative builders and salesmen as profits and overhead.

How hard this capitalist method of housing has been on the working masses is brought home very forcefully in the conclusion of the New York State Housing Commission in this statement: "This report clearly shows that family incomes in this state have become steadily more disproportionate to rents and costs of houses. Even the large amount of construction which has taken place during the last ten years has affected only the well-to-do and will not for a long time help that three-quarters of the population of the state with less than $2,500 a year."

RUBBER CENTER OF FACTIONAL WAR IN AKRON

Street Cars or Jitneys Is Big Question

(Special to The Daily Worker)

AKRON, O., Feb. 13.—Rubber, the stuff auto tires are made of, has become the center of the most unique factional contest in the history of municipal government.

Rival merchants protested against Mayor D. C. Rybolt's attempt to carry the city's transportation on rubber tires, after the street cars had been ousted. A resolution from the Chamber of Commerce demanded that Rybolt give up and restore street car service at once.

Fight for Five-Cent Fare.

Mayor Rybolt has reaffirmed his determination to hold Akron transportation fares down to five cents.

Simultaneously he has revealed that rubber, which made Akron, is one of the principal factors in his vision of city-wide motorization.

"The Northern Ohio Traction Company's refusal to accept a five cent fare franchise gave Akron a wonderful opportunity to do what any self respecting city should do," Rybolt said. "It was our chance to boost a big home town industry—rubber."

For 25 years Akron rode street cars at five cents. February 1 the franchise expired. The street car company demanded a seven cent fare; Rybolt asked sixty days in which "to think it over."

Service Is Suspended.

The street car company refused to extend the franchise and Mayor Rybolt ordered car service suspended. The company now has five months in which to rip out its tracks. The mayor says he is "thru forever" with the street car company.

The Chamber of Commerce complaint said the inadequate bus system—138 busses carrying from 14 to 60 passengers, and more than 200 autos rushed here by Henry Ford at the request of Harvey Firestone—is keeping shoppers away from the business district and that the merchants are losing business.

"Bus Boss" Talks.

M. P. Tucker, city "bus boss," loaned to the cause by the water department, estimated that in three weeks everything will be running smoothly.

"The bus system has relieved rather than congested traffic down town," said Tucker. "Accidents are fewer because passengers are discharged at the curb instead of in the middle of the street."

R. A. I. C. Dividend Is Reminder of Visit to Clothing Factory

To The Daily Worker:—The announcement that the Russian-American Industrial Corporation has declared a dividend has reminded me of a visit last spring to one of the clothing factories in Moscow which have been helped by capital from the RAIC. As we were going thru our guide stopped us and pointed with pride to an electric machine which cut many layers of cloth at one time. The workers saw us watching its operation and crowded around eager and smiling, pointing to the machine and saying, "Amerikanski." There are two or three of these machines in this factory. Its production ranks among the highest of the clothing factories.

I remember, too, another factory which I visited in Moscow. This was a textile factory and one not receiving outside help. It was as clean and well run as the other, with its childrens' home, school, nursery and communal house. In the factory I noticed a number of idle machines and men working on others which had just broken down. The manager explained that many machines were out of use because of parts worn which they could not replace and that they were continually having trouble with even the machines that were running. He said that one of their chief reasons for their low production was lack of good machinery.

And then I remember distributions of old American clothing to the peasants way out in the provinces of Russia and how precious the most shoddy, worn and ill fitting garment was to them because they had hardly any clothing of their own. But how much more precious to them would be good clothing made according to Russian styles! As it is at present clothing is scarce and the 35 factories of the Clothing Syndicate can't make enough to meet the demand. But with more capital from America they will be able to expand and fill the orders.

All of which is by way of saying that I hope The Daily Worker will continue to invite its readers to buy and keep on buying stock in the Russian-American Industrial Corporation and help clothe these millions of Russian peasants and workers.—Hannah Pickering, New York City.

Dispatchers Win 8-Hour Day After Four-Year Struggle

"A four-year fight on the part of the American Train Dispatchers Association for an eight-hour day and a six-day week for all chief and assistant chief train wispatchers on the railroads of this country has been won, I believe, by a decision of the interstate commerce commission which has just reached me," said J. G. Luhrsen, president, American Train Dispatchers Association, whose national headquarters are in Chicago. "There are about 1,100 of the most skilled transportation workers in this class and a large part of them are still employed 12 hours a day and every day in the week," according to Luhrsen.

"Train dispatchers. This class shall include chief, assistant chief, trick, relief and extra dispatchers, excepting only such chief dispatchers as are actually in charge of dispatchers and telegraphers and in actual control over the movement of trains and related matters and have substantially the authority of a superintendent with respect to those and other activities. This exception shall apply to not more than one chief dispatcher on any division."

Many carriers have been insisting that all train dispatchers are officials and therefore not within the provisions of the labor sections of the transportation act of 1920, and these men could therefore be employed as many hours a day as the employers saw fit and every day in the week.

With the new definition Luhrsen anticipates that agreements will be reached with many carriers that have heretofore disputed the union's interpretation of the previous I. C. C. regulation.

Soviet Commercial Mission Leaving Russia for Canada

MOSCOW, Feb. 13.—A commercial mission has just left Russia for Canada. In addition to trying to facilitate trading between Russia and Canada the mission will attempt to restore relations between the scientists of the two countries.

The mission is headed by Mr. Yazikoff, formerly of the trade delegation of the Far Eastern Republic in Washington. He outlined his plans as follows:

"There are several ponts in which the commercial interests of Russia and Canada touch. For instance, last year it was found that it was cheaper to import grain from western Canada into the Russian Far East than to bring the grain by the long overland route from European Russia or western Siberia. Canadian business firms have also shown an interest in the products of the Russian peasant hand industry. The Canadian Pacific Railroad is a large shareholder in a Russian-Canadian transportation company. The Cunard line and the Russian state fleet also participate in this enterprise.

"One of the incidental purposes of our mission is to restore relations between Russian and Canadian natural scientists. The Academy of Science is sending a large number of its publications thru the mission, and is endeavoring to enter into communication with various Canadian scientific bodies.

"We are going to Canada under an extension of the Russo-British trade agreement, and we are strictly limited to Canadian affairs in our business activities. At the same time, our mission may be of service in spreading correct information about Russian economic conditions in all parts of America."

To the DAILY WORKER: The failure of the Chicago officials to stop the showing of the anti-Negro film, "The Birth of a Nation," ought to plainly shown to Negroes the hopelessness of expecting officials elected on the capitalist republican and democratic parties to enforce the laws enacted for the Negroes protection or benefit.

A law on the Illinois statute books prohibits the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," and yet it is shown. No doubt that the weak-kneed attempt of the police department to prevent the showing of this film was done so in order to fool and humbug the Negroes.

The capitalist class desire that this race prejudice producing picture be shown, because it is to their interests to have white workers prejudiced against and hating black workers. Capitalism in order to continue to exist must constantly create wars, race riots and animosities. They are the very life blood of the system, so why expect the capitalist tools, the courts and city governments to stop something which is of such vital importance to the capitalists to keep going.

Negro Communist agitators have in this instance a fine example to point out to the republican and democratic voting deluded Negro masses, in urging their joining the Workers (Communist) Party, because communists not only by words, but by deeds as well, prove that they are the only ones who believe in and fight for the same rights and liberties for black workers the same as they do for white workers.—GORDON W. OWENS, Chicago.

U. S. Bankers Put Golden Chains on South America

NEW YORK Feb. 13.—To the growing list of recent American investments in Asiatic and European fields must now be added another imperial venture—this time in South America. A syndicate of U. S. bankers has just floated a $20,000,000 loan to the Argentine government. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. are the backers of this latest venture. This transaction completes the financing essential to the payment of $55,000,000, due in Argentine notes on March 1 and previously advanced to the government at Buenos Aires by American financiers.

The significance of these moves is two-fold: While the destiny of this South American republic is being mortgaged to Wall Street, the extent of "America's vested rights" in Argentina is growing and the day when those rights may be asserted by force of arms approaching. Moreover, while the American press abounds in news of the "flight of capital" from Germany, nothing is mentioned of the immense export of American capital which would otherwise be employed to develop American industry and agriculture and would serve to stave off unemployment if invested at home.

Plan Unity of Koreans.

PEKING, Feb. 13.—The Korean movement for independance has received a big push from the action of the Japanese government in ordering Koreans in Japan shot, following the excitement of the earthquake period. A movement to unite the various Korean factions is on foot. They have decided to form a revolutionary army and it is reported that they will approach Chinese rebels for aid.

Every new DAILY WORKER reader means a new recruit in the ranks of militant labor.

BELIEVES IN DIRECT ACTION A LA MUSSOLINI

Employers' Association in Membership Drive

The activities of our enemies should be of interest to the readers to the DAILY WORKER. You find in the kept press outbursts of moral indignation over the alleged theories of violence and physical force held by the radical workers but not having access to the official publication that circulates among the sacred circles of capitalism you have no opportunity to learn what the boss class believe in and how little they really care for orderly procedure thru the machinery of the law.

The following excerpts from a letter sent out by Edward L. Ryerson, president of the Employers' Association of Chicago might lead one to believe as so far as terminology is concerned that it came from the headquarters of some organization on the index purgatorious of the American Defense Society. In calling the virtues of the Association to the attention of prospective members, it says:

"It is a direct action body.

"It protects the employer against the illegal and uneconomic practices of organized labor by furnishing him the machinery with which to fight.

"It provides free legal service to its members in injunction suits, etc.

"It places behind the employer the might of a vast central body of employers.

"It carries on a comprehensive and intelligent educational program against those forces that would destroy existing institutions.

"Its achievements in the direction of protecting the economic interests of the city are profoundly beneficial to all employers whether members or not.

"Its work must be continuously broadened and its membership widened."

The class conscious capitalists and employers believe in organizing to fight their enemy, the working class. They will use "direct action" against them and get away with it because they own the government, the courts and all the law-enforcing bodies. But let a labor union use a little "direct action" and you will find these hypocrites howling with rage and demanding summary punishment for the workers.

Train Dispatchers Increase Assets.

The American Train Dispatchers' Association has $2,209.46 more in its treasury as a result of 1923 operations than it had at the end of 1922, Secretary-Treasurer C. L. Darling reports. This gain was made despite the expenses of the biennial convention paid in 1923 and despite the efforts of many railroads abetted by the majority of the U. S. rail labor board to set up company unions in place of the bona fide organizations. The total assets are $176,042.89.

SOVIETS DEMAND ENGLAND SCRAP CZAR'S TREATIES

Will Present Bills for Invasion Damage

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 13.—All Russian-British treaties dating from the old regime that no longer apply to the new conditions created by the war and the revolution should be scrapped, declares the Soviet government in a reply to the British notification of recognition of the Moscow government. Russia further declares that she is ready to send representatives to London with full powers to arrange an agreement for settling outstanding claims and obligations of each party against the other.

England Covets Oil.

Russia takes issue with the British note acknowledging Russian rule only over those countries which recognize the authority of the Soviet Republic. The Soviet government claims that Russian territory is all of the former empire except what has been renounced by treaty. Britain does not recognize the Caucusus as part of the Soviet Republic, the reason being the rich oil wells in that section.

Russia intends to ask compensation for damages by the White Guard invasions financed by the British government and instead of "restoring" treaties which previously existed between Britain and the Czar's government they want them "replaced" which means drafting entirely new ones.

Ask England to Pay.

An organization known as the British Creditors' Association has been formed here to present claims at the forthcoming Anglo-Russian conference in behalf of British businessmen who claim to have sustained losses in Russia.

But the British are not going to have it entirely their own way in this respect. A similar organization is formed in Moscow to protect and represent the "victims of illegal foreign intervention on Russian soil." Ten noted economists head this organization. They have spent eighteen months collecting data on injuries sustained by persons and the destruction of property during the many civil wars and interventions.

The bill of damages which this society will present to the British government is expected to prove an effective counter balance to the fanciful claims of British capitalists who were mainly responsible for the great loss of life and property suffered by the Russian people since they overthrew the Czar's regime in 1917.

CAPITAL RULES CHURCHES, SAYS BISHOP BROWN

Charged with Heresy by Fellow Bishops

GALLION, Ohio, Feb. 13.—"The world, including the churches, is really under control of big business and there is little that can be done to break it.

"This big business control results in a subsidized religion and one who attempts to preach a doctrine opposing it is classed as a bolshevik and radical."

Such were the statements today of the Rt. Rev. William Montgomery Brown, bishop in the Episcopal church, who is to stand trial before the house of bishops on charges of heresy.

The bishop admits that he is a "Communist and a radical." He expounded his doctrines in a book, "Communism and Christianism," and heresy charges followed.

Had No Chance to Study.

"When I was actively engaged in the ministry, I didn't have much time to study anything only my pastoral duties," he said, "but after retiring I had opportunity to study every side of political and religious questions. It was then that I became converted to the cause of Communism and became a 'radical' in the church.

"I became disgusted with the part I took in the war and came to the conclusion that the gospel as I had been preaching it was wrong."

The statements from his book: "Banish the gods from the skies and capital from the earth," was mentioned specifically in the charges presented by the house of bishops.

Rev. Brown answered the presentation of charges with the request that owing to bad health, he would like the trial to be held at his home here. The answer was sent to Bishop Garrett of Dallas, Texas. The house of bishops has not yet acted upon his request.

Tut's Tomb Opened, Then Closed as Ghouls Quarrel

LUXOR, Egypt, Feb. 13.—Howard Carter, head of the expedition conducting explorations into the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, has closed the tomb and abandoned the work.

Carter's decision came after numerous conflicts with the Egyptian authorities, but his announcement left tourists, workers and others interested in the expedition thunderstruck with amazement.

"Owing to the impossible restrictions and discourtesies on the part of the Public Works Department," Carter's statement read, "all my collaborators have signed a protest and refuse to work any longer in the tomb."

The dispute with the government is understood to be due to Carter's attempt to maintain his new copyright agreement with the London Times, an agreement to which both the Egyptian press and the government strongly objected. This morning Carter took about 100 visitors into the tomb for a last look, including members of the press—then closed the tomb.

'Dotey' Teacher Wants Berenberg Canned for Views

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—At a recent meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs here, Aaron I. Dotey, a New York high school teacher who is making a strong bid for notoriety, engineered a motion from the floor that the state superintendent of education revoke the license possessed by David P. Berenberg, a Socialist school teacher. The basis of this attack on Berenberg was simply his association with the labor movement. The Women's Clubs' delegates passed the anti-Socialist resolution unanimously. Dotey's campaign against Berenberg is regarded as a wholly political issue and is being fought as such by the Socialist party.

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN

Singers of two different kinds filled the Auditorium theater last Sunday. In the afternoon Tito Schipa, popular Italian tenor of the Chicago opera, gave a recital. We heard him sing a number of songs in sentimental style. He made a manful attempt to sing English, and, falling entirely, devoted the rest of his program to foreign languages. Schipa possesses a perfect tone, probably the most perfect tone of any tenor before the public today, and he handles his voice masterfully. But he lacks, as at least half of the "stars" of the Chicago Civic Opera lack, sincerity and depth of interpretation. One felt that he never could forget the footlights and the grease paint and mummery of opera. He never forgot his frock coat and solidified hair, never projected himself into the spirit of what he was singing.

Feodor Chaliapin sang in the evening. Chaliapin is more than a great singer, he is a great actor. When he sings the "Song of the Boatman of the Volga" he is no longer a big singer on a concert platform, he is a laborer, pulling a towrope along the banks of the river. When he sings Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Prophet" he is the inspired leader of a new and beautiful creed. Compared to Feodor Chaliapin all other musicians and sweet singers fade away, and the memory of the great Russian alone remains.

Emil Telmanyi, a new Hungarian violinist, played at the Blackstone theater on the same day. We heard him play the Mendelssohn concerto, and one encore. He is a splendid performer, with more fire and vigor than many another popular violinist. Perhaps he is too inclined to technical brilliance, forgetting the more quiet and lyric side of his art, but, with the proper press-agenting he will take his place as one of the big talents of the time.

IRISH MARTYR'S WIDOW SEEKS WORKERS' AID

Irish Communists Aid Republicans

"If the Irish Labor Party and the labor movement of Ireland would line up with the Republicans it would be the greatest thing that has happened for the Republican cause in recent years," said Mrs. Tom Clarke, Irish Republican and widow of one of the signers of the Irish Declaration of Independence, who is in this country trying to get the aid of Irish-Americans for the Republic of Ireland. "James Connolly worked for a republic with the republicans. He thought that the greatest thing that could happen would be to free Ireland from England."

Irish Labor False to Ideals.

"Since Connolly was killed the leaders of the Irish labor movement who came into power urging a following of the policy of Connolly have belied their words by their acts. They have taken their places in the Irish Free State government and they will have nothing to do with the republicans. The Communists while maintaining their organization have worked with the republicans.

"If the Labor Party would line up with the republicans they could seriously hamper the Free State government. The rank and file of the trade unionists are behind the republicans in sentiment but are helplessly tied up by the officials of the Labor Party."

Mrs. Clarke said that the Republicans expect nothing from the present British Labor Party government because they hold power by grace of Liberal tolerance. "The British Labor Party if it grants anything to the republicans of Ireland will merely be carrying out the wishes of the Liberals who have taken a 'hard boiled' attitude and don't want to back down now."

Larkin Disappointment.

"Jim Larkin was a very real disappointment to the republicans. We were waiting anxiously for his return. One of the first things he did did was to call on the Irish republicans to give up their arms. By that he alienated the sympathies of all the republicans in the labor movement. Since returning to Ireland Jim's name has been associated with a series of failures. He tried to oust the present officials of one of the Irish unions and failed. No matter what he turned his hand to he failed and so he has lost his leadership.

"The foreign policy of the Republic of Ireland will always be to line up with the enemies of England."

Catholic Church Menace.

"The Catholic church in Ireland is pro-Free State. It controls the entire educational system of Ireland and has always lined up with the rulers of Ireland whether they were Free Staters or English. The control of education gives the church a powerful grip on the people. They have a terrific machine and they will try to crush any person who stands out for a republic.

"The greatest menace to Republican Ireland is the Catholic church and their control of education."

Mrs. Clarke will speak at a big mass meeting of Irish Republicans at Turner Hall, 820 N. Clark St., tonight at 8:00 o'clock. This will be Mrs. Clarke's last speech in Chicago before leaving to continue her tour of the country.

WHITEWASHER IS PROMOTED BY SCHOOL BOARD

While Kids Risk Lives In Fire Traps

John E. Byrnes, who whitewashed the firetrap public schools which the DAILY WORKER exposed, is rewarded for his deft use of the whitewash brush by appointment to the post of permanent business manager of the board of education. Until now he has been merely acting business manager.

Byrnes engineered the sham investigation of fire hazards in the schools and the investigating committee's report shows absolute unfitness for public office of everyone connected with it. The investigators looked at 30 schools tho there are admittedly 50 firetraps, according to the fire department, and they found that there was "no cause for alarm."

Kids Still Face Death.

Meanwhile children continue to run the risk of perishing in these firetraps with their wooden fire escapes and antiquated wooden stairways, and the school board does worse than nothing. It not only refuses to build new, fireproof schools, but it puts John E. Byrnes into a post where he can continue to imperil their lives.

The board also decided to reconsider the appointment of Edgar A. Martin as supervising architect of the board. At the last meeting of the board Martin was appointed to the position which was then created at a salary of $10,000 a year. Supporters of Martin said that they expected to save several millions a year by having the engineers' office and the bureau of repairs and the architects' office under the direction of one head.

Tribune Did It.

It is generally understood that the motion to reconsider the appointment of Martin was instigated by people on the board friendly to the Chicago Tribune which has been against him because he served as state architect under Governor Small.

The matter of Martin's appointment was referred to the building and grounds committee with instructions to investigate his record. The committee will report its findings to the next meeting of the board of education.

SEPARATISTS ARE LYNCHED BY FURIOUS MOBS

City Hall Becomes a Funeral Pyre

BERLIN, Feb. 13.—Bloody fighting has broken out between separatists and Germans loyal to the Reich in Pirmasens, Bavarian Palatinate, according to dispatches here today.

Twenty of Schwab's followers were burned to death in the city hall.

Dispatches received here up to noon said a total of 49 were known to be dead at that hour. The Separatists had lost 28 killed and the citizens 21.

Separatists Open Fire.

Trouble began late yesterday when citizens of Pirmasens, reinforced by the fire department, started a concerted attack upon the Separatists. Provided with plentiful supplies of ammunition, the Separatists rallied and fired heavy volleys, wounding many of the attackers, who were armed with rifles, picks, shovels and axes.

Firemen flung ladders against the city hall and climbed up in the face of the Separatist fire, fighting as they mounted. The attackers could make little progress against the almost impregnable position. Therefore they set fire to the entire building. As the dense smoke clouds settled smotheringly thru the building, many of the Separatists fled from the death trap but twenty, remaining inside, were burned to death.

Leader Dies in Flames.

While the Separatist funeral pyre that had been a city hall was still flaming the mob, now lost to bloodlust, launched a city-wide hunt for Separatists—rooting them out of beds and houses to meet sharp punishment or death wherever found.

Later reports from Pirmasens said Schwab, after being beaten almost to death by the mob "died in the flames."

Evidently the government commissar, who fell into the hands of the mob during the murderous orgy, was man-handled fearfully and then driven back into the furnace-like city hall, where his comrades had taken refuge and were roasting, there to die himself.

Pass Buck to Stupidity.

It was stupidity and not discourtesy that caused ambassador Otto Wiedfeldt, German ambassador in Washington to refuse to half-mast the embassy flag in honor of Woodrow Wilson, Frau Adele Schrieber, member of the Reichstag declared today. Frau Schriéber is here for a lecture.

THE THEATRE

By D'FERRIER

II.

Judged strictly as an entertainment, "Topsy and Eva", the Duncan Sisters' musical version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin", must be ranked higher than any other attraction now playing in a Chicago theatre. The story of the play, which of course is given minor consideration, is a simple little tale of the love of the angelic Eva St. Clare for the impish little colored girl, Topsy; and the fight of George Shelby to win back his mother's plantation, along with the three love plots, is the background, until the finalè. The author knew everyone would anticipate seeing Simon Legree, so he was put in the first act and then eliminated for the rest of the evening. There are no bloodhounds and Eliza does not cross any ice, the unpleasant portions of the old play being absent to make room for new incidents of more humorous intent.

Rosetta Duncan, as Topsy, proves to be an inexhaustible source of humor in both action and talk, and her sister, Vivian, as Eva St. Clare, is beautiful both to look at and to hear. She is an excellent foil for the deviltries of her playmate. When these two are on the stage, they set a pace hard for the others to follow and it is to the credit of the other members of the cast that there few let-downs in the performance. But when "the Duncs" sing! Songs as trivial as "Do-Re-Mi", or as meritorious as "Remembrin'"—it makes no difference. They are superb doing either. Few, if any, other toilers in musical shows have as vivid and charming personalities and as delightful accomplishments as the sisters from San Francisco.

"Topsy and Eva" has the best looking chorus seen in these parts in many months, and in Harriet Hoctor, has a danseuse premiere as graceful as the bird she imitates in one of her dances. Nana Bryant, playing the jolly Northern girl who "gets" her Southern man, George Shelby, has that rare combination: good looks and a most pleasing voice. The whole cast, for that matter, is unique in its members having better-than-average voices.

The show, which is presented at the Selwyn theatre, had a run on the coast longer than many musical attractions achieve in the more populous district of Manhattan, and is playing Chicago previous to its invasion of the east, where, in comparison to most eastern shows of its kind, it is good enough to last forever.

Huerta Tool of Exploiters.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13.—The San Francisco Waiters' union has received a wire from President Obregon of Mexco in answer to its telegram of sympathy and support in the de la Huerta counter-revolution. Obregon's message reads: "I am happy that the workers of San Francisco thoroly understand that Adolfo de la Huerta, betraying the confidence placed in him by the Mexican people, has become the tool of their age-old exploiters."

OBREGON CHASES REMNANTS OF THE COUNTER-REBELS

Spanish Fascist Writer May Lose Head

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 13.—The Mexican federals under the direction of General Obregon are scattering the demoralized forces of the counter-revolutionists by strong, swift strokes.

Yaqui Indians under the command of Col. Anselmo Armon have captured one of the strongholds of Hipolito Villa, a hacienda, the home of a Spaniard, which was well fortified and surrounded by natural defenses. The bandit forces of De La Huerta are in full retreat.

The Obregon forces have captured Manuel Aznar, one of the best known writers in Spain. He is secretary to De La Huerta. The Spanish embassy in Mexico has received instructions from Madrid to keep a close watch on Aznar's case, as it is feared the Mexican government may execute him. The Spanish government under the dictatorship of Rivera is supposed to have been in sympathy with the counter-revolutionists and this fact may not add to the logevity of the captured fictionist.

De La Huerta fled and is still going so far as Mexico City is aware of. The farther he keeps away from the industrial centers the better for him. Obregon has immensely strengthened his position with the workers and agrarians since the attempt on the part of the reactionaries to overthrow the republic.

Move to Uncover Treasury Grafters Made in Congress

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Congressional investigation of the alleged duplication of government bonds in the treasury and the bureau of engraving and printing was demanded in a resolution introduced in the house today by Representative King of Illinois.

King's resolution is aimed to probe the charges made by Charles B. Brewer, department of justice investigator, that he has uncovered over $1,000,000 worth of duplicated Liberty bonds.

JOHNSON HOPES FOR PARDON OF TEXAS NEGROES

Brings Glad News to All-Race Assembly

Hope for a pardon or commutation of the sentences of the Negro military prisoners at Leavenworth penitentiary was expressed by Mr. James Weldon Johnson, secretary of the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People, after the morning session of the Sanhedrin yesterday.

Mr. Johnson has just returned from Washington where he headed a delegation of 20 prominent Negroes who presented a petition of 200,000 names to President Coolidge, asking him to pardon the prisoners against whom such discrimination had been shown.

President Coolidge made no definite promise but said that he would free them if he could do so. Mr. Johnson is very hopeful of favorable action.

More and more organized protests against the continued jailing of these unfortunate soldiers will come as the Negro race organizes more and more efficiently. Their court martial was conducted with ruthless disregard of the evidence in their favor. Nineteen were summarily hanged and 54 given life sentences.

The so-called Houston "riot" followed violence by Texas policemen who fired at Negro soldiers and beat two of them, when they remonstrated at the maltreatment of a colored woman.

Fascisti Start Hot Campaign; Use Firearms

ROME, Feb. 13.—That the forthcoming election campaign will not lack color and thrills is indicated by the number of challenges to shoot it out that have already resulted tho the political fight is only in its infancy.

Francesco Giunta, general secretary of the Fascist party, had a battle with a socialist editor whom he accused of writing "injurious phrases" about him, and the editor of the Roma Tribuna and a corporation head exchanged rapier thrusts without, however, suffering any injury except the loss of a little blood.

Younger Generation Disgusted.

BERKELEY, Calif., Feb. 13.—"Think of the world we old fools created for our offspring, and you will realize that war, capitalism and strife are the predominating features. No wonder the younger generation is disgusted with the disorderly confusion in the world." Thus spoke Dr. Henry R. Hatfield, professor of accounting, University of California, on his return from a students' conference in Indianapolis. This decidedly un-goose-step-like statement has created something of a sensation in the university.

DAUGHERTY MUST HAVE HIS LITTLE JOKE ABOUT ABSENCE OF WAR FRAUDS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—No person involved in war frauds against the government has escaped criminal prosecution thru an agreement with the department of justice, Attorney General Daugherty asserted today in a reply to a Senate resolution demanding information on this point.

On the contrary, Daugherty said, "in each instance in negotiations for settlement of civil liabilities, the defendants were warned that no settlement of any possible criminal liability was involved or contemplated by such civil settlement."

Find Human Skull.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Feb. 13.—A human skull, encased in a decaying, half buried gunny sack, was discovered at Chula Vista, near here, today by Deputy Sheriff William Buck, in charge of the search for remains of George E. Schick, missing Bellaire, Ohio, capitalist.

NEW SCANDALS IN LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS

Three Million Acres of Land Stolen

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13.—Congressional investigation of forest land grants to the transcontinental railroads will be asked today in a joint letter from Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Secretary of Interior Work. The two officials will inform Congress that one railroad company has obtained 3,000,000 acres of forest land more than it is entitled to and will ask that issuance of further patents to such lands cease pending the congressional inquiry.

The Starvation Cure

Clad in a palm beach suit, in sunny Jacksonville, Florida, John L. Lewis yesterday told the committee of coal operators that there were too many mines and too many miners; that many mines must close and thousands of miners leave the industry before it could "get back to normal."

In other words, the work of the coal miners is so productive that thousands of them are no longer necessary.

Apply this Lewis solution to industry as a whole and it means that increased production on the part of the workers condemns some millions of them to death by starvation.

This is the carefully considered plan for relief of unemployment in the coal mining industry put forward by the leader lauded by the employers as "sane and constructive." Is it any wonder they approve of the acts and utterances of a labor official, who endorses their own method of ridding themselves of the surplus workers?

John L. Lewis has been instructed by convention after convention to work for the nationalization of the mines, the six-hour day and the five-day week.

The adoption of these proposals would put the unemployed miners to work and open up the idle mines, but it would cost the coal operators something and so John L. Lewis has sabotaged this program.

The four year agreement, advocated by Lewis, and which the operators will probably accept, is intended to result in a weeding-out of 150,000 to 200,000 miners. They will go to swell the ranks of the unemployed or compete with other workers in other industries.

The Workers Party members in the United Mine Workers are going to continue the fight for nationalization, the six-hour day and the five-day week. In this fight every intelligent and honest coal miner is with them and John L. Lewis and his payrollers will find that the approval of the operators for his proposal to drive one-third of the union men out of the industry will not help him a great deal.

Crime and Punishment

Addressing the National Republican Club, in the sumptuous palace room of the Waldorf Astoria in New York, "Silent Cal" burst into eloquence, bordering on tears, in an impassioned confession that he will do everything to punish those guilty in the Teapot holdup of the country's oil resources.

Every single step taken by Coolidge and his closest advisers as official and unofficial members of the Government gives the lie to this empty boast of the President.

Mr. Coolidge was a member of the Cabinet when the lease was put over to give away the invaluable reserves to Sinclair. He kept silent. Mr. Coolidge was chairman of the senate when LaFollette first introduced his resolution for an investigation of the whole affair. He kept silent. More than that. Mr. Coolidge had his close friend and adviser, that most cultured ignoramus of the senate, Lodge, of Massachusetts, call on LaFollette and implore him to withdraw the resolution.

When investigators were to be chosen to prosecute the guilty he picked such corporation tools as Gregory, Pomerene and Strawn to act as attorneys for the government. Gregory has already been thrown overboard because he had too much oil in his system, and the other two are being stripped to the skeleton and exposed as servants of the railway and oil interests.

After the senate voted to ask him to remove Denby, Mr. Coolidge calmly told the upper house to keep its heavy hands off the gentleman from Michigan, whose whole record bristles with manipulation after manipulation, to hand over the country's resources to the capitalists. Mr. Denby was one of the leading figures in the notorious Ballinger raid on the nation's wealth. In his plea to the New York bankers not to punish the innocent along with the guilty Mr. Coolidge referred to Denby, whom he intends to defend to the last ditch as innocent, altho he knows better than anyone else does that Mr. Denby is as much responsible as Fall for the crime perpetrated against the country.

We know Coolidge by his deeds as well as his words. We know that his secretary of the treasury has for some time been permitting the wealthy millionaire tax dodgers to plunder the national treasury of billions of dollars. We know that Mr. Coolidge, as the head of the government, has actively aided and abetted these highwaymen of finance and industry and has not sought to punish these guilty men, while poor workers have been jailed for daring to strike for the right to the barest existence.

Collecting the War Debts

The government is at last making a half-hearted effort to secure the payment of some of the gigantic war debts due this country from the imperialists of France and Italy.

We do not put any stock in this request of our Treasury Department. The imperialist governments of Europe owe this country more than $7,000,000,000. It was only after pressure was brought to bear on the Administration in the Senate that this empty gesture at collecting these billions paid by the working class of this country to enable the European imperialists to wage the world war was made.

This attempt at reminding the European capitalist governments of their debt to this country is very instructive to the workers. These governments have never made any effort to repay this debt. At the same time they have paid their debts to private American capitalists, squandered hundreds of millions of dollars on the maintenance of huge armies and navies and spent fabulous sums in suppressing the workers and farmers of their countries. Tho they did not pay this debt owed the United States our government has recognized them and accorded them every privilege that complete diplomatic recognition involves.

With Russia, however, the situation was totally different. All in all, Russia owes the United States about $250,000,000. A good deal of this debt was contracted by the Kerensky government and his imperialist agents to finance counter-revolutionary wars, campaigns of assassination and sabotage against the Russian masses. One of the supposed reasons for the Administration's failure to recognize Russia has been the fact that Russia has done precisely what other European countries have been doing—it has not paid the American government's claims.

Why the United States recognizes France when it refused to pay its debt and at the same time denies recognition to Soviet Russia when it seeks to negotiate about paying debts which it never even contracted, is no mystery to us. France is an imperialist government, serving the capitalist class. The United States is the same sort of a government. Soviet Russia is governed by the workers and farmers and has definitely decided to uproot capitalism. It is only in this difference of class control of the governments and industries of these countries that the difference in politics pursued by the United States towards the Soviet Republic and France lies.

The reminder of the State Department regarding the payment of debt just sent to France and Italy is only a reminder of the dishonest, hypocritical employing class policy pursued by the United States government towards Soviet Russia.

McAdoo's Innocence

Mr. McAdoo made a desperate attempt before the Senate committee to save his face and political future. The very case put in by Mr. McAdoo for himself is the best evidence that he is done for in so far as the working and farming masses in this country are concerned.

Mr. McAdoo innocently pretended to boast about his connections with Doheny before the oil exposure. Everyone will take this plea of McAdoo with a grain of salt. Mr. McAdoo has been long enough in politics and has been associated in big business to know a good deal of Doheny's relations with the government, even before Senator Walsh revealed them. The fact that McAdoo told the Senate Committee that Doheny's reputation was once enviable, condemns this white hope of the democratic party in the eyes of the masses. Doheny has for many years been instrumental in machinations to throw this country into war with Mexico in order to enable the oil capitalists and the other big American investors to pile up fabulous profits.

Mr. McAdoo's dealings with Doheny and his services to the Oil Barons, were a closed book to the great mass of voters to whom McAdoo has continually appealed for support. Not until he was caught red handed serving Doheny in these imperialistic ventures and not until his political career was endangered did Mr. McAdoo even hint of receiving any money from Doheny for miscellaneous services rendered.

The protestations of McAdoo and his desperate empty boasts regarding Doheny's erstwhile record are the best proof of the dollar and cents service engaged in by the capitalist politicians of all stripes. McAdoo's innocence never was. His political career and the last vestige of his pretense at such political purity have been buried by his own testimony to the Senate Committee.

Cash Value of the Uplift

The recent sale of all his rights and titles by William Joseph Simmons, emperor of the Ku Klux Klan, for $145,000, leads one to believe that the only reason stock in the organization has not been sold on the curb is because it is a closed corporation.

The enterprising Simmons was drawing a salary of $1,000 per month, so there must be a lot of money in the uplift as practiced by the kluxers. News dispatches also indicate that all of the morons are not yet enrolled in the klan, as previous to the sale of his right to levy tribute Simmons had gone to Jacksonville, Fla., and organized the "Knights of the Flaming Sword."

If the knight-gowns of these two organizations will only begin a war of extermination against each other now the average intelligence of the populace will be increased greatly.

COUNT MASONI LEAVES ROME ON TRIP TO MOSCOW

Soviets Call Recognition Great Victory

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, Feb. 13.—The Russian Soviet government has notified Italy that Count Gaetano Masoni, newly appointed Italian ambassador to Moscow, is persona grata to the Soviet government.

The Count departs for Moscow tonight. The Russian Soviet government announced that it ratified with solemn ceremony the recent Italo-Russian treaty of commerce.

Great Diplomatic Victory.

Soviet chiefs look on the consummation of the negotiations with Italy as the greatest diplomatic victory so far achieved by the Workers' Republic.

Italy and Britain are now debating which was the first to recognize Moscow, Mussolini claiming that his speech in the Italian parliament last month was tantamount to recognition. Diplomats, however, say that the honors and perhaps more material advantages are on the side of the British government.

• • •

Recognition Creates Talk.

The importance of the latest development in the rise of the Soviet government to power and influence is the subject of comment in all the capitals of Europe. Ex-Senator France, of Maryland, in a statement issued in Moscow when news of the signing of the treaty reached that city declared:

"The turning point in Russian-American relations has now arrived. Recognition by England and Italy will vitally affect American interests, transforming the entire European situation.

"Already Britain is reaping advantages here at the expense of the United States. Since recognition was granted Russian eyes turn to England, America retiring to the background.

Urges U. S. to Act Now.

"Shrewd British merchants regard with quiet amusement and inner satisfaction the Russian policy of our State Department. Practical, conservative business men are unable to comprehend Secretary Hughes' irreconcilable policy when Fascist Mussolini has recognized the Soviet.

"This is a moment when American statesmen must change their opinions regarding Russia, protect American interests and act according to American traditions. The least we can do, and it must be done at once, is to express a readiness to discuss the question of Russian-American relations.

Fear British Policy.

"Such discussion is inevitable sooner or later, but the present is the psychological moment as the Russians still display the highest appreciation of America. If we maintain our impractical attitude Britain will quickly secure a commanding position as a middleman, handling all financitl and commercial transactions between the United States and Russia."

The Italian-Russian pact provides a most-favored clause for Russian imports into Russia and among other reciprocal benefits the surrender by Italy of property in Italy belonging to the former Russian Empire.

A treaty between the Vatican and Moscow is now expected within a very short time. The pope has expressed himself as pleased with the treaty and a resumption of the conversations between Vatican agents and Soviet representatives at Genoa are looked for in the near future.

• • • •

Austria Next to Act.

VIENNA, Feb. 13.—A speech announcing de jure recognition of the Russian Soviet government will be delivered tomorrow in the Austrian parliament by the foreign minister.

The recognition of the Soviet Republic by Austria is expected to be accomplished before the Roumanian-Russian conference which is scheduled to meet in Vienna early in March under the auspices of the Austrian chancellor.

Rockefeller Gold and American Guns Are Paving Way For Great New York-Buenos Aires Railroad

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE.
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent).

A grandiose scheme for Yankee imperialist hegemony over the two Americas paralleled only by the Berlin to Bagdad railroal dream, will be within sight of completion on Jan. 1, 1925, when the Buenos Aires to La Paz (Bolivia) railroad is opened to operation.

This will signify the completion of more than three-fifths of the New York to Beunos Aires pan-American railroad which will tie up Wall Street with the whole vast hinterland which the National City bank (Rockefeller) is opening to "civilization," investment, the U. S. marines, naval experts and several hundred per cent Americanism in the form of incredible profits.

War Gave Bankers Power.

It was not so long ago that this new dream of empire richer than the vision of "Cairo to the Cape," and without the opposition which blocked the dream of "Berlin to Bagdad" was a mere paper scheme of the U. S. controlled Pan-American Federation. But with the gaining of exclusive domination over two continents as a result of the world war, American bankers set to work in earnest to build from both ends toward the middle the Beunos Aires to New York master work.

The section from New York to Guatemala has already been completed. Jan. 1, 1925, will see the completion of the Buenos Aires to La Paz section. That means the termination of 6,696 miles of the 10,116-miles total of this magnificent "Roman" road of an empire destined to put old Rome into the shade.

Plans are already being laid for the remaining difficult section of 3,420 miles of Central America and the north of South America. One of the two plans now being considered by engineers and financial exports is thru Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Peru and thus into Bolivia. The difficulties are high mountains.

Under American Guns.

There are no political obstacles, for every one of the countries in question is under American domination. Guatemala and Honduras have the U. S. battleship Rochester "protecting" them. The U. S. government by a series of ultimatums, cajoleries, bribes, and persuasions of the marines, is determined whom Honduras shall elect as president to succeed Rafael Lopez Gutierrez, whose term expired Feb. 1. Gutierrez has assumed a temporary dictatorship with the support of Secretary of State Hughes until the most useful of the three dead-locked candidates can be chosen by the Honduras congress aided by representatives of the U. S. state department and the commander of the battleship Rochester.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica, have known the blessings of the marines. Panama was created by Roosevelt because Colombia wanted too big a price for the canal zone, and was actually recognized thru a miscarriage of plans or a mixing of signals, ten days before the imaginary revolution of Yankee dollars broke out there. Colombia was mollified by a handsome gift of the Wilson administration by way of compensation for the Panama affair. Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia are run in part by the National City bank and for the rest give off the international smell of Standard Oil.

Brazil In U. S. Toils.

The alternative line being debated would be more central, running thru Brazil to Bolivia in place of running thru Ecuador and Peru. Politically it presents no more difficulties than the preceding plan, for Brazil also yields international dividends to the National City bank and the aforesaid international smell. Brazil's navy is being run by a U. S. naval commission.

To the ignorant the Central American portion of the Buenos Aires to New York line would look like a losing proposition financially because the traffic is light. But these "favorable" presidents that the United States is helping to maintain in power will grant valuable mineral, oil, land and other concessions and direct subsidies to the railroad-building, investing bankers. Some of these countries are planning to build the lines themselves, directly thru the National City bank and its interlocking construction companies.

It is hard to decide which is the more alluring of the two plans.

The completion of the vast nerve center of the two continents will be supplemented by the net-work of railroads that connect Buenos Aires with other South American countries not mentioned above and that connect New York with the western United States and Canada. The railroad will serve for the easy sending of U. S. troops and manufactured products to South and Central America, of minerals and petroleum from Latin America to the United States. This is the plan of the American empire builders.

Amalgamated Issues Calendar for 1924; It Is the Best Yet

The new Amalgamated Clothing Workers Calendar for 1924 has just been issued. This year the calendar is devoted to illustrated sketches of American Industrial history.

It tries to present general study of the realities of American life and the place of the Amalgamated in that life. On each page there is a short story telling the history of the Amalgamated in the making.

The calendar is well illustrated and a sucessful attempt has been made to choose illustrations that tell their story with as little text as possible.

This calendar the idea of which has been taken from the Italian radical movement is a novel and effective departure in American labor education.

The calendar is given to active members of the Amalgamated. It is by far the best calendar that has ever been issued by any American labor union.

Proud of The Daily Worker; He Offers Some Suggestions

To The Daily Worker:—The Daily is a paper for us to be proud of. I have interrogated scores of comrades and sympathizers, and they all have nothing but praise and commendation. And what is encouraging, is that it is improving all the time.

I like especially the way in which it keeps up to the latest items of interest. Theoretical, and purely party items tend to discourage the interest of the "casual reader". It may even pay, do you not think, to have more local news, even of a non-political nature. Say a page, or a half-page for an exclusive Chicago news section. After all our support has its roots in Chicago, and our main field of circulation is in Chicago. And so it may be tactical to devote special space to this section.

Also a special column should be instituted, same to be dedicated to serving "Anti-toxin for capitalist lies"—particularly the Tribune. These refutations should at least have the prominence and the positiveness of their false antecedents in the capitalist sheets. This should by all means be a Daily feature.—A Chicago Comrade.

The lid of Tutankhamen's tomb was opened at a very appropriate moment. Just as the old Egyptian awoke from his long slumber the Conference for Progressive Political Action was shedding every legitimate reason for existence at St. Louis. A move to replace King Tut—who is a live wire compared to some of our labor politicians—with the corpse of the C. P. P. A. would, we believe, meet with general approval.

The "gallant hero" who attempted to kidnap Grover Cleveland Bergdoll in Germany has returned to America, accompanied by a European representative of that prince of yellow journalism, William Randolph Hearst. Bergdoll, the millionaire draft dodger, angered the American war lords because he set a very bad example to the Germans of this country who comprise quite a large part of our population. It is a well known fact that Hearst was opposed to the war but sensation monger that he is, once the United States went over to the allies he howled with the pack. When this thug, Griffis, attempted the kidnaping of Bergdoll and failed miserably, Hearst saw an opportunity to increase the circulation of his papers by undertaking to secure his release. While the Chicago Tribune's efforts consisted of calling on the public to raise funds to bribe the German government and thus open the prison doors for Griffis, Hearst cabled his Berlin correspondent to put up the "necessary" to free the American legionnaire. Griffis violated the laws of Germany and is honored by the upholders of law and order in America!

The capitalist press of Chicago is not near so excited over the depradations committed by the Ku Klux Klan in Herrin as it was over the riot which took place there, when in 1922 a few degenerates employed as scabs came to an untimely end. At that time the Illinois Chamber of Commerce raised a fund to bring the union miners of Williamson county to the gallows if possible. They failed because of the determined solidarity of the miners. This time, lives have been lost, property has been destroyed, and women have been abused by the Ku Klux Klan backed by the United States government, yet our capitalist papers have barely uttered a peep in opposition. There is a reason. The type represented by the Ku Klux Klan is good material for the Fascisti that will some day—perhaps not far distant—be fostered by the capitalist class of America to smash every form of protection built up for itself by labor and establish the naked dictatorship of the employing class.

Stanley Baldwin was re-elected head of the British Tory Party. The Tories are either bankrupt in leadership or else the recent appeal to the country resulting in their party's defeat was merely a trick to throw the responsibility of getting Britain out of the tight fix in which she was placed on the shoulders of the labor party or getting the Labor Party in a mess. It is rather surprising that Stanley Baldwin would be re-elected as head of his party after committing what was generally considered a party blunder, if the tories took the defeat so seriously.

There is almost as much rejoicing in Moscow over the Soviet recognition by Italy as there was when England granted recognition, according to Moscow dispatches. It appears that the French ambassador at Rome strenuously opposed Italian recognition and used all the diplomatic tricks in his bag to block it. France now is the only strong power in Europe that has not recognized the Soviet government. The treaty with Italy places Russia in a strong position in Europe and makes France feel quite lonely.

WASHINGTON IS IN THROES OF OIL PANIC

Bread Should Sell At Five Cents Per Loaf

U. S. FLOUR IN BRITISH 4-CT. BREAD

Charge Millers and Bakers Making Huge Profits

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—A colossal "Bread Trust" is robbing American homes of $1,000,000 a day, Basil Manly, well known economist and statistician, declared, in a demand for a congressional action against the "combine."

Bread should be selling at five cents for a pound loaf, instead of for nine cents, Manly said, basing his statement on the present price of wheat.

Manly's report was based on an investigation made at the request of congressmen who desired to know why bread prices remained virtually at the war level while wheat went back below prewar prices.

Bread made from American flour is today being sold in England at four cents a pound, Manly reported. He charged that millers, bakers and retailers are making enormous profits on flour and bread.

Manly cited the General Baking Company, which he declared in 1922 made 117 per cent on each share of stock, before the declaration of two stock dividends of 100 and 300 per cent in the same year. Profits for 1923 were even greater, he asserted.

Bread Trust Profits

As result of these alleged profits and stock dividends, one dollar invested in General Baking company stocks in 1916 is now worth $309, Manly said.

Bread prices in American cities were declared by Manly to be "arbitrary and artificial," and violating all economic laws. Bread costs two cents less a pound in New Orleans and Houston, far away from the wheat and flour milling states, than in Chicago, Omaha, Butte and St. Paul, all in the heart of the wheat belt, he said.

Wheat Belt Cities Suffer

Boston, Bridgeport, New Haven and other New England cities pay less for bread than any city in the grain belt, except Kansas City, Manly reported.

These "artificial and excessive prices" are fixed and maintained by retailers supported by the large wholesale bakers either voluntarily or under threat of boycott, the report charged.

Duluth Labor in Demand for Probe of Crosby Disaster

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DULUTH, Feb. 14.—A resolution petitioning Gov. J. A. O. Preus to appoint a commission of five citizens to investigate the Milford mine disaster Tuesday at Crosby, was adopted at a meeting of the Federated Trades assembly of Duluth. The petition requests that one member of the commission be a mining engineer and another a representative of organized labor.

The Duluth group will seek the cooperation of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor and trade and labor unions thruout the state, in securing the appointment of the commission.

Labor, Lynching, Disfranchisement, Segregation, Are Issues Testing the Sanhedrin at Final Session Today

Whether the hopes that Negro labor has had in the great All-Race Assembly or Sanhedrin are justified or not depends on what decisions are made for a united front plan of action against oppression at the closing sessions today, in the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A., Wabash avenue and 38th street, Chicago.

The Negro workers, who supported the original call for the Sanhedrin, had reason to expect that the result of the conference would be an aggressive and united campaign for equality in the labor unions and disfranchisement, segregation, peonage, inadequate public schools and lynching.

At the opening of the conference the leaders—altho these leaders are not workingmen—professed themselves in sympathy with a labor program. Today comes the test, for the decisions of the conference are made today.

Labor Issue Side-Tracked.

Until the present the regular sessions of the Sanhedrin have been taken up with speeches delivered by speakers selected by the chairman. And, unfortunately, labor, which Chairman Kelly Miller declared at the outset, was the most important issue before the Sanhedrin, has not had a full half-day alloted to it, as have other less important subjects.

While the speeches were going on the important work of the Sanhedrin was being done in committees, or commissions, by commission members appointed by the chairman, altho the chairman later allowed certain additions to be made on request. These commissions for Labor, Agitation, Education, and other subjects have been working out programs which will be presented today to a super committee, or commission "For Permanent Results," which will sift out what it wants to present to the Sanhedrin for its approval.

There is a serious danger that the Sanhedrin will adjourn today without having adopted any definite program of action around which the oppressed members of the race can rally. This danger comes from the fact that such a large proportion of the appointed committeemen represent interests that conflict with the interests of labor. If a do-nothing policy is adopted it will be on the Does General Foreman Want Big Business Dictatorship?

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 14.—What is looked upon as an appeal for a dictatorship of business men with Fascisti tendencies over Herrin was sent to Illinois senators and congressmen by Dr. J. T. Black, superintendent of the Herrin hospital, which was shot up by a mob of Kluxers a few days ago.

While the responsibility of the Klan for the hospital shooting is not questioned, Dr. Black, in appealing for open hangings openly arrived at, as a cure for the violence that now disturbs the peace of Williamson County, harks back to the killing of the imported strikebreakers, in 1922, and regrets that those who were indicted for that affair were not executed. "Let us hang someone for murder here and we will have law and order," said Dr. Black.

A conference of "influential citizens" met at two o'clock this morning and listened to Major General Milton J. Foreman tell them that they must "establish a stable government here while the troops are on the spot," else it cannot be accomplished when the soldiers are withdrawn.

But the citizens of Williamson County elected their officials in the last elections. What does General Foreman want? We thought the ballot was more sacred in the eyes of 100 per cent Americans than the bullet. Is a dictatorship of Big Business the General's solution of the Herrin muddle?

Klan's Imperial Wizard Mouths More "Pay-triotism" Against Aliens

(Special to The Daily Worker)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 14—An "embargo" on every alien not in harmony with the national ideals of the United States was urged by Dr. H. W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, in a speech to a gathering of klansmen in Cadle Tabernacle here last night.

"Let immigration of every undesirable type be completely stopped," he said, "until our illiteracy and internal strife can be superseded by unselfish patriotism."

PROBE TRAILS $1,000,000 SLUSH FUND

Proved Daugherty O. K'ed Fall Leases

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Washington is rumor mad and politicians are literally hysterical with fright.

Every man in public life, who ever bought a share of oil stock is afraid his name will be dragged into the Teapot Dome scandal.

Men who had more damaging connections with the leading figures in the case are waiting in a sort of numb terror for the blow to fall on them.

Frank Vanderlip, former head of the National City Bank, a Standard Oil institution, has given the capital its greatest thrill.

Administration officials today are like men walking thru no man's land under heavy enemy fire. No one knows when he is going to be hit and the possibilities are that the entire force may be wiped out.

In addition to the Vanderlip bombshell more high explosive in the shape of information that men still higher up in the nation's government are involved by evidence to be laid before the senate committee has official Washington in a state of extreme tension. Nerves are unstrung, eyes are red and tempers are raw.

Reports of a $1,000,000 "slush fund," raised by oil interests provided the senate oil scandal investigation with another startling "lead" today, as they prepared to run down gossip which has dragged the name of the late President Harding into the affair.

Frank A. Vanderlip faced stern examination by the committee this morning on his statement that sale of the Marion Star by the late President Harding should be investigated. The committee will call on Vanderlip to tell whether this statement was based on information indicating some connection between sale of the Star and the oil leasing scandal, or merely upon rumor and gossip.

Vanderlip in a speech at Ossining, N. Y., not only drew Mr. Harding's name into the inquiry, but assailed Attorney General Daugherty, Senator Reed of Missouri, and others, and said there should be a wholesale house cleaning in Washington.

While Vanderlip was scheduled to be the day's "star" in the scandal inquiry, other developments were impending that threatened to carry the investigation into new fields and to smirch other names in addition to the long list of those already involved.

Used to Bribe Officials.

The $1,000,000 "slush fund," according to gossip about the committee room, was provided by oil men interested in the leases, for the use of government officials. A man close to the Harding administration, tho not officially connected with it, was reported to the committee to have drawn more than $200,000 from the fund at one time.

OIL SCANDAL IN ITALY

ROME, Feb. 14—The Rome press scents a "teapot" in Italy's oil leases and is demanding that the Mussolini government publish the full text of the convention by which Harry F. Sinclair obtained a monopoly in the survey and exploitation of Italian oil resources.

Thus far, the agreement with the Sinclair company has been kept secret.

DAILY WORKER ALONE SEES BIG STORY IN THE ALL-RACE CONGRESS

If you depended for your news on the capitalist dailies of Chicago you would not know that the most important congress in the history of an important American Race was being held in Chicago this week.

Yet the great Negro All-Race Assembly, or Sanhedrin, is news—BIG NEWS. No newspaperman can see the representatives of 61 national organizations coming together for the first time for the purpose of uniting twelve million people without knowing that a vital news happening is at hand.

All this is true but the capitalist dailies are maintaining a conspiracy of silence against this splendid effort of the Negro Race broken only by the most meager mention. Only the DAILY WORKER is reporting this convention,—giving two colums a day to the news.

The capitalist press maintains a conspiracy of silence against all constructive efforts of the Negro Race, which their big advertisers want to see kept as a disunited voteless lot of men whom they can exploit the more effectively on the industrial field.

How different are these same vicious papers when a Negro is unfortunate enough to get into the toils of the law—whether innocent or guilty. Then the pages flare with lurid headlines. It is a standing rule in capitalist dailies to give no space to a Negro story unless it is a crime story. It is an unwritten rule but one that is followed rigidly. The exception of the old New York Evening Post, before Oswald Garrison Villard sold it, was an exception that merely proved the rule.

On the other hand the publications of the advance guard of the working class rejoice at every effort of their colored comrades to unite against the oppressor—even tho this unity is not on as proletarian a basis as they would wish. And so for the DAILY WORKER the All-Race Congress is a big story.

Georgia Bank Closes.

ALBANY, Ga., Feb. 14.—The Citizens First National Bank, which for many years has been considered one of the city's strongest financial institutions, closed its doors today. The bank was capitalized at $200,000, had deposits of $500,000, and a surplus of $40,000. Officers of the bank said the closing was caused by overextension of credit and a shrinkage in deposits.

GLENN YOUNG KLAN LEADER IS INDICTE

Gun-toter Is Disarme Charged With Theft

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 14.—S Glenn Young, the gun-toting leader of the Ku Klux Klan, who has terrorized Williamson County for weeks, is now under indictment, charged with malicious injury to property.

Young cut quite a figure here until the arrival of the militia from Chicago, when he was stripped of his artillery and told bluntly to "take off his guns and keep them off."

The situation in Herrin, is calm o the surface but there is a volcan of hate slumbering underneath.

The coroner's jury investigating the death of Constable Cagle returned a verdict implicating thre men, but made no recommendation that they be arrested. All those arrested in connection with the death of the Klansman Cagle have been released including; Sheriff Georg Galligan, C. E. Anderson, mayor of Herrin, Ora Thomas and Hugh Willis, mine union official.

Try to Rouse Prejudice.

Rumors of men being seen tearing the American flag, are spread by Klansmen in an effort to arouse the passions of the people here. The "culprits" of course are anti-Klan.

On information supplied by Klansman Young the United States government had a party of injunction experts working secretly in Chicago for a week, preparing a campaign against the anti-Klan element in Herrin. That Young wields tremendou influence in the Washington government is now generally admitted th he has not yet explained his exac status. The presence of criminal in high government posts in Washington, as revealed in the Veterans' Bureau exposure tends to arouse suspicion that Young may be an underworld character who has appealed to the narrow puritanical New England conscience of Calvin Coolidge and thus secured unlimited powers to go on a booze hunting expedition ostensibly, but what is now clearly

The Great Political Crisis

By JOHN PEPPER

WE are passing thru one of the deepest and most important political crises of the United States. The politicians and the press of the capitalists themselves are forced to admit it. Indeed, not only do they admit the crisis, but they proclaim it, they cry it out, wailing and in despair. And to prove that this crisis is actually present, and does not exist only in our Communist wishes, we here give a few of the most important remarks of the politicians and newspapers of both big parties:

"The people of this country are profoundly shocked. Popular confidence in public men is badly shaken. All of us, irrespective of party, seem to the people more or less bespattered. Something like an explosion has occurred perilously near the foundations of the Republic."

—Senator Pepper, Republican, in the Senate, Feb. 7.

* * * *

"The gravity of the situation can hardly be exaggerated. If the confidence of the people in our Government is to be maintained—nay, if it is to be deserved—all officers who have betrayed their trusts must be brought to the bar of the courts."

—Senator Reed, Democrat, in the Senate, Feb. 7.

* * * *

"No situation more humiliating, more demoralizing, and to some extent, more discouraging, has ever been heretofore for our consideration or the consideration of those who have gone before."

—Senator Borah, Republican, in the Senate, Feb. 8.

* * * *

"The structure of our government rocks upon its very foundations. The only way to restore to the government the confidence of the people—confidence so essential to its perpetuity—is to follow every guilty man with the utmost rigor of the law and to drive from public office every man who by connivance or supineness allowed this crime to be committed."

—Senator Walsh, Democrat, in the Senate, Feb. 8.

* * * *

"What is going on in Washington is much more significant and may become much more ominous, than anything which happens in a meeting of Communists at Madison Square Garden. If it shall appear that the taint of corruption has deeply penetrated both political parties, a great impetus will be given to discontent. Should Congress fail to show itself absolutely

ELEPHANT AND JACKASS PARTIES HUSHED FRAUD

Brewer Exposure Not News in N. D.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ABERDEEN, S. D., Feb. 14.—The exposure of the bold duplications made by Brewer at Washington s not new in this part of the United States. Four years ago the coming ummer an exposure of this matter was made in the Square Deal, a Non-Partisan League and Labor daily paper, published in this city.

Judge Speaks: Is Canned.

The authority for the facts was given by Judge McCarter, auditor of the treasurer department at Washington, during the Wilson administration. McCarter, according to his own statement, had made a noise about the fraud in Washington, for which he was let out of office. He claimed to have taken the matter to Royal C. Johnson, republican member of congress from the second South Dakota district. Johnson refused to move. He went to Sterling, publican senator and Johnson, democratic senator. He went from place placee trying to get assistance to ing the bond swindlers to account, t he could get no help from either publican or democrats.

Honesty Labelled Insanity.

The matter was passed off in this tate by those "in the know" with the tatement that McCarter was "nutty." The acts as given by him were printed in the Square Deal paper, and also in the South Dakota Leader, official weekly of the Non-Partisan League. None of the republican or democratic politicians whimpered, and the press of the State was as silent as the tomb.

The fact that Mellon and his friends are trying to hush the matter up, indicates what was then supposed: that the duplicate bonds, in billions of dollars, were in the hands of the big financiers of the country to such an extent that both political parties were unwilling to expose the criminals and cancel the bonds.

DAWES EXPERTS CLAIM GERMAN PROBLEM SOLVED

Says World Must Absorb German Products

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Feb. 14.—Gen. Charles G. Dawes and his committee of international experts were on their way to Paris today, convinced they have found a plan whereby the allies can collect reparations and Germany can be rehabilitated financially.

The plan, Dawes believes, will be satisfactory to both France and Germany if viewed from a strictly business viewpoint. It will enable the allies to get reparations, presupposing that Germany is allowed economic control of the Ruhr and Rhineland.

Under the plan outlined by Dawes' committee, the maximum amount obtainable as reparations will depend upon the extent to which the world absorbs German products.

Before his departure, General Dawes visited Chancellor Marx and thanked him for Germany's cooperation in providing material necessary to the committee's investigations. Marx replied that he was glad the experts had had the opportunity for thoro study of the German financial situation.

Full details of the plan were not available before the committee left Berlin, but some of the features were made known. They include:

1. New gold backed currency, supplanting land mortgages now backed by the rentenmark must be introduced in Germany.
2. A total circulation of five billions of marks must be provided, altho temporarily a smaller sum, possibly three billion, will suffice.
3. This currency must be backed by 50 per cent gold, or the equivalent.
4. The German budget must be balanced; according to the experts this should not prove difficult. Germany probably can manage it herself thru readjusted taxation, but if she doesn't she must be helped by outside loans. It is believed a large part of the stock of the new bank could be subscribed in America.
5. Germany must be freed of restrictions now hampering production and export.

Iowa Democrats Discard McAdoo in 3-Day Meet

DES MOINES, Ia., Feb. 14—Iowa democrats yesterday decided to withdraw their support from William G. McAdoo because of the oil exposures and to support E. T. Meredith, former secretary of agriculture.

The vote to dump McAdoo came after a three day session of leading democrats in which his connection with the Teapot scandal was thoroly reviewed.

Edward L. Doheny, lessee of the California reserves, will be recalled for further questioning concerning "influence" wielded with government officials in connection with oil deals.

Oscar Sutro, counsel for the Standard Oil company of California, will be summoned for questioning concerning some phases of the oil negotiations. Sutro's evidence, committee members predicted, will have a direct bearing upon the charges of fraud and corruption.

An important cabinet member of the Wilson administration was mentioned to the committee today as recipient of hundreds of thousands of Doheny money.

Meantime the committee gave strong intimations that it would reject both the president's special counsel before the end of the day if they were not withdrawn earlier.

Daugherty Gave O. K.

Attorney General Daugherty gave "an informal verbal opinion" that contracts for exchange of naval reserve oil for tank storage were legal, the files of the interior department revealed to the senate Teapot Dome committee today.

John Holland, secretary to Senator Walsh, Montana, read to the committee a letter from H. Foster Bain, director of the bureau of mines, to former Secretary Fall in May, 1922.

Daugherty's opinion was given in the face of an opinion by a Standard Oil attorney that the proposed contracts constituted "an absurdity" under the law and were utterly illegal.

In his letter to Fall, Bain suggested that Fall try to have Daugherty put his opinion in writing, to meet protests of Oscar Sutro, counsel for the Standard Oil Company of California, that the contracts were illegal.

John C. Shaffer, publisher of a string of newspapers, told the committee today he received $92,000 "for services" in connection with Harry F. Sinclair's payment to the Pioneer Oil company of $1,000,000 for claims to Teapot Dome.

Shaffer said he had one-eighth interest in the Pioneer but had performed no services and had put up no money.

Fall Knew Lease Illegal.

Former Secretary Fall knew the proposed payment of naval oil in return for storage tank construction had been held illegal when he made the arrangement with E. L. Doheny, Oscar Sutro, attorney for the Standard Oil Company of California, told the committee today.

Sutro, in an opinion to his company, a copy of which was found in the interior department files, ruled the proposed exchange of oil for storage was an absurdity, under the law, and that the act of 1920 gave the secretary of the navy no power to do this.

He said Assistant Secretary of the Interior Finney told him Fall did not consider it necessary to get a ruling from Attorney General Daugherty on this point.

Sutro asked permission to produce a transcript of hearings conducted by Fall regarding legality of the leases.

The transcript showed five government officials took part in the discussion and knew all about the leases "notwithstanding contrary testimony given to this committee," Sutro said.

John Holland, secretary to Senator Walsh, who has been making an investigation of records in the interior department, produced correspondence showing Fall knew of Sutro's opinion and disregarded it.

Johnson Raps Coolidge.

Refusal of President Coolidge to oust Secretary of the Navy Denby from his cabinet is in effect presidential approval of Denby's Teapot Dome dealings, Senator Hiram Johnson, California, candidate for nomination for president, on the Republican ticket, declared in a speech in Danville, Ill.

The senate was entirely within its rights when it voted "no confidence" in Denby and asked for his removal, Johnson declared.

Mr. Coolidge personally cast a "no confidence" vote in Attorney General Daugherty when he turned away from the department of justice and appointed private attorneys to investigate the Teapot Dome scandal, Johnson said.

Harding's Friend Subpoenaed.

The senate oil committee decided this afternoon to investigate immediately reports that big oil interests circulated a $1,000,000 "slush fund" among Washington officials.

Edward B. McLean, publisher and intimate friend of the late President Harding, has been subpoenaed as the first witness.

Senator Walsh, Montana, who ordered the subpoena, said he also wished to question McLean further in connection with his "loan" of $100,000 to former Secretary of the Interior Fall.

The subpoena is expected to bring McLean to the stand before the end of the week.

This summons is the first step taken by the committee to trace the origin and disposition of the "slush fund" which is said to have been provided by oil men to influence governmental action.

E. L. Doheny, California oil magnate, also will be asked to return to the stand to tell what he knows about the supposed fund. Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, will be required to appear as soon as he lands from Europe.

It was investigation of McLean's loan to Fall which opened up the sensational phases of the oil inquiry. McLean, under questioning by Walsh at Palm Beach some weeks ago, said Fall got checks for $100,000 from him but returned them uncashed three days later.

Daugherty Cinched.

Postponing until tomorrow the questioning of Frank A. Vanderlip, New York financier, regarding his statement that the late President Harding's sale of the Marion Star ought to be investigated, the senate Teapot Dome committee today got testimony which showed:

That Attorney General Daugherty gave "informal and verbal" approval to the naval oil leases and contracts for exchanging oil for storage, under which Doheny and Sinclair got the oil leases.

That Daugherty's opinion was given in the face of a written opinion from a Standard Oil lawyer that the proposed leasing plan was "absurd" and illegal.

That Fall knew of the Standard Oil lawyer's opinion, but did not think it necessary to ask a formal opinion from Daugherty.

That under instructions from former Secretary Fall, the leasing of Teapot Dome was kept secret, orders being issued to all in the interior department to give out no information.

Bain in his letter to Fall stated:

"None of us want Mr. Doheny to get into trouble and I take it we all want to do anything we can to make it easy for him.

"Out of all this (dispute about the legality of the leases) has come the suggestions repeatedly that the opinion of the attorney general be obtained.

"I realize the objections to asking such an opinion but I have thought it proper to let you know the difficulties . . . . that you might decide as to whether you might not properly ask the attorney general to put in writing what I have understood was his informal and verbal expression of opinion favorable to the action the department has taken."

That Fall promised to see that Sinclair "took care of" John Shaffer, owner of several newspapers, who claimed an interest in the Pioneer Oil company's rights to Teapot Dome.

That Shaffer has obtained $92,000 from Sinclair under an agreement growing out of his claim.

Standard Oil Influence.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior Finney testified that he was present when arguments were heard by Fall concerning dismissal of a suit against the Standard Oil of California, relating to the title of Section 36, rich section of naval reserve Number One.

Finney said no one was heard by Fall except Oscar Sutro, Standard Oil attorney, and that Fall thereupon dismissed the government proceedings and permitted the Standard to retain the section.

Finney said he now disagrees with the ruling of Fall, but that he put forward no protest when the decision was made.

Finney's testimony was marked by the suggestion from Senator Walsh, Montana, that Finney was not telling the committee all he knew.

"I want the record to show," said Finney as he concluded his testimony, "that I am not consciously concealing anything from this committee."

Walsh repeated that he could not "resist the conclusion that Mr. Finney has not done all he could to help the committee get at the facts."

Walsh's statement was caused by Finney's inability to explain definitely why a formal opinion was not obtained from Daugherty and his statement that he could not remember sending out the order for secrecy regarding the Teapot Dome lease.

Fall's Secrecy.

Senator Kendrick, Wyoming, asked Finney why he had denied the Teapot Dome contract had been signed for nearly two weeks after the contract was signed.

"I acted under instructions from Secretary Fall," Finney answered. "He told me to give out no information."

Finney said his instructions were that information concerning the Sinclair lease must be withheld until the Doheny lease was signed.

"What reason do you believe actuated Fall to keep the Sinclair lease quiet?"

"I don't know. I surmise he wanted to make them both public at once."

Walsh read a memorandum to bureau chiefs about that time which advised the bureaus that all information concerning the leases must be kept quiet.

Finney could not identify the memorandum.

Advance Information.

Senator Adams, Colorado, democrat, brought out that Shaffer was guaranteed $125,000 for the one-eighth interest. The $92,000 was a part of that.

Shaffer said Fall had told him of negotiations to lease Teapot Dome before the lease was signed.

Lenroot then brought out that while Shaffer has no formal contract with Sinclair, an oral agreement exists whereby Shaffer is to get half the profits from 420 acres.

"So then you still are to get half the profits from 420 acres despite the fact no contract has been signed?"

"Yes."

"Sinclair was willing to give you that half interest merely because Fall told him to?"

"Yes, sir."

"What has been the attitude of your newspapers toward Fall since the leases were made?" Senator Dill, Washington, Democrat, asked.

"We have taken the position that if Mr. Fall negotiated an illegal lease he should be criminally prosecuted."

210 Acres His Share.

Fall assured him he would get 200 acres out of the Sinclair lease, Shaffer said, but he never got the land. Sinclair then agreed to set aside 420 acres and give Shaffer half the profits.

"This would have given me 210 acres," Shaffer said. "But Sinclair wanted to develop all the land himself and so I never signed the contract with him. I have no contract with Sinclair now."

Under questioning by Chairman Lenroot, Shaffer said the Pioneer gave the one eighth interest—which yielded him $9[illegible],000—"for $1 and other valuable services."

"What were the other valuable services?" Lenroot asked.

Shaffer said he was to help the Pioneer in an attempt to get the Teapot Dome lease. He did not say in what way he was to help.

John C. Shaffer owns the Chicago Evening Post, the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, and a number of other western papers.

A "Present."

Walsh read minutes of the Pioneer company showing that Shaffer was given one-eighth interest. Shaffer said he never saw the minutes and did not attend the meeting of the Pioneer directors.

"They simply made you a present of your one-eighth interest?" Walsh asked.

"Yes, sir."

"What did you give up to get this interest?"

"Nothing."

Walsh produced a letter written by Shaffer to Judge Finney, assistant secretary of the interior.

"Mr. Fall had arranged with Mr. Sinclair for some acreage in Teapot Dome for me personally," the letter said.

Shaffer said he had a claim because he had spent $115,000 in developing land adjacent to Teapot Dome.

"Was it your opinion that anybody who spent any money was privileged to get part of the Sinclair Lease from Fall?"

"I think any one was privileged to ask for it."

ROME, Feb. 14—A strong faction in Albania insists that the Albanian crown must go to Harry F. Sinclair, American oil promoter.

Reports from Tirana tell of a lively struggle going on in the Albanian parliament over the form of government to be adopted and a choice of ruler.

Republicans and monarchists apparently are about deadlocked. The later have several candidates for the throne, most prominent among them being Sinclair, prince Nicholas of Roumania, prince Charles Karageorgevitch of Jugo-Slavia and prince Sixtus of Parma.

Painters' Local 631 Donates $430 for Workers Germany Aid

The members of Local 631 of the painters union after hearing Comrade John Ballam of the Workers Party speak on the conditions in Germany and the necessity of coming to the aid of the workers there voted to assess themselves 50 cents each and take the money at once out of the treasury to be forwarded to the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany for the benefit of the starving German workers.

The local had previously purchased 100 tickets for the mass meeting which was held in the Ashland Auditorium for the same purpose.

The Local is holding a banquet tonight for the benefit of its members and friends in the Viking Temple on Sheffield Avenue.

METHODISTS DENY THE NEGRO PROBLEM; DISGUST DEAN MILLER

"Words, nothing but words," commented Dean Kelly Miller of Howard university when shown the Methodist church publicity on the Negro problem issued for Lincoln's birthday. Miller is the moving spirit in the Negro Sanhedrin, the national gathering in Chicago of over 60 colored organizations.

The Methodist committee had released a statement by Dr. I. Garland Penn to the newspapers asserting "There is no Negro problem today," and giving reasons why he tought so. Penn is secretary of the churchs' board of education for Negroes.

Said Miller in reply:

"We would not be meeting here to discuss protection from lynching and from abuse and discrimination in education, business, government and recreation if there were no Negro problem. Dr. Penn's statement has no basis. It is words, nothing but words."

"The appalling conditions prevailing in Washington today—corruption, graft, incompetence—have created a situation more dangerous to government than Bolshevism itself."

—Letter by McAdoo to his campaign manager, Feb. 12.

* * * *

The capitalist class must be in a very desperate situation if it is forced to speak in such tones of itself.

An explosion endangers the foundations of the Republic!

The gravity of the situation can hardly be exaggerated!

The structure of our government rocks upon its very foundations!

Private monopoly gained control of the government!

The security of democratic institutions is imperilled!

The popular revolt will elect an insurgent Third Party candidate!

And we can affirm with glee that the ruling capitalist class and its government are indeed in the greatest danger. They are in danger of completely losing the confidence of the great masses. And that is a mortal danger for the capitalist government. The capitalist government is the government of a small minority, but it can exist only if it can rely on the confidence of the great non-capitalistic masses. The rule of every capitalist government is based on two factors: on the one hand physical force, the power of the state machine, and on the other hand, the confidence of the masses. It is, therefore, naive and one-sided for many to believe that for the overthrow of the capitalist government, force alone is sufficient. And it is equally naive and one-sided of many to believe that pure propaganda, which wins the masses, is alone, sufficient. It is no accident that lost wars are the best occasions for revolution because a lost war destroys the army, the tool of physical force of the government, and destroys at the same time the confidence of the masses in the capacity of the government to conduct the affairs of the nation.

The Teapot Dome scandal is less than a lost war for the American capitalist class; but it is a thousand times more than an ordinary case of political corruption. The Teapot Dome scandal will not shake the structure of the army, and the bureaucracy, but it has shaken and will shake still further the other pillar of the power of the ruling class: the confidence of the masses.

But we should not overestimate the significance of the Teapot Dome scandal as an isolated, single factor. Of course it is unique, in that all the important leaders of both political parties of capitalism are at once so thoroly compromised. But we must see clearly that a whole series of important and deep political factors operated simultaneously to make possible the effect of the tremendous Teapot Dome scandal.

The process of the loss of confidence of the non-capitalist masses in the leadership of the capitalist class did not begin with the Teapot Dome scandal, but on the contrary it reached its present high point with the Teapot Dome scandal. The suppressing monopoly of trusts was the first great factor which affected the masses.

Our participation in the world war was the second factor which filled the non-capitalist masses with discontent.

The great economic crisis of 1921-22 with its five and a half million unemployed workers exercised a deep and bitter effect.

The present economic depression which started in the second half of 1923 is again an ingredient in evoking and deepening the general discontent.

All these factors have been operating together for years to sharpen the class conflicts, to undermine the confidence of the non-capitalist elements towards capitalist rule and to help to disintegrate the two-party system, to make the system of checks and balances of the American constitution more and more unworkable. The Teapot Dome scandal did not create the great political crisis of our country; the Teapot Dome scandal has only made this crisis more conscious, has deepened and accelerated it.

Great social forces must work in the deeps of society in order to make political scandals, such as the Rasputin scandal in Russia, the Dreyfus affair in France, the Teapot Dome scandal in the United States into political events of prime importance.

LEGIONAIRES AS INTELLECTUAL 'TONY COMSTOCKS

Sit on Committees and Spread Scab Views

By J. E. SNYDER
(Special to The Daily Worker)

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Feb. 14—The teachers of Oklahoma are compelled to attend the state teachers' association.

The American Legion was in evidence at the Association meeting this year. Members of the Legion were on most all programs that pertained to citizenship, the elimination of illiteracy, physical training and the general sessions where all the teachers assembled together.

Chamber of Commerce Represented.

There were no labor representatives of any kind on the program. Our schools therefore are completely in the hands of the academic psychology and allowed to be so by the indifference of the labor unions of the state. Naturally therefore the Chamber of Commerce which had the teachers entertainment in hand was able to form the programs so that all suggestions for their open shop program could be injected without the teachers being aware that propaganda was rampant in their many sessions.

When you realize that this same Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma is backing schools for the training of open shop bricklayers and other building trades mechanics it is easy to surmise that they will never miss opportunities of this kind to put their propaganda across.

Fights Agents of Darkness.

In other lines, however, the association does splendid work. The departments of science, geography, history offer opportunities for professors to meet and compare notes and to devise ways and means to defeat the aims of those who would darken the mental horizon with the inquisition against science.

It is high time that labor awakens to the insinuating religious freaks that are rising, in this country, to fight science. Every labor movement should organize to combat those who would stamp out the progress that has been made in the public school and colleges for the advancement of science. The public school belongs to the working people. Let it not be stolen from us.

INDICT YOUNG, KLAN LEADER, AS PLAIN THIEF

Election Results Started Trouble.

In labor union quarters the entire trouble in Herrin, is looked at from that angle. The trouble started at the last election which resulted in the victory of the labor candidates. The defeated group, now identified as the Klan faction immediately after the election began to sabotage the elected officials. It was this group which instigated the coup d'etat of Glenn Young who has bible-thumped and flag-waved this community into a state of political and religious hysteria. While the war ostensibly raged against bootleg joints and houses where virtue is conspicuous by its absence, the center of gravity shifted to a fight for the control of the miners union.

The Klan has a nucleus in the miners organization and Klansmen are under instructions from the Klan leaders to secure control of the union, eliminate strikes and establish committees to bring about co-operation between employers and employes. It was recognition of this menace that brought about the threat of a general strike in Williamson County.

William J. Sneed, president of the United Miners sub-district in Herrin, said that had the Klan remained in power, civil war would result and a general strike.

Ridicule Tin Plate Heroes

The people here ridicule the tin plate starred heroes of the Ku Klux Klan. Tho the Indianapolis convention of the U.M.W. of A. went on record overwhelmingly against Ku Klux membership in the union, officials of the organization here seem very hesitant to take any action.

Young's chief activities were directed against union men. William Ruff, a miner was held four days without legal process on a complaint signed by Young. It was also revealed that F. A. Day an officer of the Ku Klux Klan had posed illegally as assistant to the magistrate in Judge Hick's office.

The Klan has violated every law that crossed its path but no punishment is expected. "Invisible government" is no longer a phantom and class conscious workers see in the Ku Klux Klan the germ of the coming American Fascisti.

BIG ISSUES TO TEST SANHEDRIN AT TODAY'S MEET

Lynching, Segregation, Disfranchisement, Up

Equality in Labor Unions.

Fortunately it seems likely that a declaration will be made against the color line in labor unions, but there are fears that conservative forces will prevent the adoption of a definite program for eliminating this color line. Such a program has been presented by Workers Party delegates; it calls for the Sanhedrin to circularize all labor unions still discriminating against the black workers with the appeal and demand for the elimination of the color line which prevents the worker who is good enough for the employer to hire from getting into the union. This program also calls for an intensive propaganda by the Negro press urging all Negro workers to join unions wherever they can do so on a basis of equality.

The value of equality in the labor unions is seen by the workers' representatives because they realize the necessity for the uniting of all workers in a common brotherhood but it is not seen clearly by men who are associated with the real estate game and chambers of commerce, to say nothing of other interests.

The "Black Belt" Evil.

Segregation into "Black Belt" districts is one of the most vital issues before the race at the Sanhedrin. Negroes are crowded into the worst parts of cities and they are compelled to pay exhorbitant rents—above the rates charged whites. The poor people who are gouged by the rent hogs are crying out against the policy of segregation. But there are real estate men among the Negroes and other business men who gain by this policy. Their voice is not raised against this iniquity in compelling tones.

Two effective methods of remedying the housing evil are proposed by resolutions presented by the Workers Party delegates:

Colored tenant unions, to refuse to pay exorbitant rents or to live in inferior buildings or segregated districts, is one remedy. The other is a demand for legislation making housing a public utility and compelling landlords to let their places to the first comer, regardless of race or color.

Unless the Sanhedrin urges definite action of some kind against the housing evil, say the workers, it will have accomplished nothing in this direction. Its opportunity for leadership is before it.

Disfranchisement is as vital an issue as inequality in the labor unions and there is little doubt that the Sanhedrin will condemn the system that denies the black citizen the right to exercise his citizenship and allows the 14th and 15th amendments to be ignored.

But mere appeals for the franchise to the republican and democratic parties which have ignored the rights of the Negro voters thru the years are of no value, say the workers' representatives. The republican party is equally guilty for republican presidents refuse to spend one cent for the enforcement of the 14th and 15th amendments for which 800,000 soldiers died in 1861-65, tho they are willing to spend millions for the 18th amendment.

For Farmer-Labor Party.

Both the Workers Party, and the African Blood Brotherhood, and different organizations, demand that the Sanhedrin send delegates to the farmer-labor convention that may be called. Seeing no hope in the two capitalistic parties they demand that the Negroes, who are nearly all workers or farmers unite with white workers and farmers in a common movement.

Yet some Negro republicans, political leaders, throw cold water on the farmer-labor movement. It endangers the party that helps them, tho it does nothing for the Race. The same interests throw cold water on tenant farmers' unions.

Douglas Park Br. Busy.

The Douglas Park branch of the Workers Party, in Chicago, is working hard to make the drive for 10,000 new subscribers for the DAILY WORKER a success. At the last meeting the DAILY WORKER branch agent got all the members of the branch to promise to work hard on the drive.

The entire membership of the branch also decided to take part in the house to house collection for German relief Feb. 24th.

The Goat Must Go.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14—Dr. Otto Wiedfeldt, the German ambassador here, will end his diplomatic career in Washington in the near future, according to indications today.

Negro Workers Have Program to End Race Discrimination

Discrimination against the Negro is practiced by some labor unions, which draw the color line; by municipalities and landlords, who segregate the Negroes into "Black Belts" and charge them excessive rents, and by boards of education, which allow Negro schools only a fraction of the funds accorded white schools.

The Segregation Evil

THE SANHEDRIN Conference declares itself unalterably opposed to the segregation of Negroes into "black belt" residence districts. We declare the discrimination against Negroes in regard to which part of a city they may live in and which part they may not live in, is a political question, and must be dealt with just as we deal with discrimination in voting. The time has come when the living accommodations of the public cannot be left to the private control of a few wealthy parasites who decide where the colored man may live and where he may not live.

We demand legislation by which all tenements, apartment houses and homes to let shall be subject to the claim of the first comer, regardless of race or color or the will of the landlord.

Whereas, it is common knowledge that Negroes are customarily charged rent at a rate of 20 per cent to 100 per cent higher than is charged for the same apartments rented to white people, we demand legislation for a fixed rental for all places to be let, with heavy penalties and damages whenever a landlord charges higher rents for one race than would be charged another race for similar accommodations.

We declare that any Negro real estate agent who connives in charging more rent to his own color than would be paid by whites, is a renegade and a traitor to his own people.

In advocating the foregoing measures of relief, we do not regard them as being permanently effective. This conference advocates taking the whole housing question out of the hands of private individuals, and advocates the taking over of all rented residences by the public, to be rented without discrimination of color to the people at a fixed low rental.

Whereas, it is a custom of large employers of colored and white labor, such as mine operators and mill owners, to house their employes in "company houses" and thereby to control the lives of the workers, being able to throw them out of house and home whenever the bosses please and wherever there is a disagreement about wages or working conditions, we demand any legal measure that may be necessary to prevent any employer of industrial labor owning or controlling the homes rented to his employes.

Pending legislative relief, and during the present period when the Negro's rights are ignored by governmental agencies, we call upon the residents of all Negro communities to organize colored tenants' unions so as to be able in an organized way to refuse to pay exorbitant rents, or to consent to live in inferior buildings or segregated districts.

Discrimination in Schools

OUR RACE in its struggle to complete its racial, political, economical and social emancipations, is hampered and cruelly retarded by laws and customs of Southern states in the matter of education. The Negro men and women who will finally realize complete emancipation and equality are those children and those young men and young women who are today of school age. Their schooling or their lack of schooling is their preparation for future citizenship. In all parts of the South, as well as a large part of the North, they are more or less discriminated against; for we declare that any involuntary separation of the children of the two races in schools is but preparation for a future "Jim-Crow" life. Enforced segregation in schools is a necessary preliminary to segregation in street cars, railroad cars, restaurants, residence districts, hotels and theaters, and create a ground of race distinction which leads to continued disfranchisement at the ballot box.

As long as local and state authorities are permitted to put colored children in one school and white children in another they will give the biggest part of their support to the white schools and will let the Negro schools lie in neglect and stagnation for lack of funds and attention. It is often the case that for each dollar spent on the education of a white child, ten cents is spent on the "education" of a Negro child. Such brutal treatment is the direct inheritance of slavery, in which the Negro was forbidden to have any education at all. It is a continuation of the tradition of deliberate degradation of the Negro.

This conference declares that the American Negro cannot continue to leave the shaping of the minds of his children in the hands of localities where all institutions are dedicated to the principle of "white supremacy," that is, Negro inferiority. We protest against unequal appropriations as between the schools of the two races; but in doing so we do not consent to school segregation. We declare that white and black children who are expected to share citizenship in the future must begin that common citizenship in common schools together. Segregation in schools is as injurious to whites as to Negroes, teaching snobbishness to the whites and race hatred to both races alike; it prevents for all afterlife any understanding between the races; it is the seed of future race riots, bloodshed and tyranny.

We therefore demand:

1. A national constitutional amendment placing the entire public educational system in the hands of the federal government, and taking it out of the hands of local, municipal and state authorities.

2. That such constitutional amendment shall forbid any segregation or separation of races or creeds in any public school, and forbidding any recognition by law of any distinction of race or creed in public schools.

Color Line in Labor Unions

WE DECLARE the interests of the white workers and the Negro workers to be the same, and call for unity and harmony between them. Large industrial employers often stir up friction between the workers of the two races for the sake of dividing the workers along a convenient line, and thus keeping the workers of both races in weakness and subjection.

We call upon the labor unions to let down all remaining bars to membership in their organizations by colored people, and all discriminations and distinctions of color within them. We are not blind to the fact that the American labor movement is in a bad condition today, is getting weaker in some instances, and altogether has organized only a small fraction of the working class. The Negro is a large part of the working class of this country, and we declare that the labor unions owe their present weakness in a large part to their neglect of the Negro worker. Hundreds of thousands of Negroes are flooding into the field of industrial labor. We demand of the American Federation of Labor, of the Railroad Brotherhoods and other independent unions, that these Negroes be welcomed into all unions on a basis of equality, and point out that it is for the sake of the white worker as well as the black worker.

We demand:

1. That the American Federation of Labor (and all other bodies of organized labor) make an intensive drive in the immediate future to organize Negro workers wherever found, on a basis of equality in the same unions with the whites.

2. That all such labor organizations be fraternally addressed by this body, with the request that such labor bodies shall immediately conduct among their members an official propaganda against discrimination of color and against racial snobbishness in the labor unions and in favor of enrolling all Negro workers into the unions. Further, that such campaign be carried on in collaboration with representatives of the Negro Sanhedrin.

3. That all Negro papers be requested to carry on an intensive propaganda among the race for the joining of labor unions on the basis of equality.

4. In view of the fact that the Negro in industry is as yet an unskilled laborer as a rule, and as the industrial form of union and the breaking down of craft aristocracy in the unions are in the interest of the Negro as an unskilled worker, we therefore favor the transformation of all craft unions into industrial unions. However, we are opposed to dual unionism, as well as "Jim-Crow" unionism, and favor the Negro joining everywhere the main body of labor organization.

LABOR FIGHTS MACHINE RULE AT SANHEDRIN

racial relationships that followed a morning of speeches on religion. The problem of inter-racial co-operation was discussed from the standpoint of the Y. M. C. A. and the church and every other point of view but that of Labor—altho the Negro race is pre-eminently a labor group and its industrial welfare is bound up with the inter-racial co-operation with white workers.

Four days had gone by and labor had been ignored.

Chairman Against Labor.

Lovett Fort-Whiteman, of the Workers Party, rose and demanded that the greatest of all issues before the Negro race be given attention, declaring there were eighteen representatives of labor whose rights must be respected.

He was ruled out of order by the chairman.

Otto E. Housiwould arose demanding attention. The chairman tried vainly to shut him up but Housiwould could not be halted and cried out:

"I see that labor is an outcast here as it is outside."

Audience With Labor.

The audience applauded with more enthusiasm than it has anything that had been said so far in the convention.

Housiwould denounced the conspiracy to keep Labor from being heard at this great gathering of the race. He censured the leaders of the convention for providing no place for labor on the program.

At Housiwould's insistence that Labor be discussed Friday morning the audience again applauded. Fort-Whiteman and other speakers took the floor on the same demand. The chairman could not halt the tide of protest.

Against Lynching.

Lynching is a subject which arouses the just anger of the Negro race. The African Blood Brotherhood has a workable program against this crime of the ages. It is for the Sanhedrin to invite all labor bodies to form joint councils with Negroes to take action to stop lynching. Only interests that are opposed to labor unions can oppose such a program for effective action.

The program for equal support from public school funds for the Negro schools now so grossly discriminated against, sometimes to the extent of providing for the Negro pupil at only one tenth the rate at which the white child is provided is another essential part of the remedial program. The only opposition that has shown its head is from teachers who think their jobs down South might be affected if they fight this system now.

K. K. K., the Common Enemy.

A resolute stand against the Ku Klux Klan, calling for an alliance with the foreign-born against the common enemy, is demanded by the African Blood Brotherhood. All classes of the race hate the murderous Klan, tho some delegates from the South fear to voice their enmity, fearing vengeance when they return home.

Friendship With Russia.

Two proposals for clasping the hand of the Russian workers are presented: one by the Workers Party delegates, urging the Sanhedrin to support the movement for the recognition of Russia and the other from the African Blood Brotherhood asking the Sanhedrin to elect a delegation to visit Russia for the purpose of making an impartial study of the situation there.

The African Blood Brotherhood's resolution declares that the Russian revolution is the most drastic social change that has taken place since the American Civil War, which was also a revolution in as much as it abolished slavery. It cites further the fact that the Russian people have welcomed all visiting Negroes with open arms and that the Negro visitors found themselves for the first time of their lives in a country where they enjoyed complete equality and respect.

An apostle of Russia, as a friend of the colored people, is found in Dr. C. S. Brown, president of Lott Carey Convention and head of the Sanhedrin's commission on world-wide race movements.

Dr. Brown visited Russia last year on a tour of inspection with a Baptist delegation and he declares that he and another Negro member of the delegation were received with even greater cordiality than their white brothers by the representatives of the Soviet government whom he met. They found the Baptist missions thriving.

Today is the day that tests the convention—as a mere getting together affair or as the founding of a great movement for the emancipation of the race.

MOSCOW, Feb. 14.—The Government of Norway has granted recognition to the present government in Moscow, as the "De Jure" Government of Russia, it was said here tonight.

Husk O'Hare's Wooden Soldiers Even Urge Wooden Legs to Action

There will be knocking on wood in the Ashland Auditorium next Saturday evening, when Messrs. Husk O'Hare and Company will present their ten wooden soldiers of syncopation for the consideration of the frolic seekers, revolutionists and ordinary citizens who will crowd into the famous home of conventions and labor entertainments to reveal in the joy of living and giving for and to the revolutionary press of the Workers Party and the Labor Defense Council.

It's Hard to Believe.

Press agents are a notoriously unreliable and their promises on ordinary occasions are only entitled to a little more credence than the blandishments of an oil stock salesman, but our social experts who have on other occasions participated in a Chicago Red Revel are willing to wager that the forthcoming affair will have all those who went before "backed off the boards" if a Shakespearean quotation is permissible in the vicinity of the stockyards.

The Costumes.

Prizes for the most artistic and bizarre costumes will be distributed and the parade of entrants before the judicial eyes of the committee which is to pass out the cash will, it is confidently predicted, rival anything in that line on this side of Palm Beach.

A United Front.

The difficulties experienced in bringing about a united front of labor politically will not hold good next Saturday night. Under the inspiration of the O'Hare boys a tendency to get together will be evident and if the revellers are not willing to get together shoulder to shoulder on the political field it is a foregone conclusion that they will see eye to eye at the Red Revel. Political distinctions, sects, tendencies and divisions will have a tendency to vanish into thin air on Saturday night.

Enough But—Yet.

There is more to come. Those who care to eat can do so. Viands such as tables never groaned under since the feudal days will entice the revellers to spend some of their money at the banqueting board. Cooks with unions labels carved on their political anatomies will send up a savory odor from the kitchen; waitresses of Ziegfield calibre will exchange dough for dough.

Last But Not Least.

For those who cannot be moved by an appeal to their sociability we will conclude this clever piece of publicity by stating that the purpose of the Red Revel is not merely to give the workers of Chicago the opportunity to laugh and make merry but also to help the DAILY WORKER and raise funds for the Labor Defense Council which is waging a campaign against the oil-smeared attorney-general Daugherty and his agents in Michigan who are making an attempt to send C. E. Ruthenberg, William Z. Foster and many other leading members of the Workers Party to the penitentiary.

DAILY WORKER BUSINESS HEAD QUIZZES OWENS

How Does He Get All Those Subs?

Edgar Owens, district organizer of the Workers Party in Detroit, will not be popular with the business office of the DAILY WORKER very long unless he writes in and tells them the recipe he uses for getting subscriptions totaling $51.60. The business office is darn glad to get the subs but wants to know how Owens does it so they can tell the DAILY WORKER boosters in other places.

Tom O'Flaherty, of the editorial staff, says that it should not be hard to boost the DAILY WORKER. He points out that the editorial office is turning out a fine paper and workers realize it.

The workers do seem to appreciate that the DAILY is a fine paper. Every mail continues to bring in letters by the score that praise it in no uncertain terms.

• • • •

"The DAILY WORKER is the best paper that ever came out in English," writes L. J. of Orient, Ill.

• • • •

"I suppose my sub for the DAILY WORKER will run out soon. I don't want to be without it so I renew without waiting for a notice."—Geo. Prodanich, Milwaukee, Wis.

• • • •

"I was out of work and could not renew before so please send me all the back numbers I missed."—Ed. Grossen, Philadelphia, Pa.

• • • •

"Another fellow and I are both interested in the DAILY WORKER but are only working part time. We have pooled our available funds and will both read the one paper till we are working steady."—W. M. R., Niles, Mich.

• • • •

"I am sending you $1. Send me as many papers as that will pay for and I will see that some workers get what all the workers need; a chance to read the DAILY WORKER."—Mrs. L. K., Jacksonville, Ohio.

• • • •

When the people who get out the DAILY WORKER read scores of such letters every day they cannot help but resolve to do their best to get out a fine paper for the workers who believe in it so much. You can join the bunch that is making the DAILY WORKER possible and better by getting a sub from someone for it. Do it today.

Have One Suspect, Anyway.

One suspect is in custody today in the hunt for the three bandits who stripped Gilda Gray, shimmy dancer, of jewels she values at $150,000. The man, Robert Viovanani, 35, was partially identified by Gilda, her chauffeur, and the elevator man in the dancer's apartment who witnessed the holdup.

WORKERS PARTY WILKES-BARRE MEETING HELD

Police and Legion Do Not Interfere

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Feb. 14.—Reports that the Workers Party did not hold their Lenin memorial meeting here last Sunday are not true. The meeting was held but not in the place originally planned. The police prevented the use of the hall where the meeting was advertised but the people in charge of the meeting after consulting with the speakers merely moved to another place and proceeded with their meeting.

All the news agencies and newspaper correspondents ignored the meeting that was held and concentrated their attention on the fact that the meeting did not take place where it was advertised to have taken place.

The Police Are Notified.

The Workers Party and the speakers at the Lenin memorial meeting felt that it was important to hold a meeting and force the police to make arrests and thus bring the whole question of free speech into the court. The police were notified that a Lenin memorial meeting was in progress 10 minutes after it had started but they did nothing about it.

The speakers at the meeting and the audience were in the hall where the meeting took place about two hours but nothing unusual happened.

Police, and American Legion members drove up to the hall in autos and stopped a few minutes and then drove away.

Double the Party Membership.

Since the free speech fight started here the membership of the Workers Party has doubled.

Alvin Olmstead a member of the American Legion in Philadelphia was a speaker at the meeting and after the meeting went to the American Legion hall and told the Legionaries what he thought of them and their brand of Americanism. He was roughly handled and escorted to the station and put aboard a train. Olmstead is not a radical or even a liberal but he came to protest against the violation of the Workers Party's constitutional rights.

Another mass meeting will be held in the near future and the fight for free speech will go on in spite of the American Legion.

Rose Pastor Stokes who was one of the speakers particularly objected to by the Legion read her speech so as to be able to nail any misquotation of her speech that might be made in the capitalist press.

Binghamton Memorial Meeting.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Feb. 14.—Binghamton local of the Workers Party held a Lenin Memorial mass meeting with Rebecca Grecht of New York City as the principal speaker.

She spoke on the subject of "Lenin and the Role of the Communist Party in the Proletarian Revolution" and showed how his greatest service to the toiling masses of the world was in founding a centralized world party and formulating for it the realistic tactics by which the workers will conquer.

The Daily Worker and the Party Campaigns

THE SLOGAN of the Workers Party—"A Workers' and Farmers' Government"—receives new impetus and real significance thru the exposure of the gigantic thievery, bribery and graft in connection with the Teapot Dome Oil Scandal. That the government is but an instrument of the financial interests of the country, that—in fact—it is but the Executive Department of this group, is shown more clearly than ever before. And at the same time it proves conclusively that the governmental functions are administered in direct contrast to the welfare of the city workers and working farmers of the United States. It further shows the most urgent need for a mass Labor Party, based on class interests, opposed to the financial interests and their representatives.

The broadcasting of the facts of the Teapot Dome mess, pointing out the political meaning to the farm and city workers, becomes the immediate duty of the Workers Party. And how can this be done better than thru the columns of the DAILY WORKER, whose interests are none other than those of the working class? Robbed of the really vital news of the capitalist press, who are either on the democratic or republican fence—or astraddle on both—the workers are ready to listen to what the DAILY WORKER has to say. With this fact in mind, it becomes clear that the logical conclusion is to reach these masses with the messages of the DAILY WORKER each and every day.

The greatest possible number of readers is the objective of the Workers Party. Local Chicago has entered this campaign with the slogan "One Thousand New Subscribers by March 10th" as a minimum, a figure which with every member on the job can easily be doubled or tripled.

The Boosters' Contest.

The spirit of the campaign in Chicago has been greatly enlivened thru the friendly competition among branches and individual members to be at the head of the list for securing the largest number of subscriptions and getting, in appreciation for their efforts, the prizes offered by the DAILY WORKER for highest scoring contestants. A life-size, framed photograph of Nicolai Lenin is the prize offered to each of the leading English and Language branches; and a small framed picture for the second highest Language branch. The Young Workers League branches have also entered the contest and the highest scoring branch will receive a similar prize as the leading English branch and Language branch of the Party. The prizes to be given to individuals are: 1st, a Remington portable typewriter; 2nd, either a gold-filled watch or a library; 3rd, a fountain pen. Members of the Young Workers League have the same chance for individual prizes as the members of the Party.

With a smile that signified "this in next Monday's issue. Speculation is rife as to the leading Branch.

Let's Not Talk!

One of the "active" members in the "One Thousand New Subscriptions by March 10th" campaign, upon hearing that a city, with half of Chicago's membership, is making a will hold him for a day" (meaning J. Shafir, who topped the individual point score yesterday with a score of 21 points.) Comrade John Heinrichson of the Englewood English branch entered the office and handed in subscriptions entitling him to 49 points, the Englewood branch, by the way, has been only recently organized. With the campaign gaining momentum and more and more members entering the contest, it is not the question now as to how many subs an individual member can secure, but rather how many branches will really be in the contest for leadership. With even one or two members falling down on the job, the chances for a branch may be very much decreased.

It is expected that everyone will send in all the subs possible this week, so that the results of the first lap of the campaign can be published campaign for 3,000 new subscribers, remarked, "Well, our best wishes to them" and, reflectively, "But as for Chicago, while we say '1000,' let us make it 3000, or, let's not talk about it, but Get Busy and Do It!" With the membership imbued with this spirit, the success of the campaign is assured.

Don't forget to register at once, either at the DAILY WORKER office or at Room 307, 166 W. Washington Street. Now is none too soon, with the contest progressing, any further delay will diminish the chances for the individual prizes and the branch represented.

DAWES' BANK INVOLVED IN FORBES FRAUD

Grand Jury Wants to See Books

The special federal grand jury investigating the $225,000,000 graft in the Veterans' Bureau yesterday subpoenaed books of the Central Trust company. The books are wanted to prove what was done with a special fund placed with the bank by the Thompson Black construction company, one of the firms involved in the graft charges.

The investigation conducted by the special grand jury is extremely secret. Every precaution is being taken to prevent anything becoming public. At all times during sessions of the grand jury there are from two to four secret service men in the corridor of the federal building which leads to the grand jury room. No one is permitted to come near the grand jury room or so much as enter the corridor leading to it. If someone tries to wander in the direction of the grand jurors, a secret service man or two will direct him in another direction in no uncertain terms.

Coolidge Wants Silence.

All this is carrying out the wishes of President Coolidge, who had the senate investigation into the affairs of the Veterans' Bureau stopped because it was becoming a scandal and for political reasons he did not care to face it.

Last November Coolidge sent for Senator Reed, chairman of the committee investigating the bureau, and asked him to clean up the mess as soon as possible. At that time, the investigators were hardly under way with their work, but had already uncovered facts that smelled to high heaven.

Became Efficiency Fiends.

On November 8th, the senate committee announced that they would not hold any further public hearings and would confine their efforts to attempting to show how efficiency could be introduced into the business offices of the bureau.

On December 1st, Daugherty announced that his office had decided to begin investigation of the charges of graft that were made in connection with the Veterans' Bureau affairs.

In making the statement the Attorney-General was careful to announce that he did not intend to give any publicity to the investigation. He said that in the interests of fair play all fact hunting would be done in secret.

Marvel at Daugherty's Caution.

In view of the attorney-general's record of rushing to the newspapers with denunciations of radicals before and after trial his announcement of a policy of secrecy was surprising.

Since then every effort has been made, to not only keep the facts the department of justice got secret but also to hush up and minimize the facts that were brought out at the public hearings of the senate committee.

A Feather-tickling Probe.

On Jan. 7th the report of the committee of investigators was made public. The Associated Press sent out abstracts of that report and the attorney for the committee, General O'Ryan said that the final report would be "very extensively changed." He asked the senate to pay no attention to the newspaper extracts.

The final report of Gen. O'Ryan is considerably softer in spots than the first report of the committee.

In the original draft of the report it said:

"This project (referring to the Morse homestead purchase) furnished a striking example of the manner in which the interests of the Government and of the disabled were prostituted in order that a high Government official might generously satisfy the demands of a prominent political leader who claimed no knowledge of the needs of the disabled and whose interests were obviously selfish."

This has been changed to:

"This project furnishes a striking example of the manner in which the interests of the Government and of the disabled were subordinated to individual interests."

Amalgamation means strength!

Beer and the Class War.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The Provincial government of British Columbia has drawn the class lines on beer and beer clubs and has announced that from Feb. 1 no uncouth proletarian imbibing establishment can function as such without running foul of the law and further that only the leading business men's clubs will be permitted to be oases, less than a dozen in Vancouver and four in Victoria.

ILLINOIS BOSSES LAY OFF 14,000 SINCE DECEMBER

Many Southern Negroes Seek Work

"Illinois manufacturers began the new year by laying off a substantial number of their workers," says the report on the employment situation for January just issued by the Illinois department of labor. "Industrial operations appear to have fallen 1.8 per cent during the month."

Five thousand five hundred workers were laid off by 1,192 employers who co-operate with the department in gathering statistics. If this report may be taken as typical 14,000 factory workers have lost their jobs since December. "The decline is quite general applying to the great majority of industries, and affecting the employment of both sexes."

Chicago Hard Hit.

"In Chicago 607 manufacturers reported that they had 3,000 fewer employes than in December, or about 2 per cent."

"Declines were recorded during January in 33 out of 55 manufacturing industries included in the survey. Declines are seen to be general in the food and metal industries. Probably the most important change during the thirty days has been the collapse of car building." Only about three-fourths of the workers in this industry are working.

"The drop of 4.5 per cent in the slaughtering and meat packing industry was but little more than the average for all food industries."

Pay rolls for the week of the middle of January show a reduction of 4.1 per cent from the same week in December.

Worst In Years.

"In the offices of the Illinois Free Employment Service in 13 principal cities in the state the excess labor supply in January was the largest that has been reported since early in 1922. Places could not be found for 10,000 applicants for jobs. There were in the state as a whole 166 applicants for each 100 jobs. This was measurably worse than at any time in 1923.

"Coal mines in Illinois and adjoining states have closed down throwing hundreds out of work."

The employment offices located in negro districts have been swamped by incoming southern Negroes.

California Again Flares Up Against Organized Labor

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 14—After a lull in the persecution of the I. W. W., the California branch, General Defense committee, reports a sudden flareup thruout the state. Clarence Greer and Harry Willis have been arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism at El Centro, where Rosche Thurman is being held for re-trial; and at the other end of the state, in Redding, George Brown and Ed Harris are bing held under the Busick anti-I. W. W. injunction.

It has been proved by a test case in Los Angeles, however, that this injunction is invalid outside of Judge Busick's jurisdiction, and the men will probably be released unless held for criminal syndicalism. At the same time Charles Anderson, Charles Baker and Thomas Campbell were arrested in Marysville for vagrancy and their delegates' supplies confiscated. After a week in jail the judge ordered the cases dismissed.

A Magazine Extra!

THE DAILY WORKER Magazine Supplement for this Saturday, Feb. 16, will be an extra good number.

Among the features of the coming magazine supplement are a story by Donald Stuart on Hiram Johnson. Mr. Stuart is a California newspaper man of many years' standing and has seen Hiram at close quarters serving the open-shoppers of the Pacific Coast.

A most lucid analysis of what the Communists stand for will be presented in the article written by Gregory Zinoviev on "What Is Bolshevism?" The situation in Germany brought up to the last moment is described by August Thalheimer, one of the leading figures of the German Communist Party.

J. T. Murphy, who has been prominent in the British trade union movement for a long time, has contributed an article written especially for the magazine section on the present political situation in England and the rise of the Labor Party.

Victor Serge has written a critique of "Boris Pilniak," one of the most promising young Russian writers. There will also appear a number of excellent poems, the usual good cartoons and sketches, and several articles, dealing with current economic and political problems confronting the workers.

AMALGAMATION BRINGS NEW HOPE TO SHOE WORKERS

Recent Merger Held Aid to Organization

By A. L. CARPENTER
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BOSTON.—Negotations have been under way for some time, which, if successful, will result in making for the shoe workers of the United States an organization equal in strength to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Already agreements have been reached whereby the United Shoe Workers of America will be absorbed by the Shoe Workers' Protective union. The former is a union having branches thruout the eastern part of the country and the latter is the strongest union in New England. The final draft whereby this will become an accomplished fact will be decided by the unions within a short time.

Ryan Optimistic.

William J. Ryan, secretary-treasurer, Shoe Workers' Protective union describes the situation clearly. He says, "I can see no reason why this should not be accomplished soon. The situation in the shoe industry is such that the workers seem to have no choice in the matter. The workers who have been organized in the Boot and Shoe Workers' union have left that union with alarming rapidity and have gone into various other organizations. The Amalgamated Shoe Workers of America have an estimated membership of 20,000; the Brockton District Shoe Workers' union, an estimated membership of 5000; the United Shoe Workers of America, an estimated membership of 8000. There are various other smaller organizations. Our own union is an outgrowth of the conditions existing, in the past, in the Boot and Shoe Workers' union and while we enjoy, as a whole, the best conditions in the industry, still we can see the fallacy of unions in the same industry being formed as they are at the present time. Two large shoe factories, the Endicott-Johnson Co. of Johnstown, N. Y., and the International Shoe Mfg. Co. of St. Louis make approximately one-fifth of all of the shoes made in this country. They make practically all of the staple shoes and what are known as fancy shoes are left to the smaller shops. These two large factories are not organized. Thus they stand out as a menace to the organized shops."

Basis of Monopoly.

The two large factories mentioned by Ryan are in a position eventually to form themselves into a monopoly. They have installed the most modern machinery which is so perfect that nearly all of the skill of the mechanic has gone into the machine. The smaller factories find it almost impossible to compete with them. Nearly all of the smaller factories are now organized into some union. This means they are paying higher wages. In the larger factories is found a social welfare system, whereby the workers are forced into a condition of benevolent feudalism. The company builds houses upon company property, then sells them to the workers and takes so much each month or week out of the pay envelope. The land is never sold. The string to the contract is that it is impossible for the workers to go out on strike. If they do, they are immediately discharged and the property reverts back thru a system of red tape to the company.

The Amalgamated Shoe Workers of America, with offices in Lynn, Mass., is a new organization which was formed by local people. It is second in size in the shoe industry, and composed of workers in every branch of the industry. It is a militant body of class conscious workers. They see the necessity for amalgamation, and have been working toward this end.

Employers Force Unity.

The strongest argument advanced for an organization of all the workers in the industry into one national organization comes from the manufacturers themselves. Almost daily they are notifying the unions of their intention to move to some more favorable city where wages are lower. A manufacturer in Lynn closed his shop and notified his employes that he was going to Cambridge if they would not accept a 25% wage reduction. He meant to say he was moving out of the jurisdiction of the union. With the present plan of organization this is possible.

This brings us back to the problem to be solved regarding the two large firms mentioned in the early part of this article. The problem will never be solved by the workers if the industry remains divided. There seems to be a choice between three things—amalgamation, benevolent feudalism and total destruction.

New York Labor Learns Egyptian Prisoners Released

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—News that the British labor government has agreed to amnesty prisoners sentenced by military courts in Egypt was received with enthusiasm in labor circles here. It is expected that 145 political prisoners will be released at once as a result of this measure. American progressive and labor groups have sent messages of approval to both MacDonald and Zaghloul governments.

THE POWER COLUMN

THE DAILY WORKER MACHINE

IN this machinery age, literally and figuratively, The Machine is a great ogre which the enemies of labor use in the oppression of the working class. In the life of industrial workers, The Machine is the ruler, the driver and the master. In political life, The Machine, this time a political machine, used by unscrupulous politicians doing the bidding of the owners of the United States, again is used for the enslavement of the workers. Even in the trade unions, wherever the rank and file attempts to carry out progressive measures looking toward the emancipation of labor, again it is The Machine, in the hands of crooked labor politicians, which again blocks the road and drives the toilers back.

The Machine, whether it is the result of human organization of human invention, instead of fulfilling its purpose in delivering the human race from degrading and exhausting toil, ever has been used further to enslave and degrade the working class.

Against the human greed of the exploiters, with their political machines, against the treachery of the labor fakers maintaining their mastery with their "official Machines," and against the driving, grinding greed of industrial machinery, THE DAILY WORKER has been brought into existence in order to help in the education and organization of the rank and file workers, whose life and death are in the hands of the ruthless machinery of capitalism. How well THE DAILY WORKER is fulfilling its missions is testified by the thousands of militant workers, to whom THE DAILY WORKER has brought new hope and new strength to wage the struggle against the employing class. How THE DALIY WORKER is building and strengthening the militant movement is shown by the hundreds of workers who are recruited to the ranks of militant labor every week, by reason of their subscription to THE DAILY WORKER and the inspiration and stimulation which they receive from its columns every day.

With the birth of THE DAILY WORKER there has been born a new machine, this time a machine which will take its place as one of the few that fight on the side of the working class. Composed of the militant live wires, who are making THE DAILY WORKER grow, we call it THE DAILY WORKER Machine. Dedicated to the successful functioning of this machine is "The Power Column."

THE DAILY WORKER artist has conceived a drawing of THE DAILY WORKER Machine which expresses better than words can do, just what the machine is and what its function is. A newspaper like THE DAILY WORKER does not live from the income it receives from advertising. Neither do multi-millionaire oil robbers contribute a million-or-so-every-once-in-a-while. THE DAILY WORKER lives and grows out of the income it receives from subscriptions and it is the live DAILY WORKER boosters, the members of the "I-want-to-make-THE DAILY WORKER-grow" club, who are the life-blood of our paper. They are the ones who make THE DAILY WORKER possible and they are the ones who are making THE DAILY WORKER powerful and influential. There are several hundreds of these live wires, working in every part of the country, but there is work to do and plenty of it for at least a thousand more.

Those who want to become a part of THE DAILY WORKER machine should write their name and address on a post card; say "I want to help make THE DAILY WORKER grow," and mail it in. There are material rewards in the way of commissions to those who can spend time and energy for the benefit of our labor press, and there are greater rewards out of the building of the militant labor movement.

There are dozens of ways to advertise and to increase the circulation of THE DAILY WORKER. We have printed some of them in The Power Column and cite a few more below. DAILY WORKER branch and city agents are urged to consider these ideas and to employ them where local conditions are favorable.

From Paterson, N. J., Comrade William Glanz of the Workers Party English Branch writes that he has made arrangements with a news dealer to handle 100 copies of THE DAILY WORKER to distribute to Patterson news stands. The arrangement costs THE DAILY WORKER ½ cent a copy for the distribution of the papers and the collection of money and unsold copies each week. THE DAILY WORKER will be glad to make similar arrangements in other cities, either thru branch or city agents or directly with reputable dealers.

Comrade Nelson Sorenson, City agent for Kansas City, is one of the busiest and most successful DAILY WORKER agents. We print a recent letter from Comrade Sorenson which contains an excellent idea which we recommend to other agents.

"One comrade here cannot read English; he subscribes to "The Freiheit". I convinced him that it was his duty to support our English paper just as well as his and he agreed to pay for a three months sub to be sent to one of the labor unions in Kansas City to be kept in their club rooms. I am planning to send the DAILY into all labor unions in Kansas City and I may use my commissions to pay for them."

Justice Fails To Get Justice

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 13.—Laurence Justice believes his name does not fit the treatment of American veterans of the late war. Justice is the head of a family of a wife and three small children. Injured in the war, he is unable to obtain steady employment. The family is destitute and the district police are providing temporary relief. The family was found to be without fuel or adequate clothing, while rent in arrears laid the family liable to eviction from the home. Justice was wounded and gassed in France.

THE DAILY STAR STOCKHOLDERS OUST VAN LEAR

Paper Now in Hands of Receiver

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 14.—The Minnesota Daily Star, organized three years ago to serve the interests of the workers and farmers, is today in the hands of a receiver after being wrecked by the treachery and greed of Thomas Van Lear and the grafting politicians he associated himself with. Van Lear was formerly socialist mayor of Minneapolis.

Judge Baldwin set the data of the hearing for the petition for permanent receiver for Thursday. In the meantime John Thompson, business manager of the Star, a Van Lear henchman, is temporary receiver.

Refused to Recognize Majority.

By a vote of 3,402 to 102 the paper's stockholders at a special meeting ousted Van Lear and Thompson from the management of the Star, but the latter refused to recognize the ouster as legal, altho the number of stockholders present was a representative one, casting 4,300 shares of the issue of 6,600. Two-thirds of those present were farmers.

After the motion ousting Van Lear and Thompson was passed, a resolution was introduced demanding that the Star support the state Farmer-Labor Party and the formation of a national farmer-labor party.

The resolution was introduced by Robly D. Cramer and ably supported by William Mahoney, J. F. Emme and Richard Wiggins. The chairman declared himself in doubt when a vive voce vote was taken and when a roll call was demanded a sleek parliamentarian arose and moved adjournment, which the chair declared carried. Cramer challenged the count on the vote but was not recognized.

Farmer-Labor Motion Carried.

Cramer's motion was then put against the chair's decision that the meeting had adjourned and it was carried unanimously.

Patriotism may be the last refuge of most scoundrels but the law is the refuge of others, among them Van Lear. Too hypocritical even for the Socialist Party he was expelled from it in 1919 and then consorted with the politicians of the non-partisan league, but the rank and file of that organization want a party of their own and recently took the league into their own hands.

The Star was Van Lear's last stand. With it he fought desperately to maintain some hold on the workers but he has now lost his last stronghold. The stockholders have repudiated him as a faithless servant, so he has repaired to the courts in his last extremity.

Offer of Labor Defense Council Based on 'A Week'

The Labor Defense Council seeing the great interest the readers of the DAILY WORKER have shown in the proposal to publish the new Russian novel, "A Week," serially have decided to give a copy of the book to any supporter of the council who will sell a complete $6.00 sheet of Ruthenberg appeal coupons.

The money realized from this sale of Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons will be devoted to financing the appeal of C. E. Ruthenberg, against his conviction for violations of the Michigan criminal syndicalism laws. Ruthenberg's case comes up before the Michigan Supreme court, March 1.

The attorneys prosecuting the Michigan cases make no secret of the fact that if this appeal can be won by the defense the cases against the 31 other Communists indicted in Michigan and now awaiting trial will go to pieces.

Any worker who wants to get behind the fight against the Michigan criminal syndicalism laws can get sheets of Ruthenberg appeal coupons from the Labor Defense Council, 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, and as soon as he has sold them will get a copy of "A Week."

Takes This Worker Two Days to Read One Copy of Daily

William F. Kruse, who has just completed a tour of the east for the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany, reports that the DAILY WORKER is being very well received all over the country. One man in Washington told him that when he first saw the paper he thought that it was rather small. It didn't compare with the large capitalist dailies in size he thought. There couldn't be much in it.

"But then I got to reading it and I'll be darned if there wasn't more in that paper that a worker would want to read than in a couple of capitalist dailies. No funnies, no silly serial stories, all straight news that a man wants to read. It takes me two days to finish a copy. There is so much good stuff in it that you have to read everything. I don't know if I will subscribe or not. The wife says I spend too much time reading it."

Playing with the Child Labor Problem

Coolidge talked about child labor. Several dozen amendments to the constitution have been handed in to Congress and the Senate. About a dozen petty bourgeois organizations are prancing hither and thither raving about the "poor children." Yet nothing is done. Experience tells us that nothing will be done.

The whole matter is a joke in the hands of the capitalist government. Two laws have been passed. The United States Supreme Court declared both unconstitutional for specific reasons. The first was thrown out because it was direct, interstate regulation. That, said the venerable, if somewhat foolish judges, interferes with the rights and sovereignty of the states. Well, congress is obliging (if not exactly careful of the interest of the American working children) and they passed another law providing for taxation on all products manufactured with the aid of child labor. Of course, any sensible worker knows how ridiculous such action is. It would require a veritable army to put such a law into effect, even if the United States Supreme Court didn't settle that matter for them. That law too was thrown onto the scrap heap which is symbolic of the monument of mildly pro-labor legislation.

In order to get around this move of the Supreme Court, the conglomeration of apologists for the medieval action of the American government has offered various amendment to the constitution. Some of them really are funny. One provides that child labor shall be abolished, but that the carrying out of the matter should be left to the state governments. Not one of the amendments is a clear negation of the exploitation of children. Gompers supports the mildest of them all, that offered by Senator McCormick, of Illinois.

After wading thru the gnarled mess of anti-labor and pro-corporation senators and congressmen, if the weak excuse for the exploitation of 2,500,000 children passes, it must go to the states for ratification. There are enough of them without any child labor laws at the present time to defeat the constitutional amendment, however mild and however ineffectual of the purpose for which is is intended, Just to think of the many years all this is going to take. The children still continue to slave—yes, their numbers grow and their wages decrease.

There are real remedies. But these are solely in the hands of the American working class. First, the mass farmer-labor party could carry on a far-reaching campaign against the murder of little children. The fight could be carried into the unions and put into every agreement signed by the unions—no children to be permitted to work in any industry in which union labor is employed. Equal pay for young and adult. A higher standard of living for the parents of the child laborers. A persistent campaign by every trade union paper against child labor, not on the basis of the sentimental slop handed out by Gompers, who is co-operating with those responsible for child labor, but on the basis of a clear expose of this horror of American child life.

The slogan of every workers' organization should be: No work for children under 18 years of age; vocational training for workers' children, under the direction of the unions. Then would begin a solution of the child labor problem.

Daugherty May Get Chance to Explain His Scabbing Policy

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Harry M. Daugherty will have a chance to explain to the country his activities against railroad shop strikers, coal miners and other workers, since he entered the Harding-Coolidge cabinet, and to explain his failure to act when naval oil reserves were being given away and scores of millions of dollars of war graft were being concealed.

Senator Wheeler of Montana has accepted Daugherty's offer to come before the Senate judiciary committee and be investigated. Wheeler will substitute an investigation resolution, which will pass the Senate, for his resolution demanding that Daugherty resign forthwith.

Wheeler will go before the committee as special examiner of the witness, and he will have the support of those who tried a year ago to have Daugherty impeached.

Assures Coolidge Vet Bonus Will Not Wreck the Treasury

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 14.—Passage of a bonus bill for former service men will not jeopardize the financial welfare of the nation, according to John R. Quinn, national commander of the American Legion.

In a telegram to President Coolidge, Quinn took issue with the president's stand and declared "the payment of this just obligation would be but a minor item in the nation's budget."

"The man who came to the rescue of his country in time of danger resents the insinuation that he would endanger his country in time of peace," Quinn said.

JOBS FEWER IN NEW YORK STATE REPORT SHOWS

Fall Continuous Over Three-Month Period

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 14.—According to the statement issued today by Industrial Commissioner Bernard L. Shientag of the State Department of Labor, "employment went down about one per cent in New York factories in January. The three successive decreases in November, December, and January have now brought the level of employment somewhat lower than it was in January of last year."

The report noted a drop in the metals, especially the heating apparatus, the railroad equipment factories, and the railway repair shops up-state.

"The decline in the metal industries in January was almost two per cent. In addition to the railway equipment plants, there were smaller decreases in some of the steel and architectural iron mills and in cutlery.

"The textile mills went lower in January. The silk and ribbon mills, the cotton mills and the knitting mills all reduced operations. The woolen mills showed varying tendencies but there were some large increases.

"A heavy seasonal decrease in the food manufactures affected chiefly the candy and cocoa plants. The canneries and fruit-pressing plants made further seasonal reductions. The flour and feed mills and the meat packing plants were somewhat more active."

Decline In Capital District.

There were also noted decreases in employment in paper box factories and in plants making soaps and perfumes.

"The Capitol district (Albany, Troy, Schenectady) showed the largest relative decline in employment of any of the industrial districts of the State. It was severely affected by the decrease in the railroad equipment factories and in the railway repair shops. The reduced activity in the shirt and collar factories also had its effect, and some of the knitting mills went lower. The only industries to show an upward tendency in the Capitol district were the automobile industry and printing.

"In the Buffalo district, also, the decreases in employment outweighed the increases but there were some important gains. The big decrease came, here also, in the metals because of the sharp reductions in the railway equipment factories and the railway repair shops. The State Employment Bureau reports many skilled mechanics and helpers are unemployed, and there is a surplus of unskilled labor.

Reductions in Rochester District.

"In the Rochester district the decrease in January was slight, but employment has been reduced recently in this section. The most important decrease was in shoes and that was not general. The wood manufactures went down a little and the usual seasonal decreases were evident in the food products group."

Syracuse witnessed some reductions in the steel mills, pottery plants, and food industries. The latter were also less active in the Yonkers district. There was little change in the Utica district.

In New York City employment reports indicated a slight improvement over the preceding month because of the marked advance in the men's and women's clothing industries. There were also seasonal decreases in the jewelry, men's neckwear, women's underwear, furs, leather bags, and similar industries in New York City.

"Binghampton was the only upstate district to show an increase in January. Several of the factories making photographic products and instruments added more employees."

Decrease In Good Months.

The continued decrease in employment in the last three months, which are supposed to be good business months, is causing much concern to many observers of industry in New York State. The Empire State has often been looked upon as an index to the general trend of business and manufacturing thruout the country. In this light, the three successive decreases in employment coupled with the fact that less are today employed in New York than there were in the corresponding period of last year before the height of 1923 prosperity was reached, are especially important.

Italy Sends Soviet Ambassador Over French Protests

ROME, Feb. 14.—Despite the strenuous efforts of the French ambassador, M. Barrere, to prevent the final sealing of the Russian treaty, the new Italian ambassador to Russia, Count Masoni, and the commercial representative, Commendator Marriani, are on their way to Moscow.

The treaty itself is a slap in the face to France and it is stated here in official circles that even after the signatures were attached to the treaty the French government made an effort to have Italy send only a charge d'affaires without plenipotentiary powers.

The fact that the British Labor Party government had recognized the Soviet government outweighed the protestations of the French.

Union Miners Have Undertaken to Run Mine at Equality, Ill.

BENTON, Ill., Feb. 14.— Union miners here have undertaken an experiment in cooperative production, operating the mine of the Gallatin Coal & Coke Co., Equality, Ill. The private owners were unable to make the mine pay, and it had not been operated for some time, being in the hands of a receiver. Water had flooded the mine, threatening damage beyond repair.

The local miners' union went into the mine, pumped out the water and repaired the damage. Then they went to the receiver and entered into an agreement to operate the mine, pay operating expenses and a fixed amount on each ton hoisted, in return for the sale price of the coal. The contract was approved by the receiver and ratified by the union. The agreement will expire April 1. The mine employs 115 men. These union miners are convinced of their ability to demonstrate the success of the workers' management and cooperative production.

Watch the "Daily Worker" for the first installment of "A Week," the great epic of the Russian revolution, by the brilliant young Russian writer, Iury Libedinsky. It will start soon.

RAILROAD JOBS GROWING FEWER, MONTH BY MONTH

73,760 Men Discharged Since Last August

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

The railroads of the country continued to reduce their forces in November, according to the monthly wage report of the interstate commerce commission. The total number of workers on the payrolls of all roads fell from 1,936,494 in October to 1,899,545 in November, a decrease of 2 per cent.

At the same time total wage payments declined from $271,005,542 to $249,686,024, or by nearly 8 per cent. The resulting decline in average per capita earnings from $140 to $132 is due largely to the fact that there were less working days in the latter month.

Steady Job Decline.

Since the peak month of August, when 1,973,505 workers were employed the carriers have reduced forces by 73,760 or nearly 4 per cent. But of ever greater significance to the wage earners of the country is the reduction in the number of full-time jobs on the railroads during the period for this is the real index of the general wage situation. On November 15 there were 81,246 fewer full time jobs for hourly paid workers on the railroads of the United States than there were on August 15. This means a reduction of nearly 5 per cent in the opportunity to earn wages on the railroads.

June	1,689,506	$128.70
July	1,711,379	128.60
August	1,713,099	131.80
September	1,697,851	125.60
October	1,600,581	135.00
November	1,631,843	128.10

Maintenance Men Hit.

Employes of the maintenance of way and maintenance of equipment forces have been chiefly affected by the lay-offs of the last few months. This follows the regular precedent by which railroads manipulate their net profits as the occasion seems to require. Between August and November the number of full time jobs paid for in the shops has decreased by 21,136 and the number of full time jobs is the maintenance of way department by 66,584.

Altho the average wage paid to workers paid on the hourly basis amounted to $128.10 in November, this included a considerable amount of overtime. Straight time earnings averaged only $110.70 for the month or at an hourly rate of 57.2 cents.

To alleviate to some degree the ever-growing worse condition of the German proletariat by establishing another Soup Kitchen in Berlin as soon as possible, the Chicago Division of the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany with all its affiliated organizations, is arranging a city-wide canvass to raise funds for German Relief. This German Relief Day will be held on Sunday, Feb. 24.

Headquarters are being established all over the city where volunteers may enroll and where they will be furnished with supplies on the German Relief Day.

All working men, women and children of Chicago, who consider every struggle of workers their own struggle, will file out on Sunday, Feb. 24, rain or shine, bringing before the workers of Chicago the importance of immediate relief for Germany's workers, and soliciting their aid.

The committee in charge of the German Relief Day is confident that the workers of Chicago will give one day of their busy city life, entirely to work for relief of those who are struggling to wrest themselves from the desperate clutches of the dying capitalist order.

All those who have not yet volunteered should immediately send their names and addresses to the office of The Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany, Room 307, 166 W. Washington Street, or to the office of The DAILY WORKER.

"Non-Cooperation" Philippine Rule Towards Wood

MANILA, P. I., Feb. 14.— The Philippine legislature adjourned yesterday. The most notable thing about the session of the legislature just closed was its notable drift toward a policy of non-co-operation on the part of the native law makers.

It is rumored that General Wood will veto the appropriation bills which have made serious cuts in the appropriations for his department in order that the administration might continue operation on last year's budget. This would be permitted by the organic laws under which the Philippine law makers legislate.

Land law amendments that would have turned public lands over to the rubber interests were part of the legislation proposed by Wood which was defeated by the legislature.

Queensland Free from Interference by Old John Bull

(By The Federated Press)

BRISBANE, Queensland, Feb. 14.—The Labor State of Queensland is well ahead of all the other Australian states in the matter of constitutional legislation. The Queensland people have complete self-government without any interference by the British government in any local question. Foreign questions do not come within the province of the state legislatures but are federal matters.

There is no upper house in the legislature to revise or nullify the legislation of the popular chamber. The upper house has been abolished by the simple procedure of swamping it with Labor members and voting it out of existence. There can be no further grant to Queenslanders of imperial honors, more especially those which confer titles upon the recipients.

The governor can only act upon the advice of responsible Queens and people, while they retain the confidence of parliament. The Labor government is now moving to secure the abolition of imperially appointed governors and the substitution therefor of local Australian-born governors, who shall be appointed on the nomination of the government, elected by the people.

Carpenters Split into Dual Unions in Canadian Town

(By The Federated Press)

OTTAWA, Feb. 14.—There is a split in the ranks of the carpenters here, the majority of the old union going over to the international (U.S.) while a minority is retaining the charter from the British headquarters. This split is an outcropping of the long fight between the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, a British organization, and the United Brotherhood, which has its head office in Indianapolis.

Ten years ago a working agreement was made between the two parent bodies, by which Canadian branches of the Amalgamated might affiliate for trade purposes with the United Brotherhood. There has been some friction over the working of this agreement, however, and recently the Ottawa lodge of the Amalgamated applied for full membership in the United. The Canadian organizer of the Amalgamated, John Doggett, has succeeded in getting some 20 or 30 of the old members to retain their British charter.

Legal action is being threatened over the ownership of the property of the Amalgamated union.

Sees Slaughter of Civilians Behind Lines in Next War

(By The Federated Press)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 14.—"The next war is rapidly approaching," said Benedict Crowell, assistant secretary of war in Wilson's was cabinet, in addressing an assembly of collegians here. The league of nations is failing, and France, with the largest standing army in the history of the world, dominates a Europe seething with cupidity, envy, and hatreds enough to make half a dozen wars.

Civilians will be fair game in the approaching war, says Crowell. "Airplanes will jump over armies and attack the directing brains behind. I believe that combing of cities is not only justifiable, but will be carried out in the next war. Supply depots and junction points behind the lines will have to be destroyed, and this necessarily means killing civilians as well as soldiers.

"Indeed, the quickest way to end the next war will be to destroy the morale of the civilians behind the lines with all the means of destruction at your command."

Labor Faker Is Leading Fight for Insurance Sharks

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Ernest Greenwood, former American representative of the international labor office of the league of nations, and promoter of "safe" labor news, has been charged by Representative Fitzgerald of Ohio with being a lobbyist for the insurance combine which is bitterly opposing the passage of the Fitzgerald workmen's compensation bill for the District of Columbia. This bill includes the state insurance fund feature, which excludes private insurance companies from the profits of this industrial accident business. Greenwood is vice president of the local board of education, and represents a group of insurance concerns.

Trade union legislative agents support Fitzgerald, and claim that the insurance ring is spending thousands of dollars to defeat the state insurance fund plan.

RAILROAD OWNED COURT DISMISSES SHOP CRAFTS CASE

$15,000,000 Back Pay Stays with Pennsy

By FREDERICK KUH.
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

NEW YORK.—The legal action for injunction, brought by six important shopcrafts against the Pennsylvania railroad, has been dismissed in court by Federal Judge Dickinson. This decision, if upheld, will mean the plunder of $15,000,000 back pay, which the railroad company is refusing to deliver to the 60,000 workers who belong to System Federation No. 90.

The trial, which has terminated in Philadelphia, grew out of the federation's application for mandatory injunctions to force the railroad to comply with orders issued by the U. S. railroad labor board. The board had fixed wage rates for the various crafts and granted the workers the privilege of designating their own organization to represent them in dealings with the employers.

Obeys As It Pleases

Previously, the company had shown readiness to obey the decisions of the labor board. That was when the board had ordered wage reductions. The railroad officials had also recognized the authority of the board in removing the national agreement, negotiated between the labor unions and the U. S. railroad administration during the period of federal control. That agreement had regulated wages, hours of labor and working conditions on the railroads.

But when the decisions of the board imperilled the open shop movement on the railroads, the companies no longer considered the government body competent.

The Pennsylvania immediately set out to create fake labor organizations, officered by its own agents, which agreed to accept wage rates far below those fixed by the board. The employers then staged supposed negotiations with their company unions and agreed upon working conditions which were also in violation of the board's verdict.

60,000 Workers Affected

The System Federation holds that these actions constitute a conspiracy to deprive federation members of legal rights, granted to them under the transportation act. The federation embraces the machinists, electricians, boilermakers, blacksmiths, sheet metal workers and carmen—more than 60,000 strong.

The suit for $15,000,000 was based upon a modification of the national agreement between the railway administration and unions during the war. The agreement set up a uniform wage for shopcraft employes. Under pressure from the companies, the board later reduced the scale. But not content with this reduction, the railroad employers lowered wages still further. It is the difference between these two rates which comprises the $15,000,000, claimed by the organized workers.

Judge Dickinson stated that the federal courts are not empowered to enforce decisions of the railroad labor board.

The Federated Press is informed that the suit will be carried by the shopcrafts to the circuit court of appeals, and will be heard there in March. Should this court, too, render an anti-labor decision, the unions will appeal to the U. S. supreme court.

Open Bank In Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 14.—Local labor unions are coming to the support of The Peoples Bank of Los Angeles which will open on or about March 10. It will have the prestige and backing of the three branch banks, San Bernardino Valley bank, Needles bank, and Bakersfield National bank, according to announcement by President Walter F. McCaleb of the local institution. Control of the Bakersfield bank was secured by the purchase of McCaleb and his associates of $50,000 worth of stock.

Carpenters' unions number 158 and 426 purchased $6,500 worth of stock in the bank here each. The Plasterers' union bought $10,000 and the Culinary Workers' Alliance of San Pedro, $6,000. The sale of stock will close March 1.

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

"The Ten Commandments."

"The Ten Commandments," the name of the production, suggests somewhat the character of the new movie at the Woods Theatre. The first part of this picture, is a masterful interpretation of the historic sections of the Bible. It is one of the most magnificent pieces of work ever undertaken on the screen. Especially beautiful and impressive are the scenes which describe Moses leading the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, and the one in which Moses receives his "God's message—The Ten Commandments.

The second and third part of the picture reverts back to this 20th century civilization and undertakes to prove the misfortunes that beset people who violate the law of God. The hero, or villain, I have not yet been able to make out which character he interprets, is a man of brains who insists upon thinking he is wiser than God and starts on his career of making money thru breaking the ten commandments. Of course in the end he is punished by God. And of course his brother who was an honest hard working carpenter, who religiously stuck to the Bible and remained a poor workingman, is rewarded with a happy existence ever after. Too bad that such a wonderful production should be spoiled with such piffle.

This picture will be accepted by the "pillars of capitalist society" and so its financial success is assured so far as big money loans and donations go. But the worker will not be fooled one bit. The worker understands that the idea propagated in this picture is the oldest and poorest attempt at keeping the minds of the workers doped.

Taken as a work of art, apart from the moral tone and the cheap propaganda of the production, it is truly exquisite. There are several big scenes that give opportunity for masterful acting and the actors do a good piece of work.

Congressmen Admit Move Is Attack on Public Ownership

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—In reporting favorably to the House a proposed constitutional amendment, forbidding the issuance of tax-exempt securities, the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, led by Chairman Green, give away their most significant motive in these words:

"It (exemption of public bonds from taxation) also operates as an inducement to every municipality to have all kinds of public utilites owned and operated by the municipality itself,.... It is obvious that this condition of affairs makes it difficult for public utilities privately conducted to maintain their financial condition, for just in proportion as the money can be obtained cheaper on bonds that are tax exempt, the rate becomes higher on those which are subject to levy."

In other words, abolish tax exempt public securities, and kill this dangerous movement for public ownership of public utilities.

The grief which colored workers feel for the death of Nicolai Lenin, was expressed in the following cable which the African Blood Brotherhood sent to the president of the Russian Republic:

"Representing advanced Negro workers of America, we mourn with the toilers of Soviet Russia and the world the loss of the greatest liberator of our age—Nicolai Lenin."

The African Blood Brotherhood is represented at the Negro All Race Assembly or Sanhedrin, now sitting in Chicago, by seven delegates. All are supporting the resolution for the recognition of the Russian Republic.

Still Use War Substitutes.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 14—"In some cases I believe war substitutes are still being used in bread," Mrs. W. H. Hart, president of the Indianapolis housewives' league, declared in commenting in charges made in Washington that a bread trust is robbing American homes of $1,000,000 a day.

"Maybe an investigation will help, but it looks like the trust organization is air tight."

On Top of the World

So far westward that it is traveling east again, the course of American imperialism wends its way.

J. P. Morgan and Company are floating a bond issue of $150,000,000 for the Japanese government. They are 6 per cent bonds, sold at 92½ and will therefore yield about 7½ per cent to investors—a rate of interest that will ruin any government.

This is the largest foreign loan negotiated in the United States since the $500,000,000 Anglo-French financing in 1915 and in respect to the length of time the loan is to run—thirty years—is the only one of its kind handled by American financiers. The Dutch and Swiss issues of the same loan are to be paid in American dollars.

This event marks the consolidation of American financiers' world supremacy and as the bulk of the proceeds of the loan will be spent in the United States, little of the liquid capital required will actually leave the country.

Japan is in a bad way. To the reconstruction problems and expense caused by the earthquake there is added the growing unrest among the industrial workers. Her imperialistic adventures in China have not been of the most successful character and undoubtedly one of the unmentioned concessions made by Japan in return for the much-needed loan is relinquishment of part of her gains in China to American interests.

General Dawes is slated for head of the new international bank that is designed to put Germany on her feet with—actually at the feet of—American capital.

W. P. G. Harding, former head of the federal reserve bank is to take over the financial management of Hungary.

All these ventures, say the capitalist press, are aids to American prosperity. Certainly they indicate that the American wage-earners toil hard and fast when the rulers allow them to work or such huge surpluses could not be piled up.

They are made freely because back of them stands the army and navy and the will to plunge the nation into war to collect from a defaulting debtor. These loans force whole peoples to pay tribute to American finance-capital, they strengthen the exploiters in the war against the workers at home while from their overflowing treasuries comes the golden flood that debauches the labor leaders, publicists and public officials.

Triumphantly the Chicago Tribune proclaims:

The heads of the American labor movement, blind to the dangers that their followers face, conduct a war against the workers and farmers government of Soviet Russia—the only powerful enemy of capitalist imperialism.

Brisbanism

Arthur Brisbane says :

> Mr. Mellon is working for the people for nothing. He can make at his own business in two days or two hours what the people pay him in a year.

We do not disagree with any part of this statement except that which says he is working for the people for nothing.

Mr. Andrew Mellon, as secretary of the treasury, is not working for anyone but himself and a few of his class. He could not make, or save, as much money as a private individual as he can as secretary of the treasury or he would not be in office.

The truth of the matter is that Andrew Mellon, like Daugherty, Fall and other cabinet crooks, is using his office to advance his personal fortunes and doing it in a far more brazen manner than either of these two discredited servants of the oil interests.

No one knows just how much the tax measure proposed by Mellon will save him because no one knows exactly what his income is.

The amount admittedly runs into the millions and if Mellon makes more than this in "two days or two hours" he is much wealthier than we thought he was.

As the Whitewasher Extraordinary to His Majesty, King Capital, Arthur Brisbane has his work cut out for him these days.

King Tut is not resting very peaceably, but it is a safe bet that he is envied by a lot of Washington politicians caught in the Teapot Dome exposures.

Oily to bed and oily to rise makes a man stealthy, wealthy and then it had to happen in a presidential year.

There Are No Classes---?

This is a lively season at Palm Beach. Very lively! The picture of Colonel Dupont, powder millionaire, with silk stockings and knickers, conversing with Mr. Moore, Ambassador to Spain, in straw hat and white pants, promenading in the bright sunlight of that blessed climate, appears on the pictorial pages of our large capitalist dailies.

Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, accompanied by another millionaire's wife, can be seen reclining on the sands in the cool shade of a fancy parasol, watching the females of the Smart Set display as much of the "female form divine" as the environment permits.

The correspondent of the Daily Worker tells us that the chief topic of conversation in Florida—where the millionaires gather, is not the housing problem, unemployment or reduction in wages—but—the latest wrinkle in bathing suits. According to the description given of this article of wear it is principally conspicuous by its absence.

Hairless poodles are in great demand to go with the almost invisible bathing suit. Our young bloods are enjoying life in the sunny climate of the South. Even Attorney-General Daugherty, fleeing from the burning oil-can, found peace and comfort there.

But all the people in America are not at Palm Beach. While the idle rich revel in seminudity and inebriety in the playgrounds of the nation the slaves, who produce the wealth, which they squander, are confined to dreary tenements in the large cities, or on bankrupt farms in the county, using up their energies in the ceaseless struggle to make ends meet. Their wives cannot afford to wear excusably inadequate finery; they are lucky to get sufficient clothes of any sort to protect themselves from the cold. Their husbands do not wear silk stockings and knickers; they are more concerned with holding their jobs than with setting the fashion.

We are told there are no classes in America. Of course not. Anybody who can accumulate a few millions can go to Palm Beach and promenade with the Duponts, Moores, Hearsts, wear "Florida Special" bathing suits, tote hairless pups around and forget about the wicked class struggle. There are no classes in America, except in the imagination of communists and other evil-minded people, who are jealous of our millionaires. Of course we have rich and poor, but are we not told that the poor "we shall always have with us?"

The proper course for our millions of wage slaves to follow is to practice thrift, save at least one dime a day and, if they live long enough to save a million, they can rise into the smart set, go to Palm Beach and do everything our favored few are allowed to do. It is quite simple.

Lots of Opportunity

Pessimists keep croaking that this is no longer a land of opportunity, in spite of evidence to the contrary. In fact, our opinion is that opportunity never knocked at the doors of wide-awake American citizens with more persistence than it does today. Let us give you a few examples:

Albert B. Fall was a poor man only a few years ago. By persistent effort he worked his way up in politics, got landed in Harding's cabinet as Secretary of the Interior and by a judicious use of his office accumulated enough wealth to enable him to quit a paltry $12,000 a year job and live like a real fellow. Why, money was coming his way in satchelfuls.

Charles P. Forbes had a checkered career. He experienced the ups and downs that any fullblooded 100 per cent American goes thru before success crowns his efforts, but he finally got there. Persistence is the key to success. What he did in order to reach the summit need not be recorded here. Our readers are referred to the investigation of the graft in the Veterans' bureau for the details. Mr. Forbes shoulder-slapped, glad-handed and smiled his way up to the White House and was placed in charge of the work of disposing of hundreds of millions of dollars yearly. This Mr. Forbes did in a highly efficient manner to his own satisfaction at least, if not to that of the veterans, who won the war. Self-interest is the great motive-power of human progress, say our teachers. Mr. Forbes developed the idea one hundred per cent.

There are others, from William Gibbs McAdoo, who followed the circuitious route of marrying a president's daughter, accepting a cabinet job and finally striking oil, Leo Koretz, who cleaned up several millions of dollars on an oil well located in the Chicago Loop, to the lowly "Yellow Kid" Weil, who a few weeks ago transferred $30,000 from the pockets of a Detroit millionaire to Mr. Weil's bank account.

Is this not sufficient to convince the most skeptical that opportunity has not fled this country? Financial success can be achieved in the United States provided one does not make the mistake of working for a living.

The beauties of Ku Klux Klan law and order were unveiled in Herrin day before yesterday when a hospital, filled with patients, was riddled with bullets by the valiant forces of law enforcement under the leadership of Glenn Young.

There will be peace in Herrin—and other places—when not one, but several hospitals are filled with these bravos.

Anyone interested in knowing where the economic interests of the legal profession are can learn something from the difficulty encountered by Coolidge in finding a lawyer of any prominence who is not an attorney for some branch of the oil business.

START FIGHT TO FREE CONNORS, LABOR DEFENDER

Opposed Syndicalism Act; Got Five Years

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Feb. 14.—Judge C. O. Busick, author of the anti-I. W. W. injunction, has sentenced Tom Connors, secretary, California branch General Defense committee, to one to five years in San Quentin for "jury tampering"—which consisted of circularizing Sacramento with the rest of the state in favor of a bill to repeal the criminal syndicalism act. The case will be appealed and Connors is expected to be set free very soon on appeal bond.

Persecutors Are Defied.

CHICAGO, Feb. 14.—"The conviction of Tom Connors in Sacramento on a charge of 'corruptly attempting to influence a juror' is one of the most serious things which has happened for some time," declared Harry Feinberg, secretary, General Defense committee, here. "It seems that the instructions of the judge, utterly disregarding the specific offense charged in the indictment, were responsible for the verdict."

Feinberg has wired a protest to the district attorney of San Francisco, as follows:

"Be advised that the General Defense committee will continue to circularize the citizens of California who are potential jurors in whatever manner it deems best. The latest action of the Sacramento court can only be compared with the old czaristic government that has reaped what it has sowed. Your boast that this is the first conviction of its kind in this country shows that anything is possible under Judge Busick's court."

Connors Circularized State.

In March, 1923, Connors, acting as head of the California committee, conducted a campaign to have the criminal syndicalism law of California repealed, mailed 20,000 multigraphed copies of a letter claiming that it was a product of war hysteria, and violated constitutional rights. One of these letters fell into the hands of H. D. Arnold, one of a panel of jurors drawn soon afterward to try a criminal syndicalism case. Connors was indicted April 2, 1923, on two counts: criminal syndicalism and corruptly attempting to influence a juror.

The criminal syndicalism charge was dropped. The first trial, July, 1923, ended in a disagreement. Before the second trial, which began Jan. 28, 1924, counsel for Connors filed affidavits of prejudice against Judge Busick and argued for a change of venue. Busick denied his prejudice, even tho he had been but a few days before reprimanded by the California district court of appeals for wrongful instruction of a jury, to the prejudice of the accused, in a criminal syndicalism trial. He is also the judge who granted, a short time ago, the blanket injunction against the I. W. W.

On Feb. 1, Connors was convicted and on Feb. 5 was sentenced by Judge Busick to five years in the state penitentiary, and bail pending appeal was denied.

Liberties Union Protests.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 14.—Declaring the conviction of Tom Connors, secretary, California branch, General Defense committee, under the anti-criminal syndicalism law "an outrage and a disgrace," the Los Angeles Civil Liberties union adopted a resolution condemning the action of the Sacramento county superior court.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 14.—"Lower the price of gasoline or we'll fight to nationalize the oil industry," was the ultimatum delivered today by Governor Charles W. Bryan, of Nebraska.

Bryan joined Governor W. H. McMaster of South Dakota in a campaign against what they termed "a nation-wide oil trust composed of the Standard Oil Company, independent concerns and allied interests."

"We're going to bust this trust wide open," Bryan declared, "prices are increased at will. Last week's increase was unjust. The public is being robbed of millions of dollars and Nebraskans are going to have protection."

Both governors have appealed to President Coolidge for federal action.

"If the government won't act, we will campaign to arouse public sentiment," Bryan said emphatically "There can be but one result—abolition of private oil interests and consequent government regulation and price fixing."

When gasoline prices were hoisted last summer Bryan and McMasters bought carload lots and sold it at cost.

"We can't do that now," Bryan declared. "Oil producing agencies have combined outside the state. They regulate the price of oil shipments to Nebraska and begin with increases at the refineries.

"We cannot compete with them because we have no private source from which to purchase.

"If we bought and sold at cost now we would lose by virtue of increases at the refineries. The increase was caused by a combination of retailers. Now all oil producing agencies seem to have combined and are forcing the price upward and gouging the public.

"This oil combine has outraged all decency. The confidence of the public in the government is shaken. Senatorial inquiries have ceased to frighten the oil concerns who continue to tie up the producing agencies in one gigantic combination with a strangle hold on the consumer."

Tin Workers Demand Release of McLachlan

The Irondale Lodge No. 9, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of Hamilton, Ontario, passed a resolution calling on the Canadian government to release James B. McLachlan, deposed president of the Nova Scotia miners who received a two years sentence as a result of the strike against the British Empire Steel Company in which the miners became involved.

(1) We, the members of Irondale Lodge No. 9 of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of North America, petition the Federal Government and the Provincial Government of Nova Scotia to release from prison the men that were arrested during the steel strike of July and August of 1923, believing that was a frame-up on the part of someone to break the morale of the strikers and to drive the men into submission and break Organized Labor in Sydney.

(2) We, as loyal Canadian citizens demand the release of J. B. McLachlan and other members of Organized Labor, and in doing so, base our demands on evidence given. We believe it is a gross injustice to the workers of Canada and call upon the several Governments to rectify the wrong done.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, Feb. 14.—The eight-hour day is still upon the statute books of Finland, but in reality it is a myth.

The government has annulled the law by the simple trick of granting more and more exemptions to it. Among the industries in which exemptions are granted are the following: building industry in rural districts, repair work on railways, docks, and bridges; forestry and lumber work; railways, postoffice and telegraph offices, the customs department, hospitals and prisons.

The trade unions have entered vigorous protest, thus far without success.

Refuse Equal Pay.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Feb. 14.—The federal government has refused to grant a claim for equal pay for the sexes employed in the federal civil service. The claim was refused on the ground that the wage fixed for a man had to be adequate to maintain himself, a wife, and two or three children, while that fixed for a woman was simply to provide normal necessities for a single woman living away from home.

Normal In Australia.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Feb. 14.—Save for a few sectional disputes, the coal mining industry in Australia is now about normal, and at most of the mines there is little or no unemployment.

Capital Centralizes on Clothing Industry, Says Sidney Hillman

Concentration of capital in the clothing industry is continuing, says Sidney Hillman, president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who discussed union conditions with The Federated Press here.

"Instead of the drift into the smaller towns away from the strongly unionized centers, we find that capital in the clothing industry is largely found in the larger communities and tends to increase in amount and concentration there," Hillman said. "A few manufacturers each year attempt to set up plants in out of the way localities but the stream flows in the other direction.

The so-called Golden Rule non-union clothing shop in Cincinnati, run by an employer named Nash who gets the platform for his goods at religious conferences on the strength of his "golden rule," was condemned by Hillman. It pays lower wages and enforces worse conditions than any union shop, he said, while the alleged co-operative features are a delusion.

The Russian-American Industrial corporation, organized by the Amalgamated and now an integral part of the Russian clothing industry, is preparing to issue another dividend to its stockholders, Hillman said.

Solon Upshaw, of Georgia, Ku Kluxer, Judging by Speech

CLEVELAND, Feb. 14.—Congressman W. D. Upshaw, speaking at the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church recently indicated that he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan when he boasted of having blocked a resolution to investigate the hooded order by moving an amendment to investigate all secret or limited organizations. This was a rap at the Catholic church and its various secret societies.

Besides his avowed sympathy with the Klan the ranting of Upshaw against the aliens and his general lack of intelligence placed him in that intellectual class from which the Klan is largely recruited.

He decared there were 39,000,000 in the United States who are dominated by foreign beliefs. They should be Americanized or sent back to where they came from.

To prove that he was a typical Babbit Upshaw sang three songs to the assembled worshippers of Jehovah. One of them, entitled "Turning Down the Kaiser's Mustache," the followers of Jesus applauded vigorously. The few intelligent people in the audience summed up the value of the lecture in the word "Pshaw."

Harry Davis, former mayor of Cleveland is sentimental. Commenting on the riot which occured in that city on May day, 1919, when rowdies armed with clubs and policemen on boot and on horseback broke up a socialist parade, expressed his desire to buy two of the old horses the city is planning to sell. "I guess there is a bit of sentiment behind my wanting the horses," said Davis, "most of the served when I was Mayor here and several of them were used to quell the memorable May Day riot."

The local Scripps-Howard paper has the following comment on this statement: "If Mr. Davis wishes a real souvenir of the so-called riot, he should buy one of the motor trucks that was stationed in East 9th Street, hours before the 'riot' filled with rowdies armed with bricks and clubs and driven by chaffeurs who were instructed to charge into the marchers and break up the parade at any cost." The workers of Cleveland who were peacefully celebrating the international day of jubilation of the working class of the world had received a permit from Mayor Davis to march, but, lick-spittle that he is, he obeyed the orders of the capitalists and sent his police to smash the heads of the people it was his duty to protect.

Is France willing to trade the Virgin Islands to the United States for the French debt? According to a statement published in a Paris paper recently, the subject has been discussed in Washington, tho U. S. officials have denied there is any truth in the report. The alleged French proposition would turn over the West India Islands to the United States, while the latter would wipe off its slate the French debt and assume the responsibility of the French debt to France.

American imperialists are of the opinion that their government should own more islands in the West Indies for strategic reasons. This was really the motive behind the purchase of the Danish islands during the war which cost the government $25,000,000. The French debt however, is three billions and the administration does not value the French island possessions at anything near that figure. Perhaps the United States government will eventually accept the islands or anything else the French may offer in lieu of the three billion loan which will never in all probability be paid.

The Chicago Tribune has added another liar to its list of foreign correspondents. He is stationed at Berlin. The Riga prevaricator was growing stale, and he needed a rest. The new man is giving a good account of himself and may deserve the iron cross if the Kaiser ever gets back to the throne. The Tribune is very anxious to see Trotsky fill a neat fitting overcoat of cold clay and as the possibility of Leon's departure to the world from which sinners never return is only equal to that of any other mortal, the correspondents of the World's Greatest Liar in Riga and Berlin, weave imaginary yarns with Trotzky playing the role of applicant for speedy interment. The latest act of this imaginary Trotzky was to hurl a defy at the Third Internationale and challenge the Cheka. Moscow is getting each day its daily thrill and life is perking up noticeably around the Kremlin.

Bolshevism faces France, declared M. Tardieu in attacking the Poincare financial bill which contains a provision for a 20 per cent tax increase. The Clemenceau supporter is not far wrong. The rule of the workers hovers like a Damocles sword over all the capitalist governments in the world and the French government being one of the most reactionary is liable to go thru the experience before very long.

Bishop William Montgomery Brown is at last liable to have the opportunity of facing his accusers in the house of bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Since he wrote "Communism and Christianism" the revolutionary bishop has been under constant fire but his enemies did not dare bring the case into the clerical court. The charges were filed by Bishops A. C. A. Hall of Vermont, Joseph M. Francis of Indianapolis and Warren L. Gravett of West Virginia. Bishop Brown is charged with "holding and distributing thru a book 'Communism and Christianism' certain doctrines contrary to those held by the Protestant Episcopal Church of America." The Bishop will fight.

An epidemic of bank failures is sweeping the country but the public is getting rather used to it and bank crashes are no longer played up on the front pages. Banks in rural sections of the country are shutting their doors daily. Here in Chicago during the past year many of them have given up the ghost. The latest to come in for undesirable publicity is the State Commercial and Savings bank, located at 1935 Milwaukee Avenue. The bank faces a receivership after it has closed its doors by order of state bank examiners. The great majority of the deposits in the bank were the savings of workers. The poor wage slave is fleeced in the shop and if he does manage to save a little and puts it in the bank for a rainy day, he stands a good chance of seeing some grafter running away with it.

Watch the "Daily Worker" for the first installment of "A Week," the great epic of the Russian revolution, by the brilliant young Russian writer, Iury Libedinsky. It will start soon.

OIL MEN PAID STOCK LOSSES OF OFFICIALS

U. S. Scandal Makes Britons Forget Troubles

BRITAIN IS FACED BY GIANT TIEUP

One Million Dockers Threaten Strike Today

LONDON, Feb. 15.—One million dock workers prepared today to quit work tomorrow and tie up every port in the United Kingdom unless a last minute settlement cancels the strike order.

Scenes at the huge docks of the port of London at daybreak were of unprecedented activity, as shipping companies speeded efforts to clear cargoes before the impending paralysis of transports should set in.

Seek to Break Deadlock.

Dock workers executives and employers were in conference seeking to break the deadlock that has existed since Feb. 1[illegible]

The threatened strike is national in scope. It was voted at a meeting of national delegates representing the Transport and General Workers' Union, (300,000 members) the National Union of General Workers (443,000), the National Amalgamated Union of Labor (170,000), United Order of General Laborers, (150,000), Amalgamated Society of Enginemen, Motormen, Electricians, etc., (40,000) and other similar organizations.

Demand Wages Restored.

The men's complaint is that wages, since 1920, have fallen from 16 shillings a day in the large ports and 15 shillings a day in the small ports, to 10 shillings and 9 shillings respectively.

They ask reversion to the former rates and a guaranteed week.

In the larger British ports today there are more workers than jobs. Consequently the men line up at dawn and a foreman picks in order the number he needs for the day.

LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS GETTING READY TO STRIKE

"Take Back Expelled Membership," Demand

A strike committee of seven has been elected by local 100, comprising the Dress and Skirt Makers' of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, to set a date for a walkout in Chicago, if the final overtures made by the union to the bosses are rejected.

Strike talk along Market Street had filled Wicker Park Hall, with local 100 members who manifested an intense interest in the possible battle against the arrogance of the employers who have flatly refused to discuss any change in the present unsatisfactory agreement which expires on Monday, February 18.

Report was made upon efforts to secure additional concessions from the organized employers, who are only a small section of the trade. Employers are to be classified in three groups; firstly, eleven large firms that organized in an association which had signed the expiring agreement; secondly, forty or fifty firms which had signed agreements individually with the union and thirdly, the non-union shops.

Union Overtures Rejected.

After letters warning of the expiring agreement had been sent to the first and second groups, the first group's association representatives and attorney had held two conferences with the International Ladies' Garment Workers representatives on Feb. 8 and 13, both without results owing to the overbearing attitude of the association's spokesmen, particularly its lawyer, in refusing even

ARMY TURNS HERRIN OVER TO BIG BIZ

Rotarians, Babbits and Legion to Rule

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 15.—Herrin is no longer ruled by the Ku Klux Klan. That task is now assumed by the Chamber of Commerce. Major General Milton Foreman went to Herrin ostensibly to restore law and order.

What he actually accomplished was to organize the bankers and business men and some labor officials, whose names are kept a secret for obvious reasons with a view to deposing the regularly elected officials of Williamson County, and establish a dictatorship of the so-called "non-partisan" elements under the leadership of the American Legion.

The work of the Ku Klux Klan was too crude. The new regime is expected to function more smoothly and effectively but more detrimental to the interests of organized labor.

Young Not Arrested.

The militia took no action against the Ku Klux Klan which violated the law in assuming dictatorial power in Herrin, and threw its officials in jail. S. Glenn Young, Klan brigand, was disarmed. He still remains in Williamson County and tho he is indicted his arrest is not yet reported.

The decision to withdraw the troops was arrived at after Judge E. N. Bowed announced that on his own initiative he had decided to call a special grand jury on March 3rd, to fix culpability for the riots. The American Legion, Klansmen and anti-Klansmen alike, agreed to offer themselves as deputy bailiffs to the court. The business elements are stepping on each other's heels in their hurry to get on the Chamber of Commerce bandwagon.

Negro Workers Get Cause Before Race Congress Despite Miller; Demand Unions Drop Color Line

The Negro All-Race Assembly, or Sanhedrin, closed late last night with the Workers Party representatives winning thru a declaration of a campaign for removing the color line in the labor unions still discriminating against the Negro.

This labor program calls for "An appeal to the American Federation of Labor for the fullest and equal recognition of Negro workers, in practice as well, as in theory," and it demands that the Negro press give its full co-operation in educating Negro workers to the need of organization.

Machine Revising Labor Report.

At the last moment, before The DAILY WORKER went to press, it was discovered that Dean Kelly Miller's appointed committee on "Permanent Results," was attempting to revise the labor program and that its revision would not be submitted to the Sanhedrin.

It is not believed, however, that the most important feature will be stricken out.

The Workers Party educational program calling for a constitutional amendment forbidding any segregation of races will be accepted in modified form by the education committee, but its findings will also go before the committee for Permanent Results.

Real Estate Sharks Oppose.

Influence of real estate sharks of the Negro race appears to have killed the most vital clause in the workers report on housing which attacks the segregation evil by demanding that all landlords be compelled to let their houses to the first comer, regardless of race, at listed prices. Final copies of the resolutions as modified by the Committee on Permanent Results, will be printed in the next issue of The DAILY WORKER if they are ready then.

Labor Will Force Issue.

Negro labor will continue to function in the All Race movement to force thru more and more of its program for the betterment of the workers and farmers who represent 98 per cent of the Race—however much this labor program is opposed by Dean Miller and the business men of the Race working with him.

Permanent organization of the Sanhedrin is being effected as this is being written. Seven men will be selected by the committee for permanent results and these seven men will run the organization until the next Congress.

Miller Represents Government.

Dean Miller will sit on the temporary governing body of seven, so the too-respectable, negative policy is in danger of continuing until the next congress which may not be called for a year. Dean Miller's policy is one that reflects the Negro policy of the government. He is professor of sociology at Howard University, a government subsidized institution at Washington, D. C. Working with him are the most conservative elements in the Race—exploiters of labor and professional men who cater to white capitalists or gain by the maintenance of the policy of segregation.

The committee of seven will function until the next congress which will be elected by all Negro organizations that wish to join. Each national organization will be allowed five delegates, with an additional one for every 50,000 members; and state organizations will be represented at a decreased rate. The final shape of the new constitution is being worked out in committee and will be

LONDON, Feb. 16—The Teapot Dome disclosures have altered the whole course of the forthcoming presidential elections in the United States, the Daily Express said today. "The situation created by the Washington scandal may have a world wide effect."

The British press today featured on front pages the situation in Washington, temporarily sidetracking the labor government and its troubles, the impending dock strike, reparations, etc.

$1,000,000 SLUSH FUND AIDED LOSERS

New Investigations Start; McLean Summoned

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Officials high in the government lost heavily in stock market plunges a year or more ago and a $1,000,000 "slush fund" was used to cover their losses, according to private information given today as a tip to the Senate committee investigating the oil reserves scandal.

When the plight of the officials became known to some of their friends in Wall Street, $1,000,000 is said to have been raised and transferred from a New York to a Washington bank.

Relation of the $1,000,000 fund to the oil scandal is expected to be established by disclosures showing that big oil men subscribed the money.

This million was used purely as a loan, according to the story told the committee and all of it was repaid but $200,000.

A dispute over the $200,000 which still is believed unsettled caused hard feeling between the Wall Street men who raised the money and at least one who was involved as a borrower from the fund. Thru this hard feeling the senate committee hopes to ferret out the truth about the transaction.

McLean to Be Grilled

Edward B. McLean, millionaire Washington publisher, is reported hurrying north from Palm Beach to tell the committee whether he knows anything about the fund. A subpoena was issued for McLean and he wired his newspaper in Washington he was leaving immediately.

Some prominent New York financiers, supposed to be "in to know" on everything in the street, are to be called to see if they can advance any information.

Calling of McLean created a new sensation. It was his testimony regarding a $100,000 "loan" to Albert B. Fall which really opened up the present startling scope of the inquiry. This testimony was given at Palm Beach some weeks ago when McLean told Senator Walsh that Fall borrowed $100,000 in checks to buy a ranch, but three days later returned the checks uncashed and said he had arranged to get the money elsewhere.

Fall previously had said he got the purchase price of the ranch from McLean. McLean's story started a whole train of disclosures, including E. L. Doheny's story of a $100,000 loan to Fall and J. W. Zevely's story of a $25,000 Sinclair loan and gave the committee many new leads bearing on the leasing of the naval reserves.

Vanderlip Present

Frank A. Vanderlip, New York financier, was scheduled as the first witness before the senate Teapot Dome committee today, to tell whether information or rumor led him to say that the sale of the Marion Star by the late President Harding ought to be investigated.

While the committee was questioning Vanderlip, President Coolidge was expected to select another lawyer to succeed Silas H. Strawn, Chicago, whose nomination as "presidential counsel" to prosecute the oil lease cases was withdrawn late Thursday. Strawn's nomination was withdrawn after the senate Teapot Dome committee notified the president that Strawn's connection with two Chicago "Standard Oil Banks" made his confirmation impossible.

Atlee Pomerene, Ohio, the other lawyer nominated, was not withdrawn, in spite of objections to him and indications from the White House

CHAPTER I.

IN THE spaces of mother-of-pearl, between the piles of grey motionless clouds, the joyful sky was turning a dark blue. For three days the Spring had been sunny, the streamlets had broken thru the snowdrifts and were beginning to carry them out of the town, to the river, and the streets had become noisy and dirty. But on the fourth day the Spring dozed again, laid her head on her knees and went to sleep, sitting somewhere in a distant forest glade; and only once, before noon, the sun smiled on the earth and then went off again behind the motionless clouds. But the joyfulness of Spring remained; only it was behind everything, just as the sun was behind the grey, blue and pallid lilac clouds which, for hours, hung over the earth like grey wet stones.

If you were to climb past the railings and little houses of the outskirts, slipping in the sticky mud, to the hillock which the sun had already cleared of snow, where there is a solitary weather-beaten rock, and were then to look back, you would see below you the little town lying under the hillock, stretching all the way to the river, with its blocks of grey wooden houses. There are few people to be seen; probably all asleep; dogs bark, and with the Spring the cocks are crowing loudly. On the broad streets and in the narrow lanes glimmer the remnants of the last snow. There are few big two-storied houses, but many churches. Solitary factory chimneys pour into the sky endless ribbons of black smoke, and, far beyond the town, the ash falls on the snowdrifts.

The sturdy, dust-gray watch-tower sent out, cracked and regular, one after another, five even blows into the dim silence, and, after two quiet minutes, in reply, singing sounds flew from the belfries, lingered in the air, and fell, far beyond the town in the grey mist of the villages.

At this so quiet hour, when the sun, a dull-white spot, had long passed noon, people were coming together to the Circus building on the broad square. They were walking by the low railings, on the scattered snow-tracks, across the waste spaces where last year's withered thistles stick up thru the snowdrifts, they were stepping across the street, full of the mud of Spring, and walking along the footways cut in the earth. They were hurrying, met each other, greeted each other sometimes, smiled at each other, men and women, more often young than old, in grey coats, in worn out blue and black overcoats. Different smiles, eyes, gait, manners, and yet there was something common to all of them, as if one and the same distant morning sun were lighting them all.

In the Circus it is quiet all day and the big grey rats slip noiselessly about the yellow twilit arena. But now the double doors, on which hung tatters of old bills and announcements, were opened wide; the mutilated words and sentences cut off short, spoke of something past and gone. It was lighter now in the Circus, and the people poured into their places, rising higher and higher round the arena, and filled the huge building with a suppressed noise of step and voices.

Two persons appeared at the round table standing in the middle of the arena. Single voices from all parts of the Circus threw names to them, and then, by the will of hundreds of lifted hands, Comrade Klimin, a man in a soldier's coat, whose features, but for his fine, quietly observant eyes, were indistinct in the half light of the Circus, announced from the middle of the arena:

"Comrades, I declare the meeting of the Town District of the R. C. P. (Russian Communist Party) open. On the agenda list is a report of the President of the Soviet of Public Economy on the economic situation of the district. No objections? . . . I call upon Comrade Ziman."

The Circus grew quieter and quieter, and the assembly of people, like a huge, grey, affectionate beast lay at the feet of the President, and its many-eyed stare was fixed upon that other, the one who was also standing in the middle of the arena, and with a nervous hand was crumpling scraps of paper.

Inaudibly, dully raising his voice, on figures, poods of corn, sazhins of wood, the number of locomotives, huge sums of money, numbers of days and weeks, Ziman made his report. But all listened greedily, and all understood—the talk was of house-keeping, goods, fuel, food, and question after question, conveys of little scraps of paper, flew on to the table of the Praesidium.

Ziman told how the town was far from the big main railways and connected with the rest of Russia only by a 500-verst branch line. The district was almost without forests, it had very little coal of its own, and the railway had almost ceased working. And it had been a bad harvest, the corn-collection had taken the last, and if no seed were forthcoming at sowing time, there would be famine in town and country.

Every one knew what those words meant; hunger would urge the peasantry to senseless, violent revolt, the factories would cease working, the workmen would scatter, and the robber bands who wander far off in the steppes would grow bold, approach the railway and spoil the track. To bring seed, fuel

BRITISH WHITE GUARDS ORGANIZE AGAINST LABOR

Out in the Open as Workers Rule Threatens

LONDON, Feb. 15.—British aristocrats and sons of the bourgeoisie met last night at the famous Cecil Hotel, in black shirts to sound a warning against the possibility of British labor expecting to gain power by peaceful methods.

From all over the British Isles came delegates of the Fascisti to the first open function held under the auspices of the English section of the Fascisti. Mussolini's agents were there in great number, headed by the Italian ambassador. The leading Italian families were represented.

The British Fascisti admit that there is no danger of the present British Labor Party endangering capitalist rule at present but should they gain a majority, the Black Shirt brigade would go into action and establish an open dictatorship. The moth-eaten constitutional tradition of peaceful transition will be given a rude jolt by the British 100 per centers.

BERLIN, Feb. 15.—The national state of emergency in Germany, proclaimed when the nationalist movement in Bavaria threatened dissolution of the confederation, will be abolished March 1.

General von Seeckt, commander of the Reichswehr, and nominal dictator, wrote to President Ebert suggesting the state of emergency be rescinded.

President Ebert thanked the commander, and added: "I agree to the abolition of the state of emergency beginning March 1."

Ladies' Garment Workers Get Ready for Big Strike

to discuss some improvement [illegible] conditions and a slight change in wages which would better even a little the miserable earnings now being paid the girls who turn out the expensive dresses for the "better classes."

Demands had been made for discussion upon an increase from the scale which now leaves many girls dependent on their own earnings, or even with loved ones to support, only $16, $18 or $20 a week on which to eke out an existence. The association scorned the plea that workng girls needed more than the minimum necessary to avoid starvation which is euphemistically called "a living wage," and one fat-necked boss whose appetite for the higher things of life never ranges above "Getting Gertie's Garter," indignantly protested the suggestion that working girls might like to attend the opera. "Why, I never go to the opery," he had grunted.

New Bosses' Associations.

Negotiations being broken with the association, warnings had been sent to the individual members of it that the union may be forced to strike. These individual bosses had in two cases broken from the old association and informed the union that they were organizing a new association of the manufacturers in the trade on the Northwest Side, and that another association was in process of forming. The letter of warning as to impending strike which was sent to the non-union shops had gone unanswered.

The possibility of the union reaching an agreement with the newly organized and reorganized association members complicated conditions so that it is yet impossible to say whether or not the strike will be forced upon the union, but as every agreement expires on Monday, Vice-President Pertstein demanded that a strike committee be elected at once, and he specified that such committee would alone decide the date of the strike.

"Take Back Expelled Before Strike" Plea From Floor.

At this point the destructive effects of Perlstein's expulsion of the most active and devoted members of the union for connection with the Trade Union Educational League became manifest. Member after member took the floor in passionate plea that the expelled members be taken back into full union membership before a battle against the bosses be engaged.

"How can the International officers expect the union to win in a fight with the bosses when these officers have destroyed the fighting spirit of our union by expelling its most active members? What are we going to do without Dora Lipshitz, who in strike after strike has given every ounce of energy and every minute of time to leadership in the strike—and who now is expelled and is not even allowed in this hall? Can we who know how much the union has been weakened by expulsion of our best members undertake responsibility of accepting on the strike committee? And can we accept knowing that after the strike is over, maybe we, too, shall be expelled, like Dora Lipshitz was?" Such were the questions put by the first girl who got the floor, and she continued with the demand that before strike action was taken that the expelled members be re-instated. This brought the first exhibition of real enthusiasm shown at the meeting; members rose to their feet and strained their ears to hear the protest, and applauded it wildly at the close.

Unanimous For Re-instatement.

"Unity in our own ranks," "reinstatement of the expelled members before the strike," were demands of member after member demanding the floor—not one dissenting voice to this came from the floor, until the chair-lady cut off discussion, but not before a girl who delivered the best speech of the evening had cast a note of serious warning. She had been on the committee from the local, which had visited President Sigman with the request that the expelled members be reinstated. Sigman had refused to consider the request, unless the expelled members surrendered what, to the speaker, was the right of free thinking, the right to belong or have connection with the Trade Union Educational League.

"Unity Before the Battle"—Membership.

This girl asserted that she was in violent disagreement with Sigman and looked with dismay on the prospect of the union going into the strike with the feeling of demoralization among the members which was shown by every rank and file member which took the floor. She had been, also, on the committee of members which had met the insulting spokesmen of the association of employers and had felt outraged at the scorn with which they treated the vital needs of the workers in the shops, who create fortunes for them. Nevertheless, in spite of the resentment this engendered, she realized that a strike was a serious matter, that the livelihood of thousands directly and of others thousands indirectly was in the balance, that a strike was no plaything and embraced issues too grave to be made a gamble of; therefore, she felt that if the membership lacked the spirit and leadership of the expelled members as much as their speeches showed, the union was in no condition to strike in her opinion and should recognize realities, continue the present agreement, unsatisfactory and humiliating as it is, until the expelled members are taken back and the union re-inspirited.

"Unity After the Battle"—Perlstein.

Perlstein replied weakly, that the matter of the expelled members was "in the hands of the International"—somewhat like "in the hands of God," as tho he had no control over it and could not get them re-instated at once if he really valued the interests of the union above his vanity and pride. His egoism would, it is evident, be hurt if he had to take back the members he expelled and thus admit his mistake. So he added that, "We must stand together now against the enemy. After we are thru fighting him, after the strike, some other time, we can settle our family quarrels so we can stand together against the enemy." He never seemed to notice that this circular argument was broken by the gap of absence left by the expelled members.

Tho many members were on the floor, Perlstein and the chair-lady cut them off and made the election of the strike committee the next order of business.

John Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor delivered an unusally bad speech, his one good point being that the bosses, by use of all their injunctions, detectives and sluggers, had gained nothing over the union. This was remarked by a member present to be true, that the most vicious tactics of the bosses only strengthened the union, and only the disruptive tactics of Perlstein could have brought the union to its present condition of timidity and helplessness.

Expelled Members to Help Strikers

When asked her opinion as to the possibility of strike, Dora Lipshitz said to the DAILY WORKER: "The expelled members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers are first and last union men and women. The interests of the membership is ours and, if a strike is declared, the expelled members will give every effort physically possible to make a victory for the Dressmakers a possibility. However, the possibility of victory is clearly made uncertain when the union is weakened and discouraged by Perlstein's expulsions of its most active members."

Negro Workers Speak Despite Sanhedrin Head

Labor Seizes Convention.

The indignation which the delegates have been feeling against the machine control of the convention showed in the tumult of applause that came when Labor took the floor in spite of Dean Miller yesterday noon.

The chairman was announcing that those interested in labor could talk in a small side room while the convention continued in session in the main auditorium on other subjects.

He didn't get away with it. Otto Housewoud, a union printer from New York and representative of the African Blood Brotherhood, called out:

Labor Sabotaged.

"Dean Miller, you have been sabotaging this convention from the first day. You promised labor a hearing before the convention because it was the most important issue. We demand a hearing. Ninety-five per cent of the members of our Race are workingmen."

There was a burst of handclapping and an elderly clergyman cried out: "Ninety-five per cent—better say ninetyeight."

Miller gaveled and said Housewoud was out of order but members of the audience whose labor sympathies had not been known before began popping up demanding the right of Labor to be heard.

Labor Defeats Chairman.

The chairman's opposition was in vain. Speaker after speaker began taking the floor and the audience applauded every attack on the chairman's policy of barring the labor issue.

Miller gave in and turned the meeting over to a labor discussion—first taking pains to have T. Arnold Hill, of the Urban League, a conservative he had appointed to the labor committee, in the chair.

Lovett Fort-Whiteman showed the vital need of unionism among the Negroes:

Negro girls are being accepted in the garment industries in place of white girls, he said, not because they employer is favoring the race, but because they are unorganized and can be exploited more.

Chicago Firemen Expect City Council Will Grant Raise

George L. Frank, president of the Firemen's Association of Chicago, said yesterday that the prospects of the firemen of Chicago getting a raise of $500 a year from the city are bright. If any compromise of less is offered they will continue to fight for the original demand of $500, he said.

The firemen presented to the city council at their last meeting a petition containing 450,000 names asking for a raise at once.

At the present time firemen are working for wages ranging from $1,640 a year to $2,000 a year. They work for 24 hours and are off duty but subject to call for 24 hours. The raise of $500 a year will apply to all firemen from class D men to captains.

were that Mr. Coolidge considered the fight on Pomerene merely political and would insist upon his confirmation.

New Investigations

The senate committee was preparing to pursue several lines of inquiry. Testimony of John C. Shaffer, Denver, and Chicago newspaper owner yesterday, indicating that Fall began negotations with Harry F. Sinclair for leasing Teapot Dome soon after Fall took office in 1921, will be followed up, because at the time the naval reserves were not even in Fall's jurisdiction and the committee wants to know whether he had some understanding when he entered the cabinet that the reserves would be transferred from the navy to the interior department. Such evidence would clinch the evidence of fraud and corruption in making the leases and would make certain their annulment by the courts, committee members believe.

Investigation of the $1,000,000 "slush fund" reported loaned to government officials by oil men went ahead quietly as E. B. McLean, Washington publisher, sped to Washington to be the first witness concerning the funds.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, author of a resolution for investigation of Attorney-General Daugherty, decided today to let his measure lie on the table for a few days so as not to conflict with the Teapot Dome inquiry proper.

Cross Examine Vanderlip

Frank A. Vanderlip, New York financier, who dragged the late President Harding's name into the oil inquiry by saying the sale of the Marion Star, the President's newspaper, ought to be investigated, faced the senate Teapot Dome committee today.

Examination of Vanderlip was begun by Senator Lenroot, who at once asked about Vanderlip's speech, near Ossining on Lincoln's birthday.

"On the evening of February 12 did you make a speech at Ossining?"

"No, at Briar Cliff, near Ossining. The subject was 'Courage in Leadership'."

"You are credited in the newspapers as having said at that time that there was something wrong with the sale of the Marion Star by the late President Harding?"

"What I said, was that there are rumors in Washington and current thruout the United States and among the rumors this story. That is substantially what I said the rumor was. I said the rumor rose far above gossip.

Rumor From Responsible People.

"It was something like the whispering campaign that was heard in the month before Mr. Harding's election. I believed out of respect for memory of Mr. Harding that these scandalous rumors should be downed."

"What information did you have?" Lenroot asked.

"And you thought it your duty to give it publicity?"

"I thought it my particular duty."

Senator Walsh called attention as the hearing started to a newspaper story which stated the subpoena for Vanderlip was issued at request of democrats."

"I desire to say that if any democrats conferred about the matter I did not know of it and I do not believe it," Walsh said.

Walsh then told of how the subpoena was issued. He said he met Senator Lenroot privately and they agreed Vanderlip should be subpoenaed.

No Legal Evidence.

Lenroot then made a statement concurring.

"I regret that so inaccurate a statement should be made in this connection," Walsh said.

Continuing his statement Vanderlip said:

"As the rumor was known in every newspaper office it seemed to me about time for it to be brought to the surface and the scandal stopped."

"Did you say that in your speech?" asked Lenroot.

"I did."

"Then you cannot give this committee any information?"

"I have no legal information. I have heard some reports about the price of the transaction. What was bought, as I understand it, was only a part interest. I do not even know of my own knowledge the exact price paid.

"The current story was $550,000. I've heard it was $600 a share. I don't know how many shares were involved.

"I have heard that a payment of $10,000 a year was to be made for a contributing editor but that it was to go to Mrs. Harding in the event of Mr. Harding's death.

"I had sufficient facts to base the statement that I made—that is, that these rumors had come to me. That is all I said—and that it should be traced."

"Why didn't you communicate with the committee?"

"I have no connection with the committee. I didn't know there was any connection between public lands and the sale of an Ohio newspaper."

Thought It Duty.

"You thought that these rumors were broadcast thruout the country and they ought to be stopped?" asked Lenroot.

"I did."

"Do you think it is the duty of a man of public standing in a public speech to assist in circulating rumors of that kind?"

"That wasn't the purpose in any way. The purpose was to bring these rumors to public attention that they might be killed."

"What do you mean by responsible quarters? Do you mean they knew what they were talking about?"

"No, I never heard anyone say they professed to know the facts—merely that they have heard rumors."

Clear Harding's Name.

"And your only purpose was to clear Mr. Harding's name?"

"It certainly was."

"What did you mean by your statement about the committee being afraid to question former Secretary of the Interior Fall?"

"I gave that from my personal inference. It wasn't altogether personal, for I had heard it stated."

"Did you know that his counsel advised him that he couldn't be compelled to testify?"

"No."

"Where did you get any information about this?"

"Oh, well, I can't say where I got it. I am familiar with the powers of senate committees and I didn't believe that the committee could be stopped from questioning a witness."

Vanderlip Kids Solons.

"You now think you are performing a public duty in making a statement of that kind without one basis of fact whatever?"

"Well, that is your opinion," said Vanderlip, not answering the question.

"You charged this committee with neglect in a public speech without taking the trouble to ascertain the facts?"

"If you tell me you had legal reason to take the course you did, I'll say your action was warranted. But I still think you could have passed legislation in the senate compelling Fall to testify without immunity," Vanderlip insisted.

"Do you think we can pass laws violating the constitution?"

"I don't know—you do sometimes."

SAYS SECRETARY OF TREASURY IS MORE GUILTY THEN DOHENY

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Senator Reed of Missouri, in a Senate speech, discussing the wholesale corruption of the federal government since the beginning of the war, said of Secretary Mellon:

"I submit that Andrew Mellon holds his office of secretary of the treasury in violation of the law which prohibits men engaged in trade from holding that high position. At the time he assumed his seat he was a director in 68 great banks and industrial corporations, and was the chief owner of one of the greatest trusts on earth. He, too, is heavily interested in oil. There is scarcely anything the earth produces or man creates that does not pay its tribute to this secretary. He writes the tax laws and he sought in that last congress to reduce the income taxes of 12,000 millionaires by the sum of $90,000,000. The saving to himself and his associates would have run into the millions, but this does not seem to shock the public conscience.

"What is the difference between Mellon's attitude and that of Doheny. If Mellon can write the tax laws, why should not Doheny write the oil laws? Poor Doheny had to act indirectly thru a cabinet officer. Mellon acts directly and is paid for acting as a cabinet officer."

MacDonald's Government

Premier MacDonald's opening speech, followed by that of Clynes, in which the house of commons was told that the Labor Party government had abandoned the capital levy, that it would not attempt it "without national approval," has been accorded a much more favorable reception from the capitalist press and the opposition in the house than from the labor members and the rank and file of the Labor Party.

According to London dispatches, there is much disappointment in labor ranks and most of the applause following the outline of the government's policy came from the conservatives.

The labor men sat "glum and silent" says one correspondent.

The mass of the British workers have builded high hopes on the accession of the Labor Party to power. It is going to manifest more and more impatience as the MacDonald government increases, as it will, its efforts to conciliate the middle classes and to convince the tories that their privileges and surpluses are in no serious danger.

The money for the housing campaign, for construction projects of other kinds to relieve unemployment, cannot come from the impoverished workers.

Two million unemployed brought the Labor Party to power and it must solve this problem.

The kind words of the spokesmen of the British capitalists mean nothing. There will be sabotage aplenty when loans are needed to carry out the government program.

Only a capital levy will bring the needed funds, but to institute it and make it effective the Labor Party government will have to have more iron in its blood than it has yet shown.

No government can be fair to both classes in society and in its attempt to enact this role the MacDonald government will either fall or continue as did the social democracy of Germany—as the smoke screen of the big industrialists and financiers.

Boldness and resolution will rally the British workers to the Labor Party movement. A kindly regard for the feelings of the opposition will alienate the best elements of the British working class and leave MacDonald and his cabinet at the mercy of the cleverest ruling class the world has ever seen.

We wish the British Labor Party government well. It is the only bright spot in the darkness of western Europe. But we hope that British labor can and will learn the lessons of world history since 1917.

The Minnesota Daily Star

"Bayonet Rule to Keep Mine Mobs in Hand."

The above headlines, conveying very definitely the impression that it was the Klan that was persecuted in Herrin and that the miners were the creators of the disturbances, are from the Minnesota Daily Star—an alleged farmer-labor paper published in Minneapolis. Its farmer-labor character is due solely to the fact that thousands of farmers and workers gave up their hard-earned dollars to launch this sheet if the above treatment of news of lawless terrorism by anti-labor forces is a guide to the policy of the paper.

Starting with a policy of "fairness" and with one eye always on the advertising receipts, the Minnesota Daily Star is now merely a personal organ of yellow politicians who live in daily fear of the formation of a genuine Farmer-Labor party that will end their juggling with the fortunes of the men and women of labor who furnished the money for their publishing venture.

The policy of the Minnesota Daily Star today is less progressive than that of the Scripps and Hearst papers. It is purely a revenue-gathering proposition and not even successful in that as the fact that it has just gone into the hands of a receiver shows.

Its mental bankruptcy and intellectual dishonesty has evidently been of such a flagrant character that increased advertising revenue has not made up for the withdrawal of a support by its disillusioned farmer and labor readers.

Its treatment of the outrages on the miners at Herrin is what passes for clever journalism with the management of a sheet that has lost all militant virtue and now is trying to crawl into bed with the hangers-on of American capitalism.

American Subtlety

After revealing in detail the corruption of the French press by the czar's gold, Lewis Gannett, in The Nation for February 6th, remarks:

> American journalists are hardly subject to such crass corruption as these documents reveal in the French press.

We hope that Comrade Gannett will not be offended when we ask how he gets that way.

Crass means gross, or stupid and unrefined, according to our dictionary. Perhaps the article was written before the extremely frank Mr. Bonfils of the Denver Post testified before the Senate Teapot Oil committee in great detail as to the black-jack methods employed by himself and henchmen to extract from Harry F. Sinclair juicy sums of the currency of the realm.

There is also the incident of the Albuquerque journal purchased to ensure its silence and it is here that we come upon the chief difference between the corruption of the French and American press. The French sheets were paid to boost long and loud the advantages of the Russian loan. American newspapers are paid generally for silence and lots of it.

Comrade Gannett's ideas of what constitutes crassness and ours differ slightly in relation to another field of American journalistic enterprise. Page advertisements of huge department stores employing thousands of underpaid girls, coupled with the fact that no adverse publicity affecting these concerns ever creeps into the news or editorial columns of the capitalist press as long as the advertisements are forthcoming, is a fairly obvious if not an actually crass method of the silent treatment for revenue purposes.

It might also be remarked in this connection that there is a great scarcity of unfavorable comment concerning the Standard Oil Company in the news of the Teapot Dome investigation nor has any capitalist editor seen fit to point out that the present scandals is only the culmination of years of governmental corruption fostered by the Standard Oil interests.

Full page advertisements of Socony gasoline, pyralin toilet articles, mineral oil laxatives and the thousand and one products of Standard Oil concerns carried by the metropolitan press may be a more gentlemanly means of ensuring silence on unfavorable developments, but certainly they are just as effective as other methods of subsidizing the press and just as easily detected.

In one respect the finance-capitalists of America have the advantage—they own outright many of the papers from which the American people get their information on public questions.

God Bless the Teapot

What is one man's loss is often another's gain. The shocking revelations in the Teapot Dome oil inquiry have hit hard many of the most prominent leaders of the democratic and republican parties.

This blow that has been struck at the so-called representative character of the government of this country should not blind the workers to the fact that while the Teapot scandal is being investigated and while McAdoo, Fall, Denby and others are being held up to the scorn of the public eye, there are many other cases of graft and corruption known to the Senate and the President, but not being investigated.

There is no use denying that many a capitalist politician and industrial magnate is now blessing the Teapot because they feel that the longer this investigation lasts and the more the Wyoming steal continues in the limelight, the less chance there is of their being investigated for lesser and greater crimes and the less likelihood will there be of their being caught.

The instances of capitalist spoilation of the country's wealth are legion. Just now the Senate itself is confronted with about a dozen cases of corruption involving some of the most responsible men of the government. Political expediency coupled with the lack of time have alone delayed the exposure of another oil scandal in California, the handing over of concessions by General Wood to some of his capitalist friends in the Philippines, the crimes perpetrated in the Veterans Bureau and Engraving Bureau, the wholesale robbery involved in the war frauds, the new million dollar bond duplication theft, the Bok peace prize, the Mellon scheme propaganda campaign and Mellon's protection of millionaire tax dodgers.

The Teapot affair and the above enumerated outrages committed against the working and farming masses of this country in the interest of the capitalist class, are only symptoms of the whole diseased condition of economic and political system. In all these steals, the good and the bad, the liberal and the reactionary, the democrat and the republican alike, have been drawn in. Party lines, personal character lines have vanished for the onslaughts of class lines—the principle of making the biggest profits possible and serving the class that rule society today thru its owners and control of the mean of production and exchange and the governmental apparatus.

Latest reports from the editorial rooms of "Labor" are to the effect that oily finger-prints have been discovered on the frame of the picture.

would be necessary. Fuel was prepared in the district of Zizhni-Elansk, in the hill, 200 versts away by railway and could not be brought in a week. The collapse of the sowing campaign was almost inevitable. And the speaker called for stoicism, but his words were dry, did not sink into the meeting, and hung unwanted and homeless like little bits of paper in the wind.

Ziman ended, and a Red Army soldier with a browless, broad red face, opened discussion of his report. He said he had fought on the front for two years for the Soviet Government, and in the villages everything was getting worse and worse. They were injuring the villages by the corn-collection, there was a lot of scoundrelism in all these economy committees, food committees and soviets of public economy. It had become extremely hard for a poor man to live. We have cleaned the people out of corn and now we howl about it. Ah! He wrung his hands and returned to his place.

"What? Are we to be hungry again?" A second began tearfully from the middle of the arena. He was thin, with a scar on his neck, and he took a long time in telling how hard it was to live on a ration of forty pounds of flour a month, with a family. "There's thievery going on," he added viciously at the end of his speech.

But there were also other speeches and more of these than of the first kind. Workmen and Red Army soldiers walked excitedly into the middle of the arena and, hampered by the unaccustomed attention of the crowd, they made clumsy speeches, upbraided Ziman, but agreed that they ought to hold out stoically. To sit with folded hands, there was no stoicism in that, and they sought a way out, feeling for it, like blind men. But the meeting did not understand their disconnected words, and one orator disputed with the one who had spoken before him, tho both meant the same thing.

And Ziman in the end stopped making notes of criticisms for his concluding speech: small, wretched, he jerked his head with nervousness, listening to the reproachful, seeking speeches, and was worried precisely by those of the speakers who saw somewhere a way out. He did not see it, and muttered, angrily, "Demagogy. . . . Meeting stuff. . . ." And the orators went on spasmodically bumping into glass walls, and could not tell the meeting of their clear plans, but talked of some detail or other, of how, from somewhere, "It would be possible to get axes." The meeting grew excited, and people shouted from their places, regardless of the President's bell. And then a man above middle height, round-shouldered, came out, and took an old blue cap from his square head, disclosing a high forehead with a deep wrinkle in it.

"I call on Comrade Robeiko," said the President, and the meeting tried to be silent in order to hear a speech that would not be loud.

For Robeiko must not speak. He has consumption of the throat. He had not meant to speak, but had listened, and for a long time had been thinking, "Ziman is helpless and cannot see the way out which many of the speakers see but cannot put into words." He thought regretfully, Why had the Party Committee brought this report to a big meeting? And all the time he had waited for somebody to name the way out, to put it into words and save Robeiko from unnecessary suffering. . . . For Robeiko must not speak. Sounds tear his throat into rough red bleeding scraps. But he must say a little, just a few words, and the question will be clear, and all will have bright faces, for all will know how to name the road, the way out, that many dimly see.

He began to speak in a low voice, fearing to awake the pain which just then was slumbering deep in his throat. . . . But nothing could be heard, people stretched out their necks like martyrs, and Robeiko made up his mind . . . his voice, as it were, made a jump, and all heard every word, and all had grateful faces. But every word, like a sharp splinter of glass, rose to his larynx and tore into scraps its delicate fibre and it hurt him so that tears slipped from his eyes, the sweat stood on his forehead, and his voice clanged and broke.

He said that Ziman had told the meeting the truth and that they ought not to reproach him for this. For not Ziman had created this truth; he had told them of the danger, and for that they owed him thanks. Only there was no need to lose their heads; they needed only to look about them and somewhere a way out would be found. It was necessary quietly and calmly to look about them. Surely the party, in its day, had found the way out from worse holes than this. Their strength and wisdom lay in quiet investigation and determined action.

There was a way out. Many saw it but did not know how to talk of it. It was clear enough that the whole difficulty was fuel. If they could get a little fuel they could at once bring wood from Nizhni-Elansk. "And if we have the wood we can in a week bring the seed for the sowing. Everything depends on fuel, on a few hundred cubic sazhins of wood. . . . Where can we get them?"

Obviously, there were many gardens in the town, and twelve versts outside, at the monastery, there were big woods. There was wood for them and plenty of it. In a week the fuel from Nizhni-Elansk would be there and they could begin to bring the seed. But all must be done quickly and decisively; they must themselves take axes and saws, stand at the head, compel the slackers and the bourgeoisie, bring in the Red Army and all the workers. Only, they must hurry; if in two weeks the seed should be here, then in a month the fields would be sown.

But his speech was cut short by a dry, breaking cough. For a minute, for two, he coughed, and the crowd waited eagerly, many, many sympathetic faces gleamed before him, and he coughed on, twisted himself with coughing, and all saw it, were silent, and only took breath, first one and then another.

The little town under the unchanging sky slept as it were with a heavy after-dinner sleep. In every house geraniums shone in the windows, and on their beggarly but pretentious leaves lay flowers like purple and red flies. Oh, how many of these ash-colored wooden boxes, street upon street of them, how stuffy and close in each one of them! Many grim ikons in the high corner and on little tables, covered with crocheted table-cloths, albums bound in velvet. Dirt in the kitchens, black-beetles running on the walls, and flies dismally buzzing on the window-panes.

The life of the people who live in these crowded houses is like a grey September day, when a drizzle of rain sounds monotonously on the window, and thru the panes, lined with the running drops, you can see a grey railing and a red calf wandering in the mud. So, year after year, this life goes on. Every day early in the morning elderly women milk cows, go to the market with baskets, and then in the kitchen after dinner wash the greasy dishes. And bald-headed men with dull eyes, in old patched breeches and mended boots, go to their work, buy and sell something or other, and work at some industry, each one alone in a dark room. On Sundays the women smooth their hair tightly down, put on purple, yellow or blue dresses, take the children to church, and in the evening gather together to drink tea while the men get drunk with vodka or beer and bump their foreheads on the table.

All of them, at that hour when, dismally drooping its wings, the sound of the bell calling to the Saturday evening services floated mournfully over the town, all of them hid dislike for those who were meeting in the Circus, and this timorous dislike united the whole town in a single black cloud invisible by men. . . .

At this hour Raphael Antonovitch Senator went for a walk, Raphael Antonovitch who lived in the two-storied stone house on the ground floor of which was a chemist's shop.

They had requisitioned the chemist's shop. . . . They had taken down the black board with its affectionately inviting gold letters, "The Rozhdestvensky Drug Store, R. A. Senator." And now, instead of that, insolently, from a red board, black letters were shouting, "Health Department, Communal Drug Store, No. 1."

Raphael Antonovitch stood on the sandy hillock, drank in all the hidden dumb dislike that poured out of the little houses, dissolved in it his own bitter resentment and hatred, and silently sent it all in the direction of the Circus where that incomprehensibly hostile life was going on. A little stout man in a grey coat and a worn hat (one of those hats nicknamed "Good Day and Goodbye") he stood for a long time on the hillock. Little malicious eyes glittered under the brim of his hat, and when he turned round and went slowly off a bit of fat red neck showed and on it a lot of short black and grey hairs.

He helped his wife in the housework, asthmatically cut wood, took the hogwash to the cow, and while his wife was milking it silently watched the white stream running from under her fingers into dark milky froth. . . . And the regular sound of milking, the peaceful grunting of the pigs behind the railing, the perfume of the cosy, twilit cowshed, all this comforted him and he told his wife:

"I had been at the Khanzhins! Their brother has come from Tula. He says that the end is soon coming. The people are revolting against the Bolsheviks, the Poles are wanting to fight again, and even the workmen in Moscow. . . ."

"God in His mercy grant it," murmured his wife, and Raphael Antonovitch walked up and down the yard with his hands behind his back, counting, as his custom was, the logs left over from the building of the house, for fear lest some should have been stolen.

But, when the grey cloudy day, hiding the joy of Spring so deeply that it was as if it did not exist, ended in a scarlet sunset, and the sun, melting the clouds, gave the earth the last gold of its slanting evening rays, and went off somewhere behind the houses, behind the woods, behind the fields, behind the yellow sandy hillock, and when the clouds hanging over the sunset rejoiced with nervous tenderness at something momentary and fugitive and accompanied the sun with a trembling of elusive singing tones, then by the dark staircase past the dirty water-closet and wash-tub, hurriedly, Raphael Antonovitch fled to his own room and groaned with his asthma.

For, at this scarlet hour of sunset, the "Internationale" proudly floated from the Circus, and, with the power of hundreds of voices was carried over the town to the evening sun, like a red avenging angel, and Robeiko would be coming home at once, for he had taken lodging in the house of Raphael Antonovitch, who did not like meeting Robeiko and was afraid of him.

CHAPTER TWO.

UNDER the quiet light of an electric lamp, in a study furnished in oak, the meeting of the Party Committee began. Robeiko made a short report. He told the comrades of his plan for getting wood. But they were inattentive, talked among themselves in loud whispers, during the report, and smiled friendlily at each other. It was pleasant after a whole day of exhausting, nervous work, to see the familiar faces of their comrades. And consequently the flaming appeals of Robeiko were quenched like sparks falling in water. No one seconded his suggestions, but, when he had finished the report, Ziman proved at length that the whole project was impracticable, that the melting of the streams would prevent the bringing of the wood to the railway, and that there where not enough saws, axes or carts. . . .

Then Karaulov objected, the military Brigade Commander, an old Cossack with a dark yellow face, framed in a thin little beard. He puffed out clouds of smoke from his pipe and muttered in a dull voice, "There are a lot of bandits hanging about round the town . . . and here are you proposing to take the Red Army soldiers twelve versts away. For without them you will not cut down the monastery woods. With mobilized bourgeois and half-dead Soviet employes, you will not get far. . ."

And Robeiko, lacerated by his cough, and spattering the rich, flowered purple carpet with spittle and green mucus, replied to Ziman with figures from a note-book and with a hoarse voice told Karaulov that there was no other way out, that the revolution demanded . . . that they would have to take the risk.

"You risk that they will take the town, cut the Communists to pieces, cut off the district from the center for several months. . ." distinctly, maliciously, in a voice not loud but audible by all, said Karaulov and then suddenly raised his voice and cried angrily, "What are you fooling about, Robeiko? Causing a revolt is no sort of joke. Ask Klimin, and he, as head of the Cheka (Cheka is short for the Russian word meaning Extraordinary Commission, the Revolutionary Police dealing with Counter-Revolution, Banditism, Espionage etc., etc.) will tell you what unrest there is just now in the villages."

But Klimin was inattentive and silent. He was thinking of something happy and serene, and his eyes were merry and tender. He started at hearing his name, left his dreams and with unconscious dislike followed Robeiko's words, fully agreed with the quiet objections of Ziman, with the disgusted exclamations of Karaulov, and everything that Robeiko said seemed the result of his invalid fantasy.

"You must exert your wills, to get out of the blind alley. . . . Otherwise we shall have the fields unsown!"

And, coughing, Robeiko pointed with his hand to the darkness of the window. Klimin followed his hand with a glance and looked the night in the eyes; the night was looking simply and sternly into the room, and Klimin imagined the boundless breadth of the wide country, covered by the quiet canopy of the night. The fields waking under the darkening snowdrifts, the fields waiting for the sowing, the mouzhiks (peasants) gathering in black throngs on fine days on the benches by the cottage doors, and talking of the weather, of the harvest, and then remembering that the granaries were empty, that there was no seed, and separating silently, anxiously waiting for help from the town, while with each day of waiting a dark hatred of the Communists, of the food committees, of the Soviets, was rising in their hearts.

And Klimin suddenly understood why Robeiko burned and trembled, understood that there was "no way out," and instantly his practical clear judgment awoke, clearsightedly taking in the whole project, and Klimin thought out in his own mind exactly how to realize it, and, with strong, sonorous voice, he now supported Robeiko.

Robeiko was quite unable to speak, took breath, half-lying on the soft divan, and nodded his head with a smile, listening to the voice of Klimin who instantly attacked Ziman with practical suggestion, when they voted Karaulov alone, "contra," lifted his big strong hand with its crooked frost-distorted fingers. The other members of the Party Committee were alight with that same steady, quiet fire that burned in Klimin's words.

Immediately after the sitting of the Party Committee, the Commission met to which had been assigned the task of realizing the project for getting wood. Its members were Klimin, Robeiko, Karaulov and Ziman.

Tomorrow in the newspaper, the leading article would shout to everybody of the danger of famine, of the need of action.

Tomorrow at meetings and assemblies the military Commissars and agitators would explain to the attentive Red Army soldiers that if they wanted to see the fields sown they would have to go and cut wood.

Tomorrow from all the stores Ziman would collect saws and axes while the Communal Economy Committee would mobilize carts.

Tomorrow Robeiko, with extreme pain for his throat, would carry thru the Trade Union Council a proposal for the mobilization of the Trade Unions, and in the factories the general meetings of the workmen would pass clumsy resolutions. . . . Tomorrow!

MacDonald's Government

Premier MacDonald's opening speech, followed by that of Clynes, in which the house of commons was told that the Labor Party government had abandoned the capital levy, that it would not attempt it "without national approval," has been accorded a much more favorable reception from the capitalist press and the opposition in the house than from the labor members and the rank and file of the Labor Party.

According to London dispatches, there is much disappointment in labor ranks and most of the applause following the outline of the government's policy came from the conservatives.

The labor men sat "glum and silent" says one correspondent.

The mass of the British workers have builded high hopes on the accession of the Labor Party to power. It is going to manifest more and more impatience as the MacDonald government increases, as it will, its efforts to conciliate the middle classes and to convince the tories that their privileges and surpluses are in no serious danger.

The money for the housing campaign, for construction projects of other kinds to relieve unemployment, cannot come from the impoverished workers.

Two million unemployed brought the Labor Party to power and it must solve this problem.

The kind words of the spokesmen of the British capitalists mean nothing. There will be sabotage aplenty when loans are needed to carry out the government program.

Only a capital levy will bring the needed funds, but to institute it and make it effective the Labor Party government will have to have more iron in its blood than it has yet shown.

No government can be fair to both classes in society and in its attempt to enact this role the MacDonald government will either fall or continue as did the social democracy of Germany—as the smoke screen of the big industrialists and financiers.

Boldness and resolution will rally the British workers to the Labor Party movement. A kindly regard for the feelings of the opposition will alienate the best elements of the British working class and leave MacDonald and his cabinet at the mercy of the cleverest ruling class the world has ever seen.

We wish the British Labor Party government well. It is the only bright spot in the darkness of western Europe. But we hope that British labor can and will learn the lessons of world history since 1917.

The Minnesota Daily Star

"Bayonet Rule to Keep Mine Mobs in Hand."

The above headlines, conveying very definitely the impression that it was the Klan that was persecuted in Herrin and that the miners were the creators of the disturbances, are from the Minnesota Daily Star—an alleged farmer-labor paper published in Minneapolis. Its farmer-labor character is due solely to the fact that thousands of farmers and workers gave up their hard-earned dollars to launch this sheet if the above treatment of news of lawless terrorism by anti-labor forces is a guide to the policy of the paper.

Starting with a policy of "fairness" and with one eye always on the advertising receipts, the Minnesota Daily Star is now merely a personal organ of yellow politicians who live in daily fear of the formation of a genuine Farmer-Labor party that will end their juggling with the fortunes of the men and women of labor who furnished the money for their publishing venture.

The policy of the Minnesota Daily Star today is less progressive than that of the Scripps and Hearst papers. It is purely a revenue-gathering proposition and not even successful in that as the fact that it has just gone into the hands of a receiver shows.

Its mental bankruptcy and intellectual dishonesty has evidently been of such a flagrant character that increased advertising revenue has not made up for the withdrawal of a support by its disillusioned farmer and labor readers.

Its treatment of the outrages on the miners at Herrin is what passes for clever journalism with the management of a sheet that has lost all militant virtue and now is trying to crawl into bed with the hangers-on of American capitalism.

American Subtlety

After revealing in detail the corruption of the French press by the czar's gold, Lewis Gannett, in The Nation for February 6th, remarks:

> American journalists are hardly subject to such crass corruption as these documents reveal in the French press.

We hope that Comrade Gannett will not be offended when we ask how he gets that way.

Crass means gross, or stupid and unrefined, according to our dictionary. Perhaps the article was written before the extremely frank Mr. Bonfils of the Denver Post testified before the Senate Teapot Oil committee in great detail as to the black-jack methods employed by himself and henchmen to extract from Harry F. Sinclair juicy sums of the currency of the realm.

There is also the incident of the Albuquerque journal purchased to ensure its silence and it is here that we come upon the chief difference between the corruption of the French and American press. The French sheets were paid to boost long and loud the advantages of the Russian loan. American newspapers are paid generally for silence and lots of it.

Comrade Gannett's ideas of what constitutes crassness and ours differ slightly in relation to another field of American journalistic enterprise. Page advertisements of huge department stores employing thousands of underpaid girls, coupled with the fact that no adverse publicity affecting these concerns ever creeps into the news or editorial columns of the capitalist press as long as the advertisements are forthcoming, is a fairly obvious if not an actually crass method of the silent treatment for revenue purposes.

It might also be remarked in this connection that there is a great scarcity of unfavorable comment concerning the Standard Oil Company in the news of the Teapot Dome investigation nor has any capitalist editor seen fit to point out that the present scandals is only the culmination of years of governmental corruption fostered by the Standard Oil interests.

Full page advertisements of Socony gasoline, pyralin toilet articles, mineral oil laxatives and the thousand and one products of Standard Oil concerns carried by the metropolitan press may be a more gentlemanly means of ensuring silence on unfavorable developments, but certainly they are just as effective as other methods of subsidizing the press and just as easily detected.

In one respect the finance-capitalists of America have the advantage—they own outright many of the papers from which the American people get their information on public questions.

God Bless the Teapot

What is one man's loss is often another's gain. The shocking revelations in the Teapot Dome oil inquiry have hit hard many of the most prominent leaders of the democratic and republican parties.

This blow that has been struck at the so-called representative character of the government of this country should not blind the workers to the fact that while the Teapot scandal is being investigated and while McAdoo, Fall, Denby and others are being held up to the scorn of the public eye, there are many other cases of graft and corruption known to the Senate and the President, but not being investigated.

There is no use denying that many a capitalist politician and industrial magnate is now blessing the Teapot because they feel that the longer this investigation lasts and the more the Wyoming steal continues in the limelight, the less chance there is of their being investigated for lesser and greater crimes and the less likelihood will there be of their being caught.

The instances of capitalist spoilation of the country's wealth are legion. Just now the Senate itself is confronted with about a dozen cases of corruption involving some of the most responsible men of the government. Political expediency coupled with the lack of time have alone delayed the exposure of another oil scandal in California, the handing over of concessions by General Wood to some of his capitalist friends in the Philippines, the crimes perpetrated in the Veterans Bureau and Engraving Bureau, the wholesale robbery involved in the war frauds, the new million dollar bond duplication theft, the Bok peace prize, the Mellon scheme propaganda campaign and Mellon's protection of millionaire tax dodgers.

The Teapot affair and the above enumerated outrages committed against the working and farming masses of this country in the interest of the capitalist class, are only symptoms of the whole diseased condition of economic and political system. In all these steals, the good and the bad, the liberal and the reactionary, the democrat and the republican alike, have been drawn in. Party lines, personal character lines have vanished for the onslaughts of class lines—the principle of making the biggest profits possible and serving the class that rule society today thru its owners and control of the mean of production and exchange and the governmental apparatus.

would be necessary. Fuel was prepared in the district of Zizhni-Elansk, in the hill, 200 versts away by railway and could not be brought in a week. The collapse of the sowing campaign was almost inevitable. And the speaker called for stoicism, but his words were dry, did not sink into the meeting, and hung unwanted and homeless like little bits of paper in the wind.

Ziman ended, and a Red Army soldier with a browless, broad red face, opened discussion of his report. He said he had fought on the front for two years for the Soviet Government, and in the villages everything was getting worse and worse. They were injuring the villages by the corn-collection, there was a lot of scoundrelism in all these economy committees, food committees and soviets of public economy. It had become extremely hard for a poor man to live. We have cleaned the people out of corn and now we howl about it. Ah! He wrung his hands and returned to his place.

"What? Are we to be hungry again?" A second began tearfully from the middle of the arena. He was thin, with a scar on his neck, and he took a long time in telling how hard it was to live on a ration of forty pounds of flour a month, with a family. "There's thievery going on," he added viciously at the end of his speech.

But there were also other speeches and more of these than of the first kind. Workmen and Red Army soldiers walked excitedly into the middle of the arena and, hampered by the unaccustomed attention of the crowd, they made clumsy speeches, upbraided Ziman, but agreed that they ought to hold out stoically. To sit with folded hands, there was no stoicism in that, and they sought a way out, feeling for it, like blind men. But the meeting did not understand their disconnected words, and one orator disputed with the one who had spoken before him, tho both meant the same thing.

And Ziman in the end stopped making notes of criticisms for his concluding speech: small, wretched, he jerked his head with nervousness, listening to the reproachful, seeking speeches, and was worried precisely by those of the speakers who saw somewhere a way out. He did not see it, and muttered, angrily, "Demagogy. . . . Meeting stuff. . . ." And the orators went on spasmodically bumping into glass walls, and could not tell the meeting of their clear plans, but talked of some detail or other, of how, from somewhere, "It would be possible to get axes." The meeting grew excited, and people shouted from their places, regardless of the President's bell. And then a man above middle height, round-shouldered, came out, and took an old blue cap from his square head, disclosing a high forehead with a deep wrinkle in it.

"I call on Comrade Robeiko," said the President, and the meeting tried to be silent in order to hear a speech that would not be loud.

For Robeiko must not speak. He has consumption of the throat. He had not meant to speak, but had listened, and for a long time had been thinking. "Ziman is helpless and cannot see the way out which many of the speakers see but cannot put into words." He thought regretfully, Why had the Party Committee brought this report to a big meeting? And all the time he had waited for somebody to name the way out, to put it into words and save Robeiko from unnecessary suffering. . . . For Robeiko must not speak. Sounds tear his throat into rough red bleeding scraps. But he must say a little, just a few words, and the question will be clear, and all will have bright faces, for all will know how to name the road, the way out, that many dimly see.

He began to speak in a low voice, fearing to awake the pain which just then was slumbering deep in his throat. . . . But nothing could be heard, people stretched out their necks like martyrs, and Robeiko made up his mind . . . his voice, as it were, made a jump, and all heard every word, and all had grateful faces. But, every word, like a sharp splinter of glass, rose to his larynx and tore into scraps its delicate fibre and it hurt him so that tears slipped from his eyes, the sweat stood on his forehead, and his voice clanged and broke.

He said that Ziman had told the meeting the truth and that they ought not to reproach him for this. For not Ziman had created this truth; he had told them of the danger, and for that they owed him thanks. Only there was no need to lose their heads; they needed only to look about them and somewhere a way out would be found. It was necessary quietly and calmly to look about them. Surely the party, in its day, had found the way out from worse holes than this. Their strength and wisdom lay in quiet investigation and determined action.

There was a way out. Many saw it but did not know how to talk of it. It was clear enough that the whole difficulty was fuel. If they could get a little fuel they could at once bring wood from Nizhni-Elansk. "And if we have the wood we can in a week bring the seed for the sowing. Everything depends on fuel, on a few hundred cubic sazhins of wood. . . . Where can we get them?"

Obviously, there were many gardens in the town, and twelve versts outside, at the monastery, there were big woods. There was wood for them and plenty of it. In a week the fuel from Nizhni-Elansk would be there and they could begin to bring the seed. But all must be done quickly and decisively; they must themselves take axes and saws, stand at the head, compel the slackers and the bourgeoisie, bring in the Red Army and all the workers. Only, they must hurry; if in two weeks the seed should be here, then in a month the fields would be sown.

But his speech was cut short by a dry, breaking cough. For a minute, for two, he coughed, and the crowd waited eagerly, many, many sympathetic faces gleamed before him, and he coughed on, twisted himself with coughing, and all saw it, were silent, and only took breath, first one and then another.

The little town under the unchanging sky slept as it were with a heavy after-dinner sleep. In every house geraniums shone in the windows, and on their beggarly but pretentious leaves lay flowers like purple and red flies. Oh, how many of these ash-colored wooden boxes, street upon street of them, how stuffy and close in each one of them! Many grim ikons in the high corner and on little tables, covered with crocheted table-cloths, albums bound in velvet. Dirt in the kitchens, black-beetles running on the walls, and flies dismally buzzing on the window-panes.

The life of the people who live in these crowded houses is like a grey September day, when a drizzle of rain sounds monotonously on the window, and thru the panes, lined with the running drops, you can see a grey railing and a red calf wandering in the mud. So, year after year, this life goes on. Every day early in the morning elderly women milk cows, go to the market with baskets, and then in the kitchen after dinner wash the greasy dishes. And bald-headed men with dull eyes, in old patched breeches and mended boots, go to their work, buy and sell something or other, and work at some industry, each one alone in a dark room. On Sundays the women smooth their hair tightly down, put on purple, yellow or blue dresses, take the children to church, and in the evening gather together to drink tea while the men get drunk with vodka or beer and bump their foreheads on the table.

All of them, at that hour when, dismally drooping its wings, the sound of the bell calling to the Saturday evening services floated mournfully over the town, all of them hid dislike for those who were meeting in the Circus, and this timorous dislike united the whole town in a single black cloud invisible by men. . . .

At this hour Raphael Antonovitch Senator went for a walk, Raphael Antonovitch who lived in the two-storied stone house on the ground floor of which was a chemist's shop.

They had requisitioned the chemist's shop. . . . They had taken down the black board with its affectionately inviting gold letters, "The Rozhdestvensky Drug Store, R. A. Senator." And now, instead of that, insolently, from a red board, black letters were shouting, "Health Department, Communal Drug Store, No. 1."

Raphael Antonovitch stood on the sandy hillock, drank in all the hidden dumb dislike that poured out of the little houses, dissolved in it his own bitter resentment and hatred, and silently sent it all in the direction of the Circus where that incomprehensibly hostile life was going on. A little stout man in a grey coat and a worn hat (one of those hats nicknamed "Good Day and Goodbye") he stood for a long time on the hillock. Little malicious eyes glittered under the brim of his hat, and when he turned round and went slowly off a bit of fat red neck showed and on it a lot of short black and grey hairs.

He helped his wife in the housework, asthmatically cut wood, took the hogwash to the cow, and while his wife was milking it silently watched the white stream running from under her fingers into dark milky froth. . . . And the regular sound of milking, the peaceful grunting of the pigs behind the railing, the perfume of the cosy, twilit cowshed, all this comforted him and he told his wife:

"I had been at the Khanzhins! Their brother has come from Tula. He says that the end is soon coming. The people are revolting against the Bolsheviks, the Poles are wanting to fight again, and even the workmen in Moscow. . . ."

"God in His mercy grant it," murmured his wife, and Raphael Antonovitch walked up and down the yard with his hands behind his back, counting, as his custom was, the logs left over from the building of the house, for fear lest some should have been stolen.

But, when the grey cloudy day, hiding the joy of Spring so deeply that it was as if it did not exist, ended in a scarlet sunset, and the sun, melting the clouds, gave the earth the last gold of its slanting evening rays, and went off somewhere behind the houses, behind the woods, behind the fields, behind the yellow sandy hillock, and when the clouds hanging over the sunset rejoiced with nervous tenderness at something momentary and fugitive and accompanied the sun with a trembling of elusive singing tones, then by the dark staircase past the dirty water-closet and wash-tub, hurriedly, Raphael Antonovitch fled to his own room and groaned with his asthma.

For, at this scarlet hour of sunset, the "Internationale" proudly floated from the Circus, and, with the power of hundreds of voices was carried over the town to the evening sun, like a red avenging angel, and Robeiko would be coming home at once, for he had taken lodging in the house of Raphael Antonovitch, who did not like meeting Robeiko and was afraid of him.

CHAPTER TWO.

UNDER the quiet light of an electric lamp, in a study furnished in oak, the meeting of the Party Committee began. Robeiko made a short report. He told the comrades of his plan for getting wood. But they were inattentive, talked among themselves in loud whispers, during the report, and smiled friendlily at each other. It was pleasant after a whole day of exhausting, nervous work, to see the familiar faces of their comrades. And consequently the flaming appeals of Robeiko were quenched like sparks falling in water. No one seconded his suggestions, but, when he had finished the report, Ziman proved at length that the whole project was impracticable, that the melting of the streams would prevent the bringing of the wood to the railway, and that there where not enough saws, axes or carts. . . .

Then Karaulov objected, the military Brigade Commander, an old Cossack with a dark yellow face, framed in a thin little beard. He puffed out clouds of smoke from his pipe and muttered in a dull voice, "There are a lot of bandits hanging about round the town . . . and here are you proposing to take the Red Army soldiers twelve versts away. For without them you will not cut down the monastery woods. With mobilized bourgeois and half-dead Soviet employes, you will not get far. . ."

And Robeiko, lacerated by his cough, and spattering the rich, flowered purple carpet with spittle and green mucus, replied to Ziman with figures from a note-book and with a hoarse voice told Karaulov that there was no other way out, that the revolution demanded . . . that they would have to take the risk.

"You risk that they will take the town, cut the Communists to pieces, cut off the district from the center for several months. . ." distinctly, maliciously, in a voice not loud but audible by all, said Karaulov and then suddenly raised his voice and cried angrily, "What are you fooling about, Robeiko? Boris Pilniak, the Greatest of Russian Writers

By VICTOR SERGE.

(Note: In a later issue of the Magazine Section of the Daily Worker we will print one of the most remarkable of the short stories by this young Russian whom Trotzky rates as the greatest of the writers produced by the revolution. The story has been translated by Louis Lozowick who is an authority on the latest art and literature of Soviet Russia and who will continue to translate and write for the Daily Worker.)

PILNIAK is decidedly the most characteristic and the most celebrated of the Russian authors. His first work appeared in 1920 in the Moscow state edition. He writes exclusively about the Revolution. He has written a novel, called, "The Bare Year," as well as a couple of volumes of short stories: "Tales from Petrograd," "Ivan and Maria," which embrace the whole of the Revolution.

Pilniak's manner seems strange at first. But it is in absolute harmony with the spirit of the time. He writes rather in the style of futurist painters. It would be utterly impossible to describe the Russian Revolution in the style of a Balzac describing the sordid and monotonous life of a father Grandet, as well as with the utter indifference, the finish and perfection of style, with the absolute harmony of the whole of the detail—which we witness in Anatole France's—"The Gods Athirst." It is only the writers of the time to come that will be able to describe the Revolution. We, as well as Pilniak, are incapable of doing so. The Revolution, which has done away with so many forms of the past, has alike cleared up many a literary prejudice of the past.

It is hopeless to look for a continuity of events in the work of this author. Intrigue (how pitiful this expression) does not exist. No chief and secondary figures either, in his work. The movement of masses in which every single figure is a world for himself, representing in himself completion. Events rushing in and overpowering one, numerous human lives intermingling, each of which always represents in itself an occasion never to be repeated. The whole of them, in the end, of not much importance on the background of "Russia," the snowdrift and Revolution, for the country, the snowdrift, and the masses, are the only things remaining and stable. The exterior aspect of Pilniak's work corresponds to the contents of it. The pages often wear a somewhat strange aspect. One page carries the description of an old priest among his ikons, breaking under the burdens of his sins. Suddenly the narration breaks up and one hears the people in the street passing by, talking; a new interruption, and in comes, tearing along, a hungry, howling wolf with bared teeth. This constant change of description and pictures requires, of course, different aspects of the page. The reading of this book is, in a certain sense, rather bewildering. But the final impression is strong and powerful. Pilniak is under the influence of the masters of later years, such as Andrei Biely and Alexei Remizov, but he resembles them in manner only, and not in contents.

He has such a lot to show and to describe, and to bring out in his book, that every manner and form is oppressive to him. He lets life drift where it will. Classicism is of value, but in shapes long existing. In the "Bare Year" we find eight beautifully treated subjects: the little bourgeois, the dying aristocracy, the sectarians, the anarchists, the monastery, the train number 57, the peasants, the bolsheviks. But the same stern unity reigns over all on account of a totality of the varying dynamics, as in some heroic symphony. In the course of the story "Ivan and Maria," the shouting of a tainer, who has nothing whatever to do with the story is repeated, a black slave of international metallurgy, who quite inert and apathetic from his work seeks his couch for his nightly rest. But what a number of idyllic and psychologically fine novels would require just such a refrain in order to bring them back to the actualities of life!

The author leaves nothing unobserved, he is anxious to communicate and give back everything he sees, and everything that impresses him. In a word, dynamism, simultaneousness, absolute rythmical realism, these are the dominant features of his literary form. We must not forget to mention his love of exact detail, of the minutest description of customs, of the sentence caught up in the street, all of which are simply given back without any particular commentary, exactly as some historian would note it.

Pilniak's interest seems to concentrate itself chiefly on the manners and customs of the Revolution, and this chiefly in the country and the provinces. The general play of action of his stories, is the small town (Riasan the Apple, or Ordynin Town) in "The Bare Year," which he really does seem to thoroly know. What is the chief thing that he observes? The swamp of the past. In the small, provincial town the petty bourgeois leads a life not much better than that of a pig, between his counter, the well laid table, and the warm, sweaty, dirty bed under the saints' pictures. He is brutal towards the weak, hard and of unbending will towards the oppressed—servants, women and children; self-satisfied, egotistical, ignorant, heir of a thousand similar years.

War took the the young men out of the swamp of the small towns. "As Donat came back, he had learned nothing new, but the old was not forgotten, and he wanted to destroy the whole of it. He came in order to create." He hated the old. The dread of it occasioned by the mighty shock of Revolution is one of the chief reasons of Revolution.

In this stagnating swamp of the times gone by the former rulers are abandoned to ruin on account of their weakened spirit, and their poor blood. In a word, it is an historical judgment that weighs over them. The princes Ordynin (whose fathers once founded the town of Ordynin) are at present syphilitic and are approaching their end. The old father is waiting for it, surrounded by his ikons, and practicing self-castigation. Egon is a drunkard, stealing and selling his sister's last clothes in order to drink (this is the year 1919).

Chapter VII of the "Bare Year," called, "without a title," consists but of three words: "Russia, Revolution, and snow drift." The beauty of Russia's landscape blends with the drift of Revolution. One never knows how to discern them in Pilniak's stories. I do not think that it is even necessary to do so. Pilniak compares old Asiatic Russia to the Russia of today, which he sees rising out of the drift, and we must admit that he sees it extraordinarily well, and that is his chief merit.

Listen to this conversation taking place in a rolling train . . . "In a hundred years people will speak about the actual times as about the period of life when the human spirit rose to a glorious standard . . . well, but my shoes are very worn, I really would like to go on a trip abroad, to eat in some good restaurant and to drink a decent whisky." These are the terms in which a young engineer is thoughtfully speaking in Pilniak's book, quite like reality in new Russia; it is not the engineers that are life's masters. This leads us to the bolsheviks. Pilniak flatters the Revolution just as little as the revolutionaries. The gloomy pages as well as the nightmare ones are indeed not scarce in the course of his work. You see in his book peasant women paying with their own flesh and blood for a place in a filthy train full of bugs, a typhoid fever transport train, escaping out of the famine region. A little further a hysterical Chekist, shooting down her lover. Peasants are described buying coffins for the whole of their family in advance, as they are quite sure not to be spared either by famine or typhoid fever. The book contains pages full of terror, one is, however, not quite sure whether the accents of it are real or [illegible]. Western people are yet not fully aware of the martyrdom that Russia underwent. Pilniak seems to be quite well informed, and writes it down accordingly with the blood of his heart. His constant aim is to be as close to exact truth as possible.

In the drift there is but one kind of people that remains upright, and these are the Bolsheviks. In the morning they used to meet in the convent (strange times indeed!). Men not unlike leather, in leather jackets, almost all of them tall and manly looking, handsome and strong with hair curling out of their caps, pushed deep into their necks. Each of them had an excess of will in his tensed muscles, in the expression about the mouth and forehead, in the soft and decided movements of the lithe bodies, heaps of will and audacity. Here we are before the elite of the Russian people, one of the oldest in existence. And it really was a good thing that they used to wear leather, because thus the sweat lemonade psychology could not soften them. The whole of their bearing said "we know well what we are about, we have made up our minds." Here is one of them described more particularly: "Archip Archipov used to spend his days in the Executive, in writing, and the evenings about town, in the factories, lectures, and meetings. He used to write knitting his brows, holding his pen almost like an axe. In his speech he used to pronounce the foreign words incorrectly. He was an early riser, and in the morning he crammed and crammed as much as he could; algebra, political economy, geography, Russian history, Karl Marx's Capital, he had a German grammar, and a dictionary of Russianized foreign words by Gavkin.

Father Archip, on receiving the information of his having cancer, condemning him to awful sufferings and unavoidable death, goes to his son, and talks to him about it: "do you believe it to be a wise thing to make an end of it?" he asks him. An impressive scene follows. "I believe I'd do it if in your place, father, but of course you must act as you think best." "Live, my son, go on working, marry and bring up children." Not a word more is wasted on this occasion, both remain decided and sure as to the next thing to be done; the one for going on living, the other to blow his brains out.

Everything in Pilniak's works is tense and painful, except a lighter passage following this stark one. A couple appear in it. A Bolshevik couple, strong and simple, both of them, and of an extreme inner honesty. The man Archipov speaks to the girl called Natalia, whom he wants to have for his wife: "I am always in the factory, in the Executive, quite taken up by the revolution . . . as a young man I have had some love affairs, I have sinned with women. But it did not last. I have never been ill. We shall work together. We shall have handsome children. I want them to be sensible, well, you know, besides you are better educated than I am. But I won't give up studying. We are young and healthy." Archipov hung his head. She consents with no less simplicity. One might be inclined to think that these revolutionaries are afraid of, and trying to avoid the passionate impulses that burn in a couple who are about to mate . . . "Yes, children, that is the chief thing, but I am no longer a young girl. The man shrugs his shoulders. Chief thing is to be human." Cleanliness, reason! "Love or no love," she goes on speaking, "we will have an intimacy of our own and children, and then work, work, my love! There will be no lies betwen us, no suffering!" Archip turned silently back to his room. The word intimacy was not mentioned in Gavkin's dictionary of the Russianized foreign words. Has the author, perhaps, been trying to idealize the Bolsheviks? It does not room. The word intimacy was nat the will to establish a new form of life is their dominating trait.

Surely Boris Pilniak has seen other heroes than those during the revolution in Russia. But the Bolsheviks are the most deliberate ones, conquest is in them, simplicity, reason, conscience, will.

In the meantime the Russian anarchists are proclaiming a passionate philosophy of strength, "who are free under a black banner," working in the fields of a confiscated prince's estate, at the same time during which the Revolution was fighting on its whole front. They do not attempt to seize the leadership in Revolution, but they drift along, making use of it wherever they please. "Natalie had again a feeling of the Revolution carrying her off to some region of joy where, however, sorrow was always following every tempest of joy." . . . They work, work, love, dream and fight. And their adventures end, as has often been the case in the Ukraine. When the old emigree, Harry, asks for his share of money, which was seized in Ekaterinoslav, Youzik refuses to give it. Shots are fired in the night! Free people murder others no less free. They have murdered the handsome young woman because of money, they have murdered the woman who has tasted the violent joys of Revolution. And thus the black banner turns to be the shroud of the young dead thing. The Soviets send a troop of soldiers who occupy the forsaken commune. Somewhere Pilniak writes: "I remained in the free commune Peskis up to the day when the anarchists killed each other."

I wonder whether I have succeeded in pointing out the strong realism of this new author, the strength of which is sometimes so overpowering that the immediate impression of things and particulars stifles the totality of the impression. This realist has a cult of energy and strength of man, beast and even nature. "The strongest among men are the revolutionaries and among beasts of prey." Pilniak likes to introduce the life of wolves into the lives of men who are in a state of mutiny. "Thru wind and snowdrift in the sinking darkness, are the wolves trotting at the heels of each other a grey herd, males and females, the leaders ahead, and soon snow had covered their traces. (Ivan and Maria.)

Some of the stories of Pilniak from the years '18 and '19 are extremely remarkable on account of their being radically different from his new things. The oldest ones are exactly in the grey dull tones of Tshechov's worst period; the drama of the spleen in the utterly uninteresting life of a little bourgeois woman. The other ones, a shade better, describes the same sensations, as was usually done in the pre-revolutionary time. Life which had no issue on account of its utterly incurable mediocrity. Without the mighty uproar of revolution it is not at all unlikely that the author would have remained in the old current, and would not have added much to Russian literature. Boris Pilniak owes everything to the Russian Revolution, up to his style even; it was the revolution which gave him the originality of his talent, the insight in the development of things, the broad view with which he embraces boundless Russia, rich in suffering and struggle, the vision of surging strength, the whole of those things which were quite hidden to the authors of the old regime. That is one of the chief reasons why one is sorry to find in his writings only an intuitive perception and a primitive admiration of the revolution. What does this revolution want? A reader must be quite possessed and overcome by this idea on shutting this book.

What is the whole commotion about? Is the author capable of giving an answer to this? The lack of ideology, one might almost say, of convictions, deprives his work of a foundation. But it is precisely for this reason that it acquires in our eyes a quite particular value; because it is the best proof of his spontaneity, the frankness of his statements. This work shows both in form and subject, how deeply the author, who himself admits to being neither a communist nor a revolutionary, is fully permeated by the spirit of revolution.

After having finished a commercial school, Pilniak left the provincial nest, in which he spent the heroic years of 1917-1921, but to supply his need in potatoes and flour. The whole of Pilniak's interest is sacrificed to the social life interests. But our opinion is that he does not misunderstand the ideas, the influence of which, is but too well known to him. The totality of the ideas of a class of society that is struggling, carrying off victory and power, becomes an enormous factor in the renovating process of customs, this is the idea running thru all of his work. The new author is not yet in full possession of the whole of his strength. He is as yet not entirely clear, he is confused, hasty, bombastic, uneven, but despite all this, his work is today a beautiful grand song on the revolutionary energy of Soviet Russia.

The Sickle, the Hammer--and Gompers

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

WE Communists contend that Samuel Gompers and the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor which he leads are part and parcel of the machinery of American imperialism.

We go farther than this and state than such policy as this officialdom has for its own guidance consists of aiding American imperialism in carying out its conquests abroad, in adopting the nationalistic viewpoint of American capitalism as its own and in attempting at all times to convince the masses of this country that American capitalism is a different and more altruistic brand than that in operation in other and less fortunate nations.

This means accepting American government as the beginning and end of all working class endeavor and it is on this premise that is based such programs as Samuel Gompers and his henchmen have. The truth of this assertion is altered not at all by the fact that from time to time Gompers refers to the fact that our institutions are not perfect; they are nearer to perfection than the institutions of other countries and that is enough for him. American institutions are the yardstick by which the achievements of the workingclass the world over are measured by American labor's leaders.

Weird Alliances.

This attitude naturally leads the American trade union movement into strange alliances—alliances entered into by its officials with very few sops to democracy thrown to the membership in the shape of information and discussion had thruout the movement itself.

Two events of world-wide importance have taken place recently. In the United States there has been a drive for recognition of Soviet Russia followed by the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the charges and counter-charges made by friends and enemies of Soviet Russia.

In Great Britain the Labor Party has come to power and its first official act was to extend full recognition to Soviet Russia.

It is not surprising, therefore, to find that the American Federationist for February, edited by Samuel Gompers, devotes approximately eight pages to these two events.

Let us understand that in its loyalty to American capitalist institutions, the American Federation of Labor, as represented by Gompers, yields to no one. Since the Russian revolution, Gompers has even gone one step farther and now considers himself and the trade union movement the especially appointed guardian of American capitalist government.

The Great Defender.

The reputation for unthinking patriotism which he acquired as an important cog in the House of Morgan war machine has been considerably enhanced by his activities in his new role of defender of our steel, oil, copper, railroad, shipping and banking government against the attacks of the 25,000 Communists in America. This self-appointed savior of America has thus been able to pose before the Civic Federation and other organizations of employers as the knight in white armor repelling the red hordes of Soviet propagandists.

We find on page 45 of the American Federationist the Gompers credo—the ideological base on which has been erected a political structure in which are ensconced the high-salaried misleaders of the trade union movement.

The structure creaks and groans as the winds of capitalist bankruptcy and mass discontent assail it but to Gompers and his kind the storm is purely an artificial creation of a handful of vicious malcontents under the inspiration of Soviet Russia.

The Gompers Creed.

> America has established certain standards of life and living. America has established certain institutions and certain guarantees of freedom. America has established, above all, a certain rate of progress and is working out a certain definite philosophy in regard to her industry and the relation of human beings to industry.

It is just as well for Gompers that he does not try to be specific and tell us exactly what standards of living, what guarantees of freedom, what rate of progress and what definite philosophy America has established and is working out. We do not intend to ask him to be specific about these things and expose himself to ridicule but we do ask what and who he means by "America."

The Happy Family.

No other conclusion is possible than by "America" he means the whole social grouping and that he intends to convey the impression that Americans are one large family which collectively and individually is consciously striving to usher in an era of peace and plenty.

In other words, Gompers, as the official spokesman of the trade union movement, rejects entirely the idea that there are two classes in America. He tells us exactly what Elbert H. Gary, John D. Rockefeller, the plunderers of the natural resources and oppressors of the masses and their mouthpiece, like Coolidge and Hughes, tell us, that there is only one class—Americans.

When the admitted leader of the organized workers of this country promulgates this puerile 100 per cent Americanism we can begin to understand that almost anything can be expected when in his official position he comes in contact with a movement that laughs long and loud at a conception of modern society—European or American—that is at such obvious variance with the facts.

A Major Mistake.

Gompers is frightened by the strength of the movement for Soviet recognition in the United States; he has not been re-assured by the recent recognition of Soviet Russia by the Labor Party government now in power in the land of his birth. He has every reason to be alarmed.

Gompers has made a major tactical mistake in taking up the role of Soviet Russia's bitterest enemy, of leading the fight against recognition and of making that fight for the announced reason that recognition would be tantamount to ruin of the American trade union movement.

He has placed himself in a position from which there is no retreat but which is untenable and the recognition of Soviet Russia will in all probability mean the downfall of the Gompers machine.

Strange Bedfellows.

Labor officialdom, led by Gompers, has allied itself with the worst enemies of the labor movement. It is the boast of Gompers and John L. Lewis that their Russian policy is exactly the same as that of the state department; in their propaganda against Russian recognition they have not scrupled to use material furnished them by the worst labor-hating administration in American history.

The Senate has appointed a committee to investigate the whole question of Russian recognition, including the charges of anti-government propaganda which Gompers claims his efforts alone have made unsuccessful.

Since the investigation began the whole Gompers machine has been set in motion to disseminate the lies, half-truths and innuendos of Chester M. Wright and William English Walling, the anti-Russian experts of the Gompers administration.

Every labor paper in the country has been furnished with yards of anti-Soviet and anti-Communist material and many of them, particularly those that are privately owned and run in the interest of labor politicians, have printed it.

Recognition of First Importance.

Recognition of the workers' and farmers' government of Russia has been made the most important issue before the American trade union movement. Gompers says in the February Federationist:

> There is no question in the whole field of international relations of more importance to American labor than the question of relations with the Soviet autocracy.

Because the British Labor Party before it became the government announced that one of its first acts would be the recognition of Russia, the victory that followed brings no joy to Gompers. He speaks sneeringly of the tremendous achievements of the British workers.

He takes the opportunity to show again his belief that his policies need never change tho the world may and does. He says:

> So there is in England a situation well worth watching. In what may develop the American Federation of Labor will be deeply interested, but it will find there no reason for abandonment or modification of the political program and political methods which have so long served admirably to cope with the situation in the United States.

The same yesterday, today, and forever and ever, Amen!

It takes more than a Labor Party government in the British Empire or a workers' and farmers' government in one-sixth of the world's surface to convince the cautious Gompers that labor should have a political party of its own.

Not Real Reason.

But is the conservatism of the aged and the hatred of class conscious political action the only reason for the fury which the thought of Russian recognition arouses in the breast of Gompers?

We think not.

Is it a sincere belief that economic action is all-sufficing for the workers that is responsible for the Gompers criticism of the British Labor Party and his campaign against the formation of a Farmer-Labor party in the United States?

Again we think not.

The Communists have a clearly defined program which the experience of the last two years has shown makes a tremendous appeal to the organized workers and which includes amalgamation into industrial unions, a mass farmer-labor party and recognition of Soviet Russia.

Gompers has found it hard to fight against amalgamation and independent class political action by the organized workers; there are no arguments that can be brought successfully against the use of weapons so clearly necessary so the fight against amalgamation and a labor party has been carried on under the guise of a fight against the recognition of Soviet Russia.

Evading the Issue.

According to the Gompers propagandists, the Soviet government, the Third International, the Communist Party of Russia and the Workers (Communist) Party of America are striving to enslave the workers of the world and the American workers first of all.

The American Federation of Labor, says Gompers, is the only defense the workers have against the horrible tortures the Communists are preparing to inflict on them.

Amalgamation, class political action, are only devices to distract the attention of the workers until recognition of Soviet Russia is had when the bloody rule of Communism will crush the free-born American wage-earners.

The answer to the demand for amalgamation consists, then, of a recital and denunciation of the alleged atrocities of the Soviet government; the answer to the demand for a class farmer and labor party is the recital of more alleged atrocities—generally furnished by the accommodating department of justice.

The real issue has become the recognition of the Soviet government and upon this issue Gompers stands or falls.

Gompers himself knows this and this is the reason for the deluge of anti-Soviet and anti-Communist propaganda that has flooded the editorial desks of every labor paper in the United States reaching flood tide since the Borah committee began its sessions.

Laying the Ghost.

Once the Soviet government is recognized by the United States it emerges from the bloody mist with which it has been shrouded by the Gompers propagandists and becomes, for the organized workers of the United States, a reality which they can investigate at their leisure. It will no longer be a horrid mystery to which the Wolls and Wallings can refer in trembling tones and with which they can cause cold chills to chase one another up and down the back of the dues paying membership.

Amalgamation and the farmer-labor party movement then will have to be fought on their merits and not shoved into the background while the scarlet specter of Communism is paraded in front of the rank and file.

Gompers made one of the great blunders of his career when he carried the Wilson war against the workers' and farmers' government of Russia into the unions; he made another blunder when he used the ignorant fear of Communists and Communism to prevent action for amalgamation and a farmer-labor party and he made the blunder of blunders when he made the non-recognition of Soviet Russia a policy of officialdom of the American Federation of Labor.

Stronger Forces.

Gompers cannot prevent the recognition of Soviet Russia because powerful economic forces are making it inevitable. He has made a major mistake and he is going to suffer all the humiliation of defeat in his policy of enmity to the workers and peasants of Russia.

Recognition means the loss of his leadership and it also means that he will—if recognition does not actually kill him—live to see the American labor movement progressing steadily and rapidly towards industrial unionism and fighting its enemies on the political field with a mass party as its weapon. These are the terrible consequences that will result from Soviet recognition—they will hardly fulfill the Gompers prophecies of disaster.

The barrage of anti-Soviet and anti-Communist propaganda that the Wallings and Wrights are laying down at present is all the evidence needed to show that Gompers realizes—too late—the desperate situation is which he has placed himself.

Gompers has been hooked by the point of the Soviet sickle. The hammer is ready if needed.

My People

By CARL SANDBURG

My people are gray, pigeon gray, dawn gray, storm gray.
I call them beautiful
And I wonder where they are going.

A LENIN LIBRARY IN AMERICA - By JOHN PEPPER

THE Central Executive Committee of our Party made an important decision to publish a Lenin library.

The Lenin library will contain ten volumes, together about 1,600 pages, ten volumes of uniform size. Each volume will have an explanatory preface and notes. Seven of these volumes have never been published before in the English language, and three exist only in incomplete editions.

A Lenin library! Ten volumes of Lenin's writings! One hundred thousand copies of Lenin's works in English! A hundred thousand soldiers of Leninism! A hundred thousand Communist fighters in the United States—not native-born, but English speaking. It is a great, an enormous undertaking. It is the surest sign of the growth and strengthening of our Party, that we can venture it. It is a sign of strength and it will be a source of strength.

The ten volumes of the Lenin library will be the following:

1. Marx and Marxism.
2. Imperialism, the Final Stage of Capitalism.
3. The Agrarian Question in America.
4. State and Revolution.
5. The Shaping of Bolshevism.
6. The Struggle Against the Second International.
7. "Leftism"—An Infantile Malady of Communism.
8. The Organization of the Revolution.
9. The Working Class and the Farmers.
10. The Suppressed Peoples and the Social Revolution.

What was the governing principle in my selection (our Central Executive Committee has honored me with the editorship of the Lenin library) of precisely these writings of Lenin as his representative works?

Lenin's complete writings would make up, not 1,600 pages, but ten times as much. The task in the selection was a double one. On the one hand, to give a good picture of Leninism. On the other hand, to omit everything which would not be understandable to American workers.

The chief aim of the Lenin library is to give a complete picture of Leninism for intelligent workingmen. Lenin was not only the greatest statesman of our period, but at the same time the greatest scholar, in social science. Lenin was the only Marxist who added a new story to the magnificent edifice of Marxism. The guiding spirit of the working class in the Nineteenth Century was Marxism. In the Twentieth Century, Leninism. Leninism is Marxism applied to the present imperialistic period of capitalist society.

Lenin was an orthodox Marxist. During his whole life he fought against eclecticism which wanted to "complete" Marxism from various philosophical systems, such as Kantism, Machism, Dietzgenism (or in the latest period), Freudism. Lenin considered Marxism as a complete outlook on life. Marxism was for Lenin the method of analysis and interpretation of society. If we want to understand Leninism it is necessary to learn to know Lenin's interpretation of the Marxist method of inquiry. The volume "Marx and Marxism" of our library will complete Lenin's essays and articles on Marx and the Marxist method.

With the weapon of the Marxist method in his hand, Lenin carried out the fundamental task of Marxists, the concrete analysis of the concrete facts. Marx for the first time discovered the essence of capitalism. Lenin for the first time discovered the essence of imperialism, the final stage of capitalism. In "Capital," Marx analyzed for the first time the revolution of agriculture thru the capitalist method of production. Karl Kautsky in his "Agrarian Question" explained the revolutionary effect of American competition on European agriculture. But Lenin was the first who gave a concrete Marxist analysis of Russian and American agriculture in two of his works: "The Agrarian Question in America" and "Agriculture in Russia." Marx and Engels for the first time analyzed the role of state power in a class society, and showed that by the development of capitalist society, inevitable necessity goes thru the dictatorship of the proletariat to a class-less and state-less society. The decadents forgot and passed in silence over this basic fact. Lenin's inquiries then again brought the questions of state and dictatorship of the proletariat to the consciousness of the working class. Our Lenin library will have three volumes which give Lenin's concrete analysis of these basic facts of our period. The volume, "Imperialism, the Final Stage of Capitalism." This book of Lenin was never printed in English completely. Only the first half has appeared. The volume "The Agrarian Question in America" is especially timely for us today in the midst of the agricultural crisis in the United States. Lenin's analysis is based upon the 1910 census, but we will bring it up to date by using the 1920 census as well as the new congressional investigation and reports of the government. The volume, "State and Revolution," will comprise the most important studies of Lenin on this theme: "The State and Revolution; The Proletarian Revolution and the Renegade Kautsky; and Material on the Question of the Proletarian Dictatorship.

The concrete analysis of our imperialist period led Lenin to the conclusion that the working class must conduct the fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat. But at the same time Lenin recognized that the working class itself is not and cannot be entirely uniform, that imperialism itself has the tendency to divide the working class thru buying one part and suppressing the other. The fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat can be waged by the working class only if it is led by a revolutionary party which, against the sectional, regional, national and temporary interests of the working class represents the common, general, international and permanent interests of the working class as an entity. No one has had a clearer view of the role of the Communist Party in the revolution than Lenin. The book, "Shaping of Bolshevism," will present the writings of Lenin which crystallized and made conscious the Party of the Bolsheviki against the Mensheviki.

Lenin from the beginning saw clearly the two dangers which the revolutionary party of the proletarians faces: opportunism and sectarianism. The volume "The Struggle Against the Second International" will present selections from brilliant essays and articles of his which appeared under the title: "Against the Stream." (It is a pity that we cannot print in our Lenin library the masterly articles of Zinoviev which appeared in the same period and in the same book.) The volume of our library entitled "'Leftism,' An Infantile Malady of Communism" gives Lenin's ruthless struggle against revolutionary phrases and for revolutionary realism.

The party of the proletariat, cleansed of opportunism as well as of revolutionary phrase, must begin its difficult march towards seizure of power. The Party must in the first place win the confidence of the majority of the working class and then it must organize the armed revolution itself. The volume of our library, "The Organization of the Revolution," will give those writings of Lenin which he wrote during the period of masterly maneuvering from March to November, 1917, and his analysis of the lessons of the armed uprising in 1905.

But Lenin saw clearly that the revolution of the working class does not take place in a vacuum, that the revolution is never the achievement of a single class, but that it is always a mighty mass movement of the various classes of the suppressed and exploited. With wonderful clearness Lenin recognized—and this recognition is one of the chief pillars of Leninism—that the proletarian revolution in our imperialist period is accompanied by the revolt of the ruined lower middle class, the rebellion of exploited farmers as well as by uprisings of suppressed nations and oppressed colonies. Lenin again and again repeated—and that is another principal pillar of Leninism—that the victory of the social revolution is impossible if the proletariat does not form an alliance with all non-capitalist elements, especially farmers and with the masses of the oppressed nations and races. The volume "The Working Class and the Farmers," will give the most important writings of Lenin on this theme, such as; "The Attitude of the Communists to the Middle Farmers," "The Working Class and the Farmers," the "New Economic Policy in Soviet Russia (The Tax in Kind)." The volume "The Suppressed Peoples and the Social Revolution" will contain those pioneer essays of "Against the Stream" in the self-determination of nations, and Lenin's other studies on the question of nationalities.

That will be the contents of the Lenin library. It is only a part of the tremendous riches of Lenin. But we hope it is a picture of Leninism. It mirrors the train of thought of Leninism.

Our Party, the Workers Party, is today in the midst of the political struggle. We are forced to maneuver. We are forced again and again to give concessions to the great masses of workers and exploited farmers who today are not yet Communists. Our Party is facing great dangers in this maneuvering. One danger is that we see only the masses and forget the revolution: the danger of opportunism. The other danger is that we see only the idea of the dictatorship of the proletariat and dogmatically turn away from the masses: the danger of sectarianism. Only a Communist education can obviate these dangers for our Party. The Lenin library will be a means to this Communist education.

NEGRO WOMEN WORKERS - By JEANNETTE D. PEARL

NEGRO women who entered industry during the war are fast learning that their lot is still "the last to be hired and the first to be fired." According to a report just issued by the Woman's Bureau at Washington on the "Negro Women in Industry," a geat number of Negro women are being eliminated from industry and those remaining are most ruthlessly exploited. Their hours of toil range all the way from eight to sixteen hours a day and sometimes longer; their pay is miserably small and the conditions under which they work are most brutal.

The report covers a survey of 150 industries employing 11,860 Negro women. The purpose of the investigation was made in order to create a better understanding and greater sympathy among employers of Negro women with the aim of thereby raising the standard of living. This humanitarian aspiration is strongly coupled with repeated emphasis upon the fact that a higher standard of living will yield increased production.

Negro women found their OPPORTUNITY in industry during the world slaughter when the need for munitions of war created a labor shortage in the labor market. The five chief industries that women entered were textiles, clothing, food, tobacco and hand and footwear. The Negro women in the main filled the gap caused by the advancement of white women into newer and more skilled occupations.

Thirty-two and five-tenths per cent of the 11,860 Negro women investigated were working ten hours a day and over; 27.4 per cent were working nine hours a day, and 20.2 per cent were working eight hours a day. These figures do not tell all of the story. Overtime can and does follow the legal work day. Overtime "is permitted as much as desired." The report tells how workers boast of their thriftiness in beginning work, "before hours, after hours, and working during lunch hour." One worker puts it, "You just can't make ends meet unless you do extra work and often you are left in a hole even at that."

A typical case is cited indicating how these Negro women live for the most part. Rise at five, cook breakfast, dress children, prepare food and attend to things about the house, report for work at 7, leave at 5:30, resume housework on returning home, frequently continuing this work until midnight, dead tired as a result.

One woman worker states "I am so tired when I reach home I can scarcely stand up. My nerves are so bad, I jump in my sleep." Another woman complains, "I'd love to go to the Y. W. C. A., but I am so tired at night, I can scarcely go to bed. If I go out at night, I go where there is lots of life and lots of fun; I'd go to sleep at a lecture or club meeting." Another case cited, "I am so worried and worn in my strength that I feel at times as if I can stand it no longer. It is not alone the need of money but the responsibility of being nurse, housekeeper and wage earner at one time."

The average pay of the Negro women in industry is about ten dollars a week. The minimum wage is calculated at $16.50. When it is taken into consideration that many of these women have dependents and are sometimes the sole supporters of their families, one wonders whether slavery days before the civil war could have been much worse.

The frightful conditions under which most of the Negro women work add to the horror of their wretched pay. They are often segregated because of race prejudice, given inferior and harder work and because of their "ignorance" they are shamelessly cheated, false computation of wages, scales wrong, count wrong, etc. At the end of the week "you never know what you are going to get; you just take what they give you and go." The report points out that there is a strong feeling among Negro women workers that they are not getting a square deal.

Since the Negro women are unorganized they accept the most outrageous conditions of employment. They are not alone discriminated against because of their color and often segregated, but they are made to work amidst conditions the United States government would not permit its hogs to live under. Herded together in terrible congestion, in filth, feted dust-laden, poisonous air, poorly ventilated, still more poorly lighted, these women work and often have to eat in the same atmosphere.

The report points out, "Confronted with the need for food, clothing and shelter and placed in an environment which was unhealthful and sometimes even degrading, they were seen to have lost themselves in the struggle for bare existence."

The treatment accorded most of these workers is well expressed in the words of one of the managers, "They are terribly indolent, careless and stubborn, but we know HOW to handle them. We give them rough treatment and that quells them for a while." Yet another manager observes, "You never saw a group of people so responsive to kindness? In the main, these women are conscious of their industrial experience and showed timidity which was a drawback in acquiring assurance and speed so necessary in factory production. Their patient trust and belief in the better day that should come to them as workers is pathetic."

The report points out that bad working conditions and long hours are a serious menace to the state, that the prosperity of a nation is endangered when its workers are being crippled with exhaustive labor. Loss of human energy, due to excessive working hours becomes a national loss and is bound to lessen the nation's productive yield. The reporter, therefore, recommends legislation for a higher standard of living inasmuch as a higher standard of living will produce greater efficiency in production and greater profits.

The report would have self-enlightened employers and the State jointly work out an appropriate "award" as compensation for Negro women in the industries. It would be a sort of benevolent industrialism for greater efficiency and greater national progress—for the master class.

To that end is also recommended, "A more conscientious training for efficiency in public schools, thru fostering of pride in achievement, increasing personal and family thrift, and encouraging of constancy toward a given task, would ensure that 'preparation for life' which is the purpose of all education."

Against such "purposes" in education must be posed the Communist method of education, thru labor solidarity making for self-reliance and self-development. Not a "pathetic" longing for a better day, but a resolute expression in action for a better day will result from Communist education.

THE TRANSITION - - - By J. T. MURHPY

TRUE to the spirit of make-believe which characterizes parliamentarism the transition from the Baldwin Government to the MacDonald Government had to be carried thru with all the formalism and ceremonial associated with the change of Governments. The Baldwin Government made the King's speech as if it were going to carry on for generations. The King and his horses trotted up to the House of Lords to open the proceedings in all majesty as did the kings of old. Standing before his throne he read to his Lords and Commons the strange shopkeeper's document in all seriousness, asked God's blessing upon everybody and departed. The commoners ran back to their own little show where the king is not permitted to attend and began to repeat the performance in there own sweet way.

Two members of the Conservative Party dressed in the Court dress of centuries ago gravely attempted to represent no party, and read the speech to the House of Commons in the language of the age their dress represented thus:

"I beg to move: 'That an humble address be presented to His Majesty as followeth:

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects in the United Kingdom of Great Britian, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.'"

After this most moving resolution the mover proceeded, "Dressed as I must be in the mode of the age of Fontenoy and girt, as I am, with the weapon of that age, it is not my duty to commence the onslaught, but rather, having made a few observations on the Gracious Speech, to make what I believe has been called the gesture of Fontenoy and say to honorable Members opposite: 'Gentlemen of the Guard, fire first.'"

He then made references to the resolutions of the Imperial Conference and considered them binding upon the Parliament. Of course, he got disillusioned on that matter later, but observe the affectionate terms with which he spoke of the Dominions. "Of those Dominions we may well say: 'The lot is fallen unto us in a fair place; we have a goodly heritage.' What, one wonders, would any other nation in Europe, in these times of darkness and distress, give for those vast territories and varied resources which are at our command?"

And so the game went on and concluded with a final prayer that they would be worthy of "the blessing which His Majesty invokes upon them." Then followed another in court dress of the same period who also pleaded, "The main theme which runs thru the Gracious speech from the throne is the plea for stability. Without that neither our Imperial development nor our foreign relations, nor our home reforms can possibly proceed on their steady course of growth and improvement."

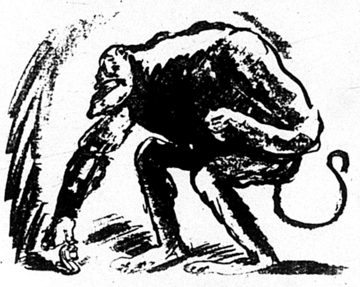
Then Mr. MacDonald continued the first act to its conclusion by flattering congratulations to the mover and seconder of the resolution for the admirable performance. He said, "Still, my function, my duty, in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address to his Gracious Majesty is most sincere, after listening to the two honorable members today."

Then the fun began on the twentieth century platform. MacDonald began at once to strip the address of what he called, "the stock in trade of a penny bazaar." This he did as effectively, say, as Mr. Lloyd George. But the most important statements for the workers are those relating to his new position in the Parliament and his disovowal of the class character of his position.

"No, I am not at all sure that I am sorry no party has a majority, because I think that if this House is to go on for a century or so, and always with a Government in it that has a majority of votes in its pocket, before the end of that century there will be no private members rights left. * * * I was thinking only of Parliament as a great national institution which I wish to leave behind more powerful, more respected, and with more authority than it has even in our own days."

Here at one stroke is the surrender of the Labour Party to Parliament, the affirmation of the individual against the party, and, the pledge to the strengthening of the Capitalist institutions which can only be done at the expense of the workers. But if anything more was wanted to complete the picture and to justify every criticism the Communists have made against the Labour Party leaders the following from the same speech fills the bill. When challenged as to his interpretation of "the Nation's Government," he replied, "I do not distinguish between the Nation's Government and the King's Government. The Nation's Government—the King's Government—must be carried on." The determination of MacDonald and his colleagues is thus clear—to demonstrate that they can run capitalism better than the capitalist parties.

A Guardian of Civilization



Reaction's Ambition.

But the Conservatives have a clearer conception of the significance of the advance of the Labour Party than have the Labour leaders themselves. They see beyond the intentions of MacDonald and his colleagues and recognize their leadership as a temporary thing. They see the rise of the working class and their bitterness even at this stage knows no bounds.

Both in the debate in the House of Commons and in the Press, they have bitterly criticised the Liberal Party and appealed to it to make a class alliancee against the Labour Party. Sir Frederick Banbury talked about the coming necessity to call in the Horse Guards to do what Cromwell did at an earlier period. The Christian Dean Inge talked of exterminating revolutionaries as the only means of exterminating the disease of revolution, as he was of the opinion that imprisonment was a more costly and uncertain way of sweeping away the disease. Mr. Churchhill got into a panic and tho soundly defeated in the elections of 1922 and 1923, he appealed to the Liberal Party to vote against the "Socialist Party" and has thus driven himself into the camp of the conservatives.

The leader of the Liberal Party disposed of the campaign as a whole and emphasised that the Labour Party would not be permitted to introduce any of their socialist nonsense. He said, "I have never come across more virulent manifestations of the epidemic of political hysteria. Notwithstanding my own compromising past—I am supposed to have been the associate of rebels, and worse than rebels, in days gone by—I have been in turn, during these weeks, cajoled, wheedled, almost caressed, taunted, threatened, brow-beaten, and all but blackmailed, to step in as the saviour of society."

"* * * What is the real situation. Nothing can be more absurd than the contention that, because by voting for this amendment, the House of Commons is giving a blank cheque, a free license, to the successors of the Government to do what they like with the interests and institutions of this country. * * * We of the Liberal Party are pledged to give no more countenance to Socialistic experiments than to a Protectionist policy."

There was really no need to be alarmed. The speech of MacDonald had nothing alarming in it, and by the time that Clynes and Thomas had given their quota every property owner in the country could breathe freely at least for a time. Mr. Clynes emphasised that the Empire should be dealt with in a non-Party spirit, as something above Party. Whilst Mr. Thomas amplified the power and dignity of the Empire. But Mr. Hodges, the ambitious young man of the Labour Party put the tin hat on the whole proceedings. After referring to the horror which characterised some of the honourable members speeches at the thought of a Labour Government he went on "What is more extraordinary is that there is a possibility of Labour coming to Government in the easy, quiet, non-revolutionary manner that it is coming to power. There might have been some occasion for horror if the democratic movement of Great Britian were coming to power as the democratic movements in other countries in other days. Then it came to power, perhaps temporarily, thru riot, revolution and bloodshed. Here it is coming to power by the constitutional genius of our people. * *" and so on until one gets tired.

The voting time came. The government fell. Mr. MacDonald was made Prime Minister and he changed his trilby for a top hat fitting "the traditions of his high office." Then came the new government. Of the Cabinet proper only nine are drawn from the trade unions. The remaining 17 are drawn either from the middle class or the aristocracy.

From the standpoint of Parliamentary democracy MacDonald has scored in the direction of blending the classes, the right, the centre and the left. Old Conservatives and Liberals are drawn in, in the persons of Lord Chelmsford and Lord Haldane. The former has been out of politics for twenty years. He was placed in charge of the admiralty and knows as much about ships and naval requirements as he does of the life of the workers. Apparently neither is essential in a Labour Government. But other anomolies are the appointment of F. Hodges to be his undersecretary. Hodges comes from the Miners. But Shinwell who is secretary of the Marine Workers Union is sent to look after the mines.

These are incidentals in the new arrangemnts. What is more disappointing is the acceptance of office by the leaders of the Clyde socialists whom we had hoped to be the rallying ground in the Labour Party itself, anticipating the maneuvers of MacDonald and drawing to itself, along with the Communist Party, all the results of the resentment which is bound to arise in the process of MacDonald's attempt to stabilize capitalism.

We are in the midst of big industrial disputes which are likely to expand during the coming months. The immediate policy of every member of the Government is in the direction of the strengthening of conciliation boards and compulsory arbitration, etc. The whole Labour Party leadership is now utterly bewitched with the Parliamentary success. Even Lansbury has gone off the handle and appealed to the industrial movement to have "patience," to look to the Labour Government first, etc. If it were not that Lansbury's actions are usually unconstitutional and contrary to his pacifism we should dispare of him. And now Wheatley, MacLean, Stewart, practically the leadership of the Left wing in the Labour Party are tied to the wheels of office and debarred from playing their true role as the rallying forces of the discontented in the Labour Party.

But their decision is the Communist Party's opportunity. It is now the only Party of the workers outside the Labour Government, the only centre to which the workers can turn for alternative leadership. For the Communist Party every moment is now rich with opportunity. The big increase in its vote during the elections and the important part we played in returning many Labour men to parliament will make the Labour Party leaders think twice before daring to renew the open attack upon the Party. The last eighteen months have demonstrated the futility of the policy. Hence whether the Labour Party now gives way and permits affiliation of the Party, or whether it continues the campaign against us, the Communist Party is forthwith the new centre of gravity for the discontented and disillusioned of the working class.

(Written on reading Mrs. Ethel Snowden's Article on Lenin in the London "Daily News," January 21st, 1924.)

ONCE there was a very great man. Like most really great men, he was quite simple in his personal life. He had hearty friendships, and he enjoyed a jest amid the hurry and turmoil of his labors.

A ragged little scavenging crow came flying over the plains to the city where the great man lived. She perched upon the walls, and watched him going about his daily business; and she was angered at the great love and respect shown by the people for this man.

The little carrion bird primped her ragged feathers, stretched her scraggy neck this way and that, and piped with a loud and rather hysterical shrillness.

"I also am great!" she cried. "Look upon me!"

And she began to twitter little songs, little songs about the great man and his comrades, and about the work upon which they were engaged. Rather base and dirty little songs, they were, and also they were not true; but they were of no great import. And the people were too intent on their great tasks to hear the little crow; and the few who did hear just shrugged or smiled as they passed by. And this made the little crow angrier and angrier, and she twitched and bridled more and more, under her absurd raggedly feathers, with outraged conceit. And she flew away, and no more was heard of her for many a day.

Then, one day, the great man died. He died in the midst of his work, and because of the great burden of his work, which is the noblest and most desirable death for all true men to die.

And, when the little crow heard of this, she came flying back again.

She came back to the place where the body of the man lay in sun. His limbs were at rest, at last. His strong, steady hand lay still. His face, rugged and powerful, and beautiful because of the love and intelligence of the man, was turned, in death, fearlessly to the sun. His eyes, those eyes in which once played the lights of understanding and of humor, and which had once shamed the little crow, were turned towards the sun. The warrier's battles were over; the worker's task was done.

Then the little scavenger fluttered excitedly down. She perched upon the dead man's white forehead. She began to peck at those fearless eyes.

"You see," she cried. "This man is nothing. I always said so. It is I alone who am great!"

WHAT IS BOLSHEVISM?

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV.

This is the Preface to the first volume of Comrade Zinoviev's work, "From the History of Bolshevism."

• • •

APART from the history of Bolshevism in its earliest stages—the oldest of Lenin's works (The Task of Russian Social Democracy) some of Plechanov's works, the old "Iskra," and especially the struggle carried on by these against economism—it may be said that Bolshevism as a broad political current was born almost on the eve of the Revolution of 1905.

The 2nd Party Congress, held in the summer of 1903, merged in a mighty storm of revolutionary strike movements, which spread with ever-increasing violence over the whole of Russia. Bolshevism received its first baptism of blood during the first revolution in the year 1905.

But an ever more decisive trial followed. The Revolution of 1905 was suppressed, the working class thrown back. The tempo of political life slowed down. A stillness as of the graveyard reigned. Faint-heartedness and apostasy became everyday occurrences. Even the ranks of the workers were infected with the canker of bourgeois ideology.

The question as to whether Bolshevism would stand this trial, if it would withstand the fire of counter-revolution, was approximately decided during the five years between 1906 and 1912.

What new contribution was made by Bolshevism in the sphere of political ideology? What fresh paths were opened up by Bolshevism for international Socialism? Of what does Comrade Lenin's discovery consist?

If we had to furnish an answer to these questions in a few words, we should reply as follows:

1. Bolshevism, for the first time in the history of international class warfare, has taken the idea of the hegemony of the proletariat seriously, and has done this by leading into practice paths that which Marx and Engels had merely established theoretically.

2. It is precisely because Bolshevism has opened up the question of the proletarian dictatorship as a practical question of the day, that, for the first time in the history of International Socialism, it has sought an ally for the proletariat.

3. And here lies the highest merit of Bolshevism—it found this ally in the farmers.

4. In this sense it may be said, that Bolshevism "discovered" the role of the farmers, for it recognized that the farmers represent that power, the winning of which alone renders it possible for the proletariat to play its great part of emancipator in the world revolution.

Anyone who has followed the most important moments in the history of Bolshevism—from the first important actual political platform of Bolshevism in the year 1904-5 (Comrade Lenin's pamphlet on "Two Kinds of Tactics" dealing lucidly with the question of the "revolutionary democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and the peasantry"), to the idea of the "Smytschka," the alliance between workers and farmers, an idea which plays such a leading role at the present time—anyone who has followed all this will have arrived at the conviction that Bolshevism has spoken its decisive word precisely in this sphere.

With regard to the question of the reciprocal relations between the proletariat and the farmers, the contributions of Marx and Engels have only been of the most general nature, and they were not in a position to give more. It has been the task of Bolshevism to impart living flesh and blood to these general formulas furnished by Marx and Engels. The development of the political tactics of the proletariat in such a way as to create the possibility—along with the highest possible formal measures of "equal rights" between proletariat and farmers—of rendering the farmers in actuality the followers of the proletariat, and at the same time "inducing" the farmers to play the part of "reserve" for the proletariat engaged in fulfilling its great historical mission—this has been the great question which Bolshevism has been able to answer successfully. And today it is perfectly clear in all essentials that the most important problems of the proletarian revolution on an international scale tend to follow the same lines—with certain variations—as those which confronted Russia during the last two decisive decades. The tactics pursued by Bolshevism in this particular question of the reciprocal relations between working class and farmers, constitute a factor especially calculated to enhance the international and universal character of Bolshevist tactics.

The relations of the workers to the farmers—this is the most vital thing in Bolshevism. Those who are desirous of comprehending Bolshevism, and those who sincerely wish to become adherents of Bolshevism, must study this side of Bolshevism above all others, must grasp the fact that this is the factor determining the essential character of Bolshevism.

This is by no means asserting that Bolshevism has created, all at once, a complete and finished tactical formula on the relations between the workers and the farmers. Two decades of profound political significance passed between the issue of the slogan of the "dictatorship of the workers and farmers," formulated for the first time by Lenin in the year 1904-5, and the issue of the slogan of the workers' and farmers' government, realized in Russia, and now proclaimed for the whole Communist International by International Communism. But even at the very beginning of its political existence, Bolshevism represented a real approach to the solution of this problem—the problem that dominates all others. The first sign of life in Bolshevism may be said to have been expressed by this fact.

Bolshevism has developed in the highest organic manner in regard to the question of the estimate of the part played by the farmers. In the year 1905, Bolshevism regarded the farmers solely as possible "temporary allies for the proletariat in the bourgeois democratic revolution. The farmers were anvious to aid the proletariat in making a clean sweep of Czarist despotism, and in solving the agrarian question in a "plebeian fashion." They were anxious to release the productive forces of Russia from their restraining fetters, and to lead the country thru free class struggle to a democratic republic, which was again to serve as the arena in which the working class was to fight for socialism. By the year 1917, Bolshevism was already according a much more important role to the farmers, a role corresponding to the fact that social development as a whole had in the interim attained a much higher stage, and that the main class—the proletariat—was already at work on the immediate socialist revolution.

But if this be the case—many of our readers may retort—were not the adherents of the "permanent revolution" theory right with regard to the Bolsheviki in the year 1905?

By no means.

The theory of "permanent revolution" ignored the farmers. It failed to observe the enormous significance—in many respects the decisive significance—of the farmers in a country like Russia, and not only in Russia.

Yes, in the year 1905 the view held by Bolshevism was that the impending revolution would only be a bourgeois democratic revolution. Even as late as 1916 Bolshevism still held to this viewpoint to a great extent (see the well known theses issued by the central organ of our party, published in the collection "Against the Stream,") and in the year 1917, after the February revolution, Bolshevism took an abrupt turn towards the idea of immediate socialist revolution. The difficulties of the transition were exceedingly great. These difficulties caused the committal of many errors, and especially of errors made by the author of these lines in the autumn of 1917. But it is only phrasemongers and superficial observers who can maintain that this change took place "suddenly," and that it supplies a proof that Bolshevism was wrong in 1905. Those who so judge forget one thing: That 1905 and 1917 are divided by an epoch-making decade of decisive significance for the whole politics of the international proletariat—and forget that the two following "small" events took place during these twelve years, first, the first imperialist world war, which lasted four years, shook not only Russia, but the whole of Europe, to its foundations, demanded the sacrifice of 10 million human lives, rushed the world bourgeoisie into historical downfall with the rapidity of an express train; secondly, February, 1917, saw the overthrow of that Czarism which had been for so many decades the main obstacle in the way of any kind of movement for freedom, not only in Russia, but all over the world. Czarism fell. And the February revolution, closely bound up with the great war, called upon the scene such mighty forces from among the people (above all from among the farmers, as the army was a farmers' army) that the proletariat of the towns was enabled to undertake tasks of a far wider extent.

In the years 1905 and 1917 Bolshevism took the farmers as it found them. Neither in 1905 nor in 1917 did Bolshevism ignore the farmers. And precisely here lay the fundamental power of Bolshevism, imparting it an inexhaustible force. Any one who dreamed, in the year 1905, of setting before the Russian farmers those tasks which they were capable of coping with in the year 1917, after the imperialist world war and after the February revolution, would have been a Don Quixote.

Is it possible, for instance, to draw any comparison between even the French farmers of the pre-war period and the French farmers after the war? Even the French farmer changed entirely in many respects during the war years, 1914 to 1918. Had the slogan of the "workers' and farmers' government," for instance, been proclaimed in France in the year 1910, it would have been nothing but an empty phrase. And in the year 1923 it is an earnest revolutionary deed. And yet the transformation undergone by the French farmers in the period between 1914 and 1918 cannot be compared in the slightest degree with that undergone by the Russian farmers during the same time, for the simple reason that France's agrarian revolution had already taken place several generations before, and the agrarian question could not play such an important role in France, during the period from 1914 to 1918, as it did in Russia.

The farmer question has also been the main bone of contention between Bolshevism and the tendencies hostile to it. This question has been the cause of the profoundest differences of opinion. Menshevism adopted the line of the so-called "all-national opposition." Menshevism considered that the low grade of culture possessed by the farmers rendered them incapable of any historical act whatever. The Menshevist estimate of the farmers has in actual fact been highly counter-revolutionary and domineering.

The fights of 1905 suppressed the working class for a long period. The farmers continued their uninterrupted slumbers. The conclusion arrived at by the Mensheviki from these facts led them to a profoundly pessimistic view as to the possibility of any renewed revolution whatever; and having thus renounced all revolutionary prospects, Menshevism regarded it as its leading task to adapt itself to the limitations of Stollipin's legality, and to create a real "European" Social Democratic Party. This counter-revolutionary estimate of the role of the farmers gave rise to all that followed.

If the working class had been victorious in the year 1905, the Mensheviki would have been able to join forces with it for a time. The proletariat was defeated. And it is not agreeable to unite one's fate with the defeated. So thought and felt many Menshevist social democratic super-party and non-party groups of the intelligenzia.

In the year 1905, at the moment when the success of the revolutionary proletariat had reached its highest point, all of these intellectuals—from Minski to Toffi, from the Kuskova to the rich engineers of the "Union of Unions" attached themselves to the proletariat. But in a trice all these intelligenzia and would-be revolutionists forsook the proletarian emancipation movement.

The intelligenzia began to desert the party and the revolutionary movement wholesale, to boast of non-partisanship. It became the right thing to find fault with the party. The idea of a non-partisan "workers' congress," played off against an illegal revolutionary party, was objectively counter-revolutionary in character.

Disputes began on the fundamentals of the program and tactics, tho at first in the milder form of disagreements on questions of organization. The first contest between Bolshevism and Menshevism, in the year 1903, commenced in mere disputes over organization matters.

In the year 1908 the tendency towards liquidation became very evident. The tendency itself began to be felt in Petrograd as early as the beginning of 1908, if not at the end of 1907. But the expression, "liquidation"—as we clearly remember—first arose in the middle of 1908.

A serious struggle arose within the Bolshevist faction itself. The epoch of counter-revolution gave rise to "Otsovism," and to such excresences as the notorious "God's image" idea. Hatred of the opportunist tactics pursued by the minority of the Duma faction at first induced even a number of revolutionary Bolshevist workers to support Otsovism. Therefore, the first articles which we issued against Otsovism were of an exceedingly cautious didactic character. It was not until later on, when A. Bogdanov and Co. atempted to utilize the trend of feeling among the Bolshevist workers for the purpose of forming an Otsovist faction that we adopted a sharper tone. The victory of Otsovism would have signified in reality the destruction of Bolshevism. The cherished hope of the Mensheviki—that Bolshevism would degenerate into a mere sect, and cease to be a mass party—would have been best fulfilled by the Otsovist "tactics." It was not until Bolshevism had carried thru an additional campaign against the attempts at liquidation from the "left," that is, from Otsovism, rightly termed by us "Menshevism reversed," that Bolshevism was finally steeled and strengthened, and could demonstrate its right to existence.

Why did we devote so much attention, at that time, to fighting against the "conciliation" tendency? Why did we deal our heaviest blows against the "center"? All these tendencies were represented by numerically insignificant groups, incapable of exercising serious influence on the labor movement.

Where we differed in opinion from the "center," these differences of opinion were naturally of a productive character. We were divided from the Menshevist camp by differences of opinion in matters of principle. But the advocates of "conciliation," in supporting liquidatory Menshevism, in repeating its arguments, and even lending it cover by granting it an external appearance of allegiance to the party, were even more dangerous for a time than the liquidators themselves. I recollect that Rosa Luxembourg, when asked why she and her friends devoted so much attention to the fight against the German social democratic "center," instead of simply routing the revisionists, she replied: "If it is still worth while to rout the revisionists at all, it is only if the centrists are combatted at the same time." In Russia the state of affairs was similar. The openly expressed ideas of the adherents of liquidation, smacked so much of betrayal, that they at once aroused the antagonism of the revolutionary workers. But the treacherously veiled ideas of liquidation, improved by the idea of "unity," and associated with "party allegiance," were much more able to lead the workers astray.

The years 1909 to 1911 witnessed a rapprochement between the main core of the Bolsheviki and G. M. Plechanov. The old revolutionist reawakened in Plechanov during these years. He could not reconcile himself to the idea of liquidation.

"Martov proposes that we drop the designation of 'Party'"—thus wrote Plechanov to us—"and Martov ought to be hanged for making this proposal."

At the same time the orthodox Bolsheviki approached nearer to Plechanov in the course of their struggle against the philosophical revisionism of Bogdanov and Co. Our first attempts at the establishment of a legal Marxist press in Russia (the periodical Misl in Moscow, the newspaper Sviesda in Petrograd, etc.) met with appreciable support from Plechanov. It is much to be regretted that Plechanov took up with Menshevism again later, when a fresh revival in the labor movement took place, and the most important problems of revolution reappeared. And when the war began in 1914, Plechanov went over into the camp of social chauvinism. The main core of the Bolsheviki, headed by Comrade Lenin, gathered around it the whole elite of the Russian workers and piloted the party safely past all rocks and shoals.

Hiram Johnson---His Background

By DONALD STUART

HIRAM JOHNSON is interesting and significant as a demonstration of what happens when an expert, noisy, and resourceful politician has his full say and plays his whole string. It is just thirteen years since Hiram Johnson started out slaying dragons in California. He got a big cheer from the people then, nad no doubt he could defeat any other man for any California office today, but a census of dragons—a checking up of the quick and the dead—is perhaps more to the point.

Hiram has an oratorical punch—there's no doubt about that. He speaks with a sort of staccato yelp, with a voice yappant, even ululant, and his physical and muscular intensity endows the obvious and superficial with an entirely fictitious importance. Futhermore, he is happily free from any political convictions or moral scruples, and this, with great shrewdness in discovering and echoing the prevailing platitude, gives him a rare equipment for a statesman. Added to all this, he has one all-dominating personal trait. He has a vindictiveness, a capacity for hate, and a range of bitter memory which enable him to nourish more grudges and go to greater extremes in punishing his personal enemies than any other statesman of today. We may suppose that when Hiram Johnson was in the fifth grade at school another boy traded him a glassie which was supposed to be an agate. If this really happened, you may be sure Hiram has this boy somewhere in a card index, and he's going to get him some day. That's Hiram.

Hiram Gets Into Politics

Hiram was dug up, in 1910 by Bill Kent, Meyer Lissner, Marshall Stimson and a few other reformers who wanted someone to smash the Southern Pacific machine. Hiram was a natural-born prosecutor, who had made quite a stir in the San Francisco graft prosecution, after Heney was shot. He was brave as a lion, so they said, tho it was noticeable that he didn't come in until after the outbreak of public feeling over the shooting of Heney had made the graft prosecution comparatively safe and respectable.

"Kick the Southern Pacific out of politics" was his campaign slogan. California likes the noisy, bellicose, hell roaring type of politician. It was no trouble for Hiram to show goods. His heat, fervor, vehemence, sweat and black, macerating passion in assailing the railroad infamies were unparalleled and unsurpassed. He went around shadow-boxing with the Southern Pacific dragon all over the state. Whenever he drove his pudgy, clenched first into the jowl of the monster, he got a cheer which jarred loose all the shingles on the Southern Pacific roadhouse.

When the 1911 legislature convened, our great reform governor offered a prospectus of progressive legislation which actually included cetrain bills for ameliorating labor conditions—the full crew train bill, employers' liability, the industrial accident commission, etc. Hiram Johnson, during many years as a leading San Francisco attorney, had never shown the slightest interest in such matters. But now, all of a sudden, he was displaying a passionate devotion to them. How come?

Tom Finn can tell you how that came about. Tom is a plain, everyday San Francisco politician, and nothing if not direct. In 1911, he was a senator in the state legislature, with the San Francisco delegation in the hollow of his hand. Also, he was politically a creation of organized labor, which was then "in the ascendant" in the Sam Gompers fashion. Finn wanted a wish-washy "labor program" put thru the legislature; also he wanted the water-front patronage, which was a political dish he had been enjoying for years. And, on the other hand, Hiram Johnson wanted the balance of power in the legislature. If Tom handed over the San Francisco delegation, Hiram would have the balance of power. So they bargained. "Do I get my patronage?" said Tom to Hiram. "You do," said Hiram to Tom. "You get the San Francisco delegation," said Tom to Hiram. And the "labor program" was thrown into the bargain and remains as an asset to the doughty labor-politicians in the land where oranges grow on trees and honest workers go to jail.

Johnson At Work

Johnson's chief preoccupation, after taking office, was lambasting his enemies. He went down the line with one philippic after another. He worked a day and night shift denouncing Mike de Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle; William H. Crocker, the San Francisco banker; Harrison Grey Otis, publisher of the Los Angeles Times, and Sam Shortridge, a bombastic and rather ludicrous San Francisco lawyer whom he later helped to make United States Senator. "There isn't room enough in this town for Hiram Johnson and Mike de Young," he would yell, and he always got a big hand from his audience.

The years slipped by and organized labor thruout California was forced into the defensive. The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, of Los Angeles, and the allied Chambers of Commerce thruout the state were carrying on a smashing attack, and the game of political trading wasn't working out so well. It was true that there were plenty of labor leaders in the state government; it was true, also, that certain labor bills had been passed—but it was true, nevertheless, that labor was getting the stuffing knocked out of it, and neither Hiram nor the job-holding labor leaders seemed to be worrying any.

William D. Stephens was lieutenant governor. Stephens was a pious stuffed-shirt and a born labor-hater. Johnson went to the United States Senate and left Stephens to take his place. And, Stephens completed the ruin of "progressivism" in California.

And now, getting around to that census of dragons, we find that there are ten on the job where there was one when Hiram first set his lance against them. The Southern Pacific—which in truth never seemed greatly worried about Hiram's denunciations—is back in power. In Los Angeles, Leo Youngworth and Mott Flint, who used to be castigated by Hiram in the old days as "S. P. hirelings," are stalwarts of the Johnson organization. Eustace Cullinan, Johnson leader in San Francisco, and for years the champion of progressivism in northern California, is frankly and openly the hired man of the public corporations and is now attacking the initiative and referendum. Everywhere, in the villages and in the cities, the corporations are ruthless and rampant. The labor unions are hamstrung and impotent and San Francisco, once the citadel of unionism in California, is an open-shop town.

One can't help getting some cynical amusement out of the fact that these old-time political enemies have in later years become Johnson's friends and political allies and his financial backers. They contributed money to his campaign for the Republican nomination, and in return he sent his entire organization out against Bill Kent in the latter's run for the senatorial nomination against Sam Shortridge—Johnson's erstwhile enemy. Kent, you will recall, was one of a few men who started Johnson on his career; incidentally, he furnished the money to start the campaign, and, then and later, gave Johnson many thousands of dollars. But Johnson didn't hesitate a moment when it became advantageous to cut his benefactor's throat. Similarly, he assassinated Frank Heney, whose liberalism, like Bill Kent's, seemed to take on a serious character.

Everybody realizes now that the great Southern Pacific attack was a Weber and Fields performance; the S. P. had a pillow in its pants and it all ended happily. But what about the other big "infamies" which Johnson so gallantly assailed?

There is the whole matter of conservation of natural resources. California has fifteen to twenty million acres of arable land, and it has, flowing to waste, water enough to irrigate it; it has about eight million horse-power of undeveloped hydro-electric energy; it has vast areas of timber, oil and mineral land. As governor of California and as United States senator, Hiram Johnson has not lent the slightest assistance to the effort of the conservationists to save some of this heritage for the people. His acquiescence has allowed the looters to tie these resources up in such a fashion that no political action short of revolution can give the slightest hope of blasting them loose, and in all his entire public career he has never had a single word to say on the subject of conservation. He has left all this wealth to be grabbed, and grabbed it has been! The California Water and Power Act, an initiative measure, was the big issue of the California election last fall. It was a fundamental measure, proposing to vest ownership in the water and power resources in the people and to place state credit behind their development. Who was hired by the utility corporations to defeat this measure? Eustace Cullian, referred to above, who for years has been Johnson's intimate personal friend and who is his leading political representative in San Francisco. How much was he paid for this service? Twenty thousand dollars a year, according to his testimony before the California legislature. Johnson was cynically indifferent to the appeals of Bill Kent, and all the other old time progressives for assistance in the campaign to save the water and power. There's your great liberal statesman.

Johnson's labor record needs but slight comment for DAILY WORKER readers. When an appeal was made to him in Tom Mooney's behalf, he said Mooney ought to be tied up in a sack and dropped in the bay. The infamous frame-up of the strike-leaders, Ford and Suhr, was put over during his administration. The persecution of liberals, which eventuated in the vicious criminal syndicalism law, was well under way while Johnson was still governor.

What did Johnson ever do about the black tyranny of the Kern County Land Company? There is nowhere in America today any more brutal or savage gang, with more crimes recorded against it, than this Kern County gang. The only lawyer who ever dared attack them was shot, his body lacerated with knives and acid poured in the wounds. He was then turned loose on the desert, covered with a coat of tar-and-feathers. He is in an insane asylum. The Kern County Land Company has gone serenely on its way all thru the years of the Johnson ascendancy. Today, they are more strongly intrenched than ever, maintaining an absolutely lawless, criminal rule over a section as large as an eastern state. And they have never received so much as a word of gentle reproof from the dauntless Hiram.

The Miller and Lux interests, the interests of Harry Chandler, legatee of the ill-famed Los Angeles Times, and son-in-law of the old buccaneer, Otis, the great industrial and financial network of Herbert Fleishhacker, Gargantuan banker of San Francisco; the interests of the Hammond Lumber Company, and above all the allied hydro-electric interests, have enmeshed California in a tyranny worse than that found in any other state. And this is the state which has been "liberated" by this implacable foe of privilege, this champion of the common man, this valorous knight of democracy!

Labor crushed; spies, dicks, gumshoers everywhere; newspapers lying and pandering; free speech and free assemblage brutally suppressed; fixers, manipulators, corruptionists, lobbyists and corporation press agents swarming over the state, like an army of snails, leaving a trail of slime—and San Quentin prison crowded with men who have dared assert their constitutional rights of free speech and free assemblage!

The present governor, Friend W. Richardson, provides just a touch of aesthetic completeness to the picture. He is an all but illiterate, untidy old man, with a walrus mustache and a bitter hostility toward education or literacy in any form. Since becoming governor he has maintained a steady drive against higher education and has all but wrecked the public school system. He has relentlessly attacked every left-over vestage of humanitarian legislation, and has made a complete job of it—without a word of protest from Hiram Johnson. He is owned and operated by the corporations.

The farmers are broke; the unions are smashed; the corporations are in absolute, unassailable control; California, today has sunk down more deeply into the mire of hopeless reaction than any other state in America.

That is the outcome of all the vociferations, all the high-keyed and valorous invective, all his dauntless defiance of the great Hiram Johnson, "progressive" candidate for president of these United States.

The Situation in Germany and the Communist Party

By AUGUST THALHEIMER (Berlin)

THE Dictatorship of Seeckt is, step by step, capturing new positions with the same bloodless methods with which it succeeded in obtaining power. It still considers it worth while to retain parliament and the remaining democratic lumber as a sort of screen, but only on condition that parliament, as well as the other so-called democratic institutions, shall be submissively subservient to the military Dictatorhip. The cabinet of Marx, which has succeeded to that of Stresemann, marks a great step in the degradation of parliament and of parliamentary government. It is not only that Marx before forming his cabinet, sought permission of the white General; the composition of the cabinet itself is in accordance with the considered wishes of the white General. Social Democracy was thrown overboard. Nevertheless, the strivings of the junkers to obtain possession of the Prussian administration, in consequence of the dissolution of the great coalition in Prussia were prevented by the General. The reason for this is obvious. It was not advisable having regard to the government of Poincare, and also the English cabinet to display, as it were, the coat of arms of the feudal junkers on the Reichstag buildings. At the same time the General did not deem it meet to present the bread profiteering junkers openly to the workers. In return for this piece of indulgence the General obtained the appropriate recompense: the Centre, Democrats and Social Democrats, who in Prussia have such and such a number of administrative posts and offices to defend against the Junkers and the old Wilhelm bureaucrats, now prove themselves to be so much the more accommodating flunkeys of the military Dictator. Severing and Brauns fall over one another in their eagerness to slander and persecute the Communist Party. In the Centre and with the Democrats, the right wings (large capitalist and large agrarian) have won the upper hand.

The effects of this were to be clearly seen in the discussion of the Special Powers Act. Not only the governing parties, but the Social Democratic so-called opposition hastened to secure the Special Powers Act for the cabinet of Marx. The mere threat of the dissolution of the Reichstag which, according to their own reckoning would cost the Social Democrats about two-thirds of their seats, and which would sweep away the old parliamentary leaders in favor of the so-called "left" leaders—this threat sufficed to bring the Social Democrats to heel and cause them obediently to pass the Special Powers Act, in spite of all the thousand oaths sworn against the state of siege. This means complete submission on the part of Social Democracy to the military Dictatorship. It is submission to victorious Fascism. It is characteristic that the so-called Social Democratic Lefts were, by the threat of expulsion from the party, induced on their part to submit to the right wing faction majority, and thereby also to the military Dictatorship.

Petty bourgeois Fascism is also being rendered incapable of doing any harm by the triumphant great capitalist Fascism of General Seeckt. A portion of this wing has, after the settlement of the Hitler-Ludendorf-Putch, completely capitulated to the dictatorship of General Seeckt. Another section is being rendered docile by the repressions which are bound up with the prohibition of the German People's Party. Seeckt has attached to himself the organizations grouped around the Bavarian dictator Kahr, by admitting representatives of the Bavarian reaction into the cabinet of Marx.

Meanwhile, General Seeckt is eagerly engaged in extending and completing his own political apparatus. He has brought together the old officers who served in the areas occupied by Germany in Belgium, France, Roumania, etc., in the war, and is using them to control the civil administration and to form the elements of an independent military Dictatorship. The prohibition of the Communist Party is also being taken advantage of by the military Dictatorship in order to still further complete its own political apparatus.

The military Dictatorship, which need no longer expect any resistance on the part of the former bourgeois democracy, is now making it its task to carry out the Fascist program of large capital.

What is this program? Its general features can be inferred from the situation of the German bourgeoisie. It is necessary to set up, if only for transitory period an economic equilibrium. In order to attain this end a dictatorship of great capital has to work in two directions. In the first place there has to be a retrenchment in expenditure by the cutting down of all the educational services of the state, and of the social and political services; secondly, there must be a raising of the capitalist profits and of the income of the state by means of increased exploitation of the working class and of the middle classes, by increasing exports—and by increasing the taxation of property owners. So far as the first is concerned, the discharge of officials and the prolongation of the working time is in full swing. These measures are at the same time being made use of in order to weed out the democratic and socialistically inclined younger sections of the officials, and to create places for the old reactionary bureaucracy as well as for the new adherents to Fascism. With regard to the second, the employers have, by means of ruthless lockouts and closing down of factories, practically made an end of the eight hour day and introduced the nine and ten hour day. The Trade Unions have neither the will, nor were they in a position to offer serious resistance. The unemployed maintenance is being cut down; the same is happening to the other social-political services. But all these measures are in vain if the bourgeoisie does not succeed in bringing in a sufficient amount of taxes in order to balance, if only for the time being, the national and state finances. These necessary sums are not to be extracted either from the working class or the middle class sections of the population. The state expenditure is still only covered to the extent of less than 1 per cent by state income. It is, however, improbable that the bourgeoisie will constitute itself as a Fascist Dictatorship in order merely, to compel itself to yield taxes. There still remain foreign credits. But from whence shall these come? The United States is, perhaps, inclined to grant credits for the purpose of obtaining corn, for which it will take a definite portion of the state property (Mines) as security. But these credits can in no wise be granted on such a scale, as will enable an economic equilibrium to be again set up in Germany. England, too, who also might be considered, does not appear to show any inclination to grant large credits. In a negative manner the attitude of the industrialists in the Rhine and Ruhr districts is a proof of how poor the prospects are considered of balancing German economics and finances. The agreement between the heavy industrialists of the Rhine and Ruhr areas and the Micum (the Belgium and French heavy industry), and the veiled constituting of a Rhineland state dependent upon France —all this proves that heavy industry is submitting to French imperialism and regards the rest of Germany merely as a hinterland.

The Communist Party is forbidden by General Seeckt, its press is suppressed, its printing establishments are conficated, etc. But it still continues to live. The Party of the Proletariat is showing itself to be the only power which is capable and willing to offer resistance to the white Dictatorship. In Berlin and a number of other towns it has succeeded in holding more or less large demonstrations in the streets. It is beginning to set up a resistance to the armed power of the military dictatorship and to school the proletarian advance guard for the deciding struggle.

The central task of the Communist Party in the present situation follows from the teachings of the October defeat. The October defeat of the German proletariat was not the result of "mistakes" on the part of the Communist Party. It arose from the relations of power in the working class existing at the given moment. It can finally be traced back to the fact that a great portion of the working class, under the paralyzing influence of the Right and Left Social Democracy, was no longer prepared to defend the November democracy against Fascism, that it is not yet prepared to fight for the proletarian dictatorship. Social Democracy, long since dead as an active force in the cause of the working class, has shown itself to be still an enormous hindering force, in other words, Communism has not yet succeeded in drawing the majority of the working class away from the influence of Social Democracy. If any fault was committed by the Communist Party it was in underestimating Social Democracy as a hindering force.

The central task of the Communist Party is therefore the complete political and organizatory liquidation of Social Democracy, and the seizure of the Trade Unions out of the hands of the Social Democratic leaders. Upon these tasks the Communist-Party will concentrate its entire force. And only when this task has been solved will the conditions be ripe for enforcing a decision. In this connection, it is quite clear that the chief attack must be directed against the so-called "Left" Social Democrats. With their radical phraseology, with their opposition to Fascism in words, and submission to it in deeds, with their strenuous clinging to the illusions of bourgeois democracy and Parliamentarianism they are helpers of the Fascist Dictatorship.

The struggle against Social Democracy and against Fascism will be conducted by the propaganda of proletarian dictatorship and of Socialism as opposed to the Fascist Dictatorship. The Party will continue to propagate with the greatest tenacity the idea of the armed uprising among the masses and to prepare for it by organization and technics. The Party now, after the victory of Fascism over the November Republic, has eliminated from its program the propaganda of those demands which are connected with the democratic institutions and which should lead to the proletarian dictatorship, such as the slogan of the Workers' and Peasants' Gov- the control of production. These de- ernment, the seizure of mines and the control of production. These demands have become irrelevant, for the democratic institutions no longer exist with which they were associated. The actions of the Party must, of course, be connected with the daily needs of the working class. With the present wholesale unemployment and short-time, strikes come little into consideration: so much the greater role therefore will mass demonstrations, party peaceful and party armed, play.

Under the existing strike illegality it is necessary for the Party to base its chief organization work in the workshops. In addition to this it must set up the closest connection between the workers still employed and the unemployed. Under the blows of the white counter-revolution the Party will become the iron cohort of the revolution, which it could not become during the time when it was legal.

The proletarian revolution in Germany has not taken the rapid course which many had expected. Instead of rising out of the ruins of the bourgeois democracy, like the Russian October Revolution, it finds itself in a position when it must organize its victory under the letters of Fascist dictatorship. Its victory, if it comes more slowly, will, therefore, be all the more complete. The great capitalist dictatorship is, so to speak, the last attempt to maintain the capitalist power. In Russia the October victory was, so to speak, the result of a surprise attack. The Russian bourgeoisie only mobilized its reserves after its October defeat. The German bourgeoisie, which is far better organized, is mobilizing its reserves before the defeat. What is now taking place in Germany, is the last round of that struggle between the bourgeoisie and the Communist Party for the reserves, for the indifferent and Social Democratic workers and for the middle class. This struggle for the reserves is the essential content of the political preparation for the proletarian revolution.

The foreign Communist Parties must not allow themselves to be discouraged by the October retreat, which was unavoidable, and was grounded in the total situation. The Communist Party of Germany has, after a short pause, undertaken the reordering of its ranks, and is preparing for a fresh struggle. The proletarian Revolution in Germany is on the march. None of the fundamental problems of the country can be solved by the military dictatorship. Our foreign brother parties must clearly understand, that if the Russian Revolution in the year 1917 took a quite unexpected course, which differed from all previous bourgeois revolutions, the proletarian revolution in Germany has its own course, its own tempo and its own methods.

WHAT ABOUT OBREGON AND THE MEXICAN TEAPOT?

By HARRISON GEORGE

THAT the depredation of petroleum imperialists are not confined to Wyoming and California fields is taken for granted by anyone cognizant with the nature of the animal. But as the U. S. Senate investigating committee has a few more shocks coming its way if it carries out the proposed widening of the investigation to include concessions granted American corporations in foreign countries—according to the resolution passed on February 13th—it may be well to break the news gradually and ease the shock.

With that humane consideration in mind, let us lay aside the current daily capitalist newspaper with its stage-thunderous indignation against the "guilty" as distinguished from the "innocent" plunderers of the national resources and its present efforts to check the oily flood before it seeps into the tombs of two dead presidents. Let us recall that Standard Oil was for many years waging a bitter struggle against British interests led by Lord Cowdray for control of Mexican oil resources.

Then, let us read between the lines of the following article referring to recognitions between Albert Fall, then U. S. Senator from New Mexico, and President Obregon of Mexico, as published in the London Daily Herald on Dec. 13, 1920:

> "The plan provides for the prompt recognition of the Obregon regime by the republicans, for a large Mexican loan from American bankers and for the eventual appointment of Senator Fall to supervise the reorganization of the Mexican railways. . . . Passing thru Washington to lay details of the arrangements before Senator Harding at Marion, Senator Fall significantly praised Obregon as a man capable of safeguarding investments in Mexico. A similar unaccumstomed admiration of the Mexican regime is being voiced by the oil magnates and the Hearst newspapers, which have hitherto been notoriously belligerent. Mexico has paid the price for peace with North America.

The confluence of both republican and democratic politics in the great oil stream will be noticed by the inclusion of Hearst with Fall and Harding. Perhaps this is why Hearst recently traveled a long way to have a little talk with Coolidge. Hearst papers have thus far been untouched by Teapot oil, but how about Mexican oil?

Fellow Crooks.

Besides, here is evidence that Fall, intriguer and crook for Standard Oil interests before he was appointed to Harding's cabinet, must have been known as such by Harding—indeed, Fall hurried to Harding as to an accomplice in putting a deal across whereby the Mexican people were ravaged of their oil resources by the same gang that later took the Teapot. Fall, the international shoplifter, seems to have a way with him that presidents cannot resist . . . !

To make it a bit more interesting, let us go back further. Fall, previous to his cabinet position, was U. S. senator from New Mexico. As such he was given the chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Public Lands (nice, cushy job!). All this time he had been connected with Doheny's Petroleum Producers' Association, which organization was leading a propaganda for armed intervention in Mexico, because the "dirty Greasers" had been inconsiderate to American oil and mining interests by writing in Article 27 of the Mexican constitution that subsoil rights should revert to the Mexican nation.

Wilson, Too.

John Kenneth Turner, in his book "Shall It Be Again?" states that, "As condition for the recognition of Obregon, Wilson accepted the terms of Albert B. Fall, which were also the terms of the great financial and industrial interests." Again another president succumbed to the wiles of Doheny's Man-Friday, Fall. But Obregon at that time was telling the seducer that he was not that kind of a girl.

The Plot Thickens.

Naturally, something had to be done about it. Fall, as chairman of the committee of the Senate on Public Lands, caused a sub-committee to be appointed with himself as chairman, empowered by some hocus-pocus with the investigation of Mexico. Fall had a girl secretary who seemed to be a pliable lassie. She was sent to Mexico and remained there for eight months, Doheny paying her salary and expenses! She came back like the dove to the ark, or better, like a stool-pigeon, with voluminous testimony to give before the fancy little sub-committee Fall was carrying around. She said that Mexicans were laying waste their native heath and massacring Americans right and left, that neither property nor life of foreigners was safe. And Fall's sub-committee promptly brought in a recommendation to the Senate demanding armed intervention in Mexico. The Senate rejected war, however, and Fall had to use other means.

From the above quotation from the Daily Herald it is seen that as quickly as Harding was elected, Fall made his visit to Mexico City, saw Obregon and finally brought him "to reason" with a deal which would swap recognition by the republicans and a large loan by American bankers for "safeguarding investments in Mexico" and "reorganization of the Mexican railways."

Wall Street Gets Railways.

This "safeguarding of investments" was the revocation of the retroactive effect of Article 27—practically nullifying it, and the reorganization of the railways was a turning over of the nationally owned lines of Mexico to private capital—Wall Street. The whole barter and sale of Mexican resources in an itemized way, including this railway reorganization, was finally signed and sealed in New York in the spring of 1923, by Thomas W. Lamont, representing the committee of International Bankers, and Adolpho De La Huerta, then a cabinet officer under Obregon and now leading an abortive revolt.

A resolution was introduced February 13, in the Chamber of Deputies in Rome calling for an investigation of the concessions granted by Italy to Sinclair's oil interests. The Oil Scandal has become international. The American government is uncovered in its nakedness as a prostitute. How about its "sister republic" to the south? How about the Mexican teapot?

AT TWO AND THREE YEARS - -

By MYRA MANN

TRUTH, it is said, is stranger than fiction. Strange as it may sound, infants, at the tender age of two and three years are actually producing marketable commodities. The sceptical attitude of some towards the expositions made by the "New York Welfare Commission" brings back to my mind a recollection of my own childhood; how every naturally children of the working class drift into work; how parents with even the warmest love for their children are forced to send them to work.

As I remember my environment at the age of three or thereabouts I was the eldest of three children. My father tho a barber was forced thru slackness in his trade to work as an unskilled laborer in a railway shop. To add to the meager, insufficient wages he did a little barbering in the evening.

My nursery, the one room we all lived in, was like a stage. Three times a day the scene changed. In the morning father could be seen disentangling himself slowly, tho not without impatience, from amongst the little arms and legs strewn over and around him in the family bed, swearing because it was cold, yet every now and then throwing out an angry, "Why didn't you wake me earlier, didn't I tell you cold or no cold I'll be sacked if I get to work late. . . . We haven't enough money yet to open up a regular barbershop. The wife, my mother, barefootedly running around preparing his breakfast, would silently gesture to him not to make so much noise lest the children wake up.

An hour or so later the scene would change. This same room would become a dressmaking establishment. Now, instead of the bed there was a huge closet with mirrored doors. In these my mother's customers would view themselves in the full glory of their Sunday best. Much bargaining would take place. Once while my mother was fitting a dress my little brother got his finger caught in the wheel of the sewing machine and it nearly drove my mother into hysterics.

In the evening, right after supper, my father's barbershop would be flashed on the screen. The kitchen table placed before the grand mirrors and the red plush covered barber chair pushed up before it would be the signal for my little brother and sister to creep up to my mother to be lulled to sleep on a couple of chairs until the shop was closed and they could be put into bed.

I being considered "a big girl already" was allowed to come near the barbershop section. I was even given a job cutting up newspaper into squares for the soap of the razor to be wiped off on. In that way I made a number of friends amongst my father's customers. One evening one of them asked me with, as I imagine he must have done, a sly wink at my father, "Hey, there what do you want to sit and cut paper squares for a smart girl like you. Buy yourself a razor and a brush so we won't have to wait around so long. What! You are too small! Oh, we can fix that! You stand on a soap box. Just think, perhaps your mother won't have to sew dresses and your little brother will not get his finger caught in the machine because your mother isn't watching him." "Yes," I thought, taking myself very seriously, "I could too. Papa will you buy me the tools?" I asked. "Buy you the tools! That is no way to do business. Go out and work, save your money and then buy yourself tools. "Right again," I must have thought, because no sooner had he said that than I quietly put the papers down; got into my hat and coat and was on my way. Before any one realized what I was doing I was out on the street. No matter even if it was nine o'clock at night and mid-winter at that; my childish imagination was filled with the thought that I was old enough to work and I could see myself throwing hand-fulls of pennies into my mother's lap. A few doors down lived a printer, who like my father, was struggling to make ends meet. I had seen his children tying strings onto cardboard tags so I thought I would ask him for a job. Mother, fearful lest I should catch cold, ran after me but, seeing that I had my heart set on getting a job, she asked the printer to "play the game with me" and give me the job.

The first few days my working was taken as a joke but as the week advanced and the sum of my wages grew to almost the size of a fifty cent piece even my mother was forced to take it a little more seriously. By the time that the second week started tho my interest in the game of seeing who could tie the most strings onto tags was giving way to a desire to play [illegible] my little brother and sister [illegible] Fate had taken a hand in my [illegible] routine and I continued to work. My father was killed. In his zealousness to make a hit with the foreman he worked in the most dangerous places and met his death under the crushing weight of an overturned car.

So my career as a wage worker began. That a child of three can be taught a few motions necessary for the production of some commodities psychologists will agree. As for conditions making it necessary, one need only go down to the east side of New York City to see that what the New York Welfare Commission has reported is true.

WALL STREET ROCKS UNDER TEAPOT'S BLOWS

WHITE HOUSE PROSPECTS OF MC ADOO UP

Wilson's Crown Prince Sees Hopes on Funeral Pyre

William Gibbs McAdoo, $250,000 oil baby of Edwin L. Doheny, purchaser of Naval Reserves and cabinets, will come to Chicago today to learn whether his connection with the Teapot Dome oil scandal has placed his presidential ambition on the funeral pyre.

Mr. McAdoo has done a rather unusual thing. He has placed his political fortunes in the hands of the "public," which means his campaign committee.

If they decide that a candidate can retain the purity necessary to lead the Democrat jackass to victory in the next election, even tho handicapped by 250,000 oil dollars, Woodrow Wilson's crown prince will humbly bow his head and mutter "Vox populi; vox Dei."

Presidential Timber Scarce.

It is rumored that McAdoo's supporters will do that very thing. Presidential timber is rather scarce in the donkey ranks and it is also the opinion of Democrat politicians that the Republicans are so submerged in the Teapot Dome that even an oil can on the Democrat ticket will bring home the bacon.

In an interview the press agent of the McAdoo headquarters in Chicago likened the enthusiasm of his supporters to the fervor of the crusaders who crossed two continents to rescue the Holy Sepulcher from the Mohammedans. The Infidels in this case are the Republicans and the Holy Tomb is the White House which the knight errants of democracy expect to rescue from the sacreligious hands of the enemy.

Today's conference was called at the suggestion of McAdoo. On the suggestion of McAdoo the conference will also do the following: Give McAdoo a clean bill of health; give him a vote of confidence; announce that he is politically as pure as the driven snow and attempt to prove that the linking of his name with the Teapot scandal is a red herring dragged across the path of the Democrat party by enemy Republicans.

Scoff at McAdoo Claims.

The public generally scoffs at the alleged devotion of McAdoo to one of the fourteen points, namely "the right of self determination" for his campaign committee. The Washington expose having almost extinguished him as a candidate he is trying to crawl back by pulling off a novel publicity stunt.

Among those present at the McAdoo conference will be W. Jett Lauck, of Washington, who will represent the railway labor unions. At the St. Louis meeting of the Conference for Progressive Political Action,

The first great All-Race Congress in the history of Afro-Americans has adjourned its sessions at the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A. and the 250 delegates have returned to their homes in the 20 states from which they were called by the 61 national organizations taking part in the congress. Labor scored an educational victory, but the conservative machine keeps itself in power.

Dean Kelly Miller, of Howard University, and the coterie of business men and conservative professional men associated with him, are in control of the temporary organization that will function until the next session of the Sanhedrin, in 1925.

No Workers Among Officeholders

Not a single representative of Labor or the Farm is found in the executive committee that will attempt to represent the Race which is composed 98 per cent of workers and farmers. Thus the carrying out of the Sanhedrin's program for the elimination of the color line in labor unions will be left to the representatives of business, religion and the capitalist government at Washington.

Miller Is President

Dean Kelly Miller is President. Dean Miller is professor of sociology at Howard University, which is supported by the United States government and the Presbyterian Church.

F. B. Ransom, of Indianapolis, is Vice-President. Ransom is manager of the prosperous hairdressing business of Madame C. J. Walker, at Indianapolis.

J. L. Neil, is Secretary. Neil represents the Equal Rights League which is working along conciliatory lines for the removal of race discrimination.

R. N. Hawkins, treasurer, represents the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

These four will select four others of like kind and the committee of eight will have charge of carrying out the mandates of the Sanhedrin until the next congress, which will take place at a time and place they will fix, in 1925.

Radicals Not Discouraged

Radical Negro labor is not discouraged. It forced this Sanhedrin to consider the labor question and thru the publicity gained at the Sanhedrin it brought before the Race the fact that the basis of race discrimination is an economic one, and that the only hope for the oppressed Negro workers and tenant farmers is thru solidarity with the oppressed workers and farmers of other races.

Radical Negro labor cannot be prevented from getting into this next congress,—and in larger numbers than at the one just over. According to the constitution accepted at the Sanhedrin each national organization will be allowed five delegates to the Sanhedrin congresses, with an additional delegate for every 50,000 members or fraction thereof. Each state and municipal organization will be allowed one delegate, with additional ones at the same rate. Congresses are to take place every two years.

Labor At Next Congress

By JAY LOVESTONE.

We have seen that there is an acute shortage of homes for the workers. We have also seen that "the home is a less decent place to live in for the wage earner's family than it was two years ago; that there are families living in "holes"; that a great number of children are today being taken care of in the day nurseries, because mothers are compelled to leave their families and work outside in order to meet the high rent; that awful congestion is on the increase; that the standard of living and health of the worker are endangered and that tenement houses, vacated ten years ago and condemned as unfit, are now occupied; and that rents are steadily rising to heights which the mass of workers cannot hope to attain on the basis of the low wages being paid them.

In the face of this acute distress the government is doing nothing to help the working men. The government is not only not helping the workers in this severe crisis, but is actually

STOCKS TUMBLING WHILE EXPOSURES HIT NEW TRAILS

Financial Capitol of Nation in Furore

NEW YORK, Feb. 17—Wall Street, the financial and commercial capital of the United States, is facing renewed panic conditions this week with more stocks under the hammer blows of the Teapot Dome exposure.

Not since the hysterical days of 1914 when the gray hosts of the Kaiser crossed the frontiers into Belgium was there such an orgy of selling.

"Stop the oil investigations or you will bring ruin tumbling about our ears," was the frenzied cry of Wall Street stock gamblers to their marionettes in Washington. A call for a congress of none but successful businessmen to congress was made by Jesse Livermore, noted stock gambler and employe of Harry Sinclair. The confidence in business is undermined by congressional investigations he declared. It was Livermore

POMERENE, REACTIONARY, CHOSEN BY COOLIDGE TO PROBE THE OIL SCANDAL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17—The senate confirmed Coolidge's appointment of Atlee Pomerene, Democrat and ultra-reactionary, as one of the two special oil-lease prosecutors selected by the president to smooth over the political disturbance caused by the exposure of the rotten mess underlying the leasing of the Teapot Dome and No. 1 naval oil reserves to Harry Sinclair and Edwin Doheny.

The progressive senators succeeded in blocking action on the appointment of Owen J. Roberts of Philadelphia, Republican until Monday. Against the strenuous opposition of Senator Lodge, the senate voted to hold the debate on Robert's qualification for the position in open session.

DOCK STRIKE IN ENGLAND HALTS FOOD

McDonald Government Seeks Compromise in Struggle

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 17.—More than 200,000 dock and transport workers are out on strike all over England and the prospects are they will continue on strike for some time. The strike of the dock workers ties up the food supply of the nation, as most of Britain's food is imported.

Negotiations between the employers and workers under the direction of Tom Shaw, minister of labor, have failed to bring any prospect of an immediate settlement.

Aided By Rail Workers.

The National Union of Railwaymen have expressed their intention of rendering the transport workers "every possible assistance," during the strike.

They will refuse to handle any shipments that have been unloaded by scab dock workers. In the event it becomes necessary they will go out on strike to help the dockers.

Revive Triple Alliance.

The transport workers and the National Union of Railwaymen were both members of the Triple Alliance, which included the miners, and was broken up during the last miners' strike.

The decision to strike was reached by the dock workers on Jan. 29th, at the very moment the railway workers were reaching a settlement with the government and the railroads.

Since then negotiations have been going on constantly looking to a settlement, but the bosses would not consider the demands of the men and so the strike order was issued.

Wages Cut Since War.

The workers are demanding an increase of two shillings a day, and the guarantee of a full week's work. Before the strike the men were getting 10 shillings in the larger ports and 9 shillings a day in the smaller ports. Since the war the dockers have had their wages cut several times.

The shipping interests have been making enormous profits ever since the declaration of war and they are generally referred to as "the spoiled darlings of the war."

Food Profiteers Busy.

Already dealers in foodstuffs have begun holding out to wait for an increase in prices. Since the supply of stored food is small the speculators are a grave menace to the public.

No disorders have been reported. All ports report that there is a complete tieup. In Liverpool, which handles one-third of the nation's shipping, there is no activity at all in the port. Shipments of coal from Newcastle are at a standsill. Eighty ships are held at Hull by the strike and sixty at Glasgow.

No Substitute for Workers.

The dock workers' strike is generally considered more serious than the strike of the railwaymen was. The dockers handle nearly all the nation's food supply and there is no way of unloading ships while the dockers strike. The government could move food by motor transport during the railway strike but no such substitute for dock laborers exists.

There is no indication of just when the National Union of Railwaymen will strike or if they will strike to help the dockers.

The government is working hard to get the dock workers to accept a compromise. So far they have not been successful.

CHAPTER II.

OVER the town, over the endless white snowdrifts, over the hills, noiselessly passed the blue-eyed moonlit night. The evening was disturbed and windy, the clouds swept swiftly between stars and earth, the belt of sunset flamed scarlet. The wind shook the nameboard and it sang a squeaky song, while its black shadow swung to and fro on the footway. And then the wind drove off the clouds and dropped. It turned a little frosty. Empty streets; one could see from end to end of them; loud steps of chance passers-by; and the sky deep and starry as in winter.

Klimin went out into the open air and took a deep breath. He felt joyful, because one could smell the perfume of the sleepy breathing of the Spring, dozing in the distant glade, in the forest.

Where should he go? Dawn was close at hand, it was insensibly stealing from behind the high houses, and the night was slowly paling, as if some one were lighting the street with a big lantern far away. Soon it would be already morning and work would begin again. And with cheerful, youthful strides he went off thru the empty streets to the Cheka, to sleep till morning on the divan in his office, and, in the morning, once again set to work.

He wanted to eat, and still more he wanted to sleep, and scraps of sentences jingled in his heart, the voices of the comrades, their faces, the steady look of Robeiko, Ziman standing drawing on a scrap of paper and Karaulov with a smile tapping quietly on the floor with his huge foot, in a yellow military boot.

The town was in profound silence, and there were no lights visible at that late hour of the night. Only the two-story building of the Cheka threw light on the blue snowdrifts, and on the watchful sentinels on guard at the entrance. And inside the building, in the empty rooms, lit by the deathly clear electric light, were frozen chairs, tables, cupboards, and it seemed as if they were numb, in a light sleep from which they would easily awake.

The officer on duty at the Cheka, the Investigator, Gornuikh, was writing something, bending over the table. His face was dark, broad, with big cheek-bones and deep-set eyes, and a shaggy cap of hair hung over his forehead. At first sight he seemed elderly, but when you approached him from the side and observed the lines of his mouth, the soft oval of his face, it was clear that he was still quite young.

He wanted to sleep, to stretch his legs under the table, lay his head on the arm of the chair and drop into careless, pleasant sleep. But he must not sleep, for in the sleeping town, over the breadth of the sleeping country, in which are so many woods, ravines and dark unknown ways, Gornuikh alone was sleepless like a sentinel at his post. At any moment the telephone might ring, he might be called to the direct telegraph. . . . Sleep was not to be thought of.

But Gorniukh for two days and nights had not slept for a minute. There had been an operation last night, a whole series of searches, and, returning on horseback thru the empty streets, Gornuikh had breathed the frosty morning air, and had thought of how he would undress and lie down on his bed, but, at the Cheka they had stopped him unexpectedly, and he had had to remain on duty in the place of a comrade who had fallen ill. Swearing hard and with feeling, Gornuikh had taken on the duty and all night had not dozed for a moment. Several times the telephone had rung, and secret cipher telegrams had been brought from the telegraph. As the night wore on his weariness increased, the lines ran together in his eyes, and he stopped writing and listened to the regular noise of the ventilator, and watched the dark blue square of the window. His eyes closed of themselves, and from all sides a soft cloud of images, voices, rustlings, and noises enveloped him. The ventilator made a noise, and its noise was like the noise of the tall grass stirred by the wind, the tall green grass that crushes under the feet . . . a girl in white was walking in the grass and it rustled and murmured under her feet. Her face . . . he had seen it somewhere. . . . Still a child, he had seen her in a girl of the steppes, but how light her movements, how scarlet, how sweet her lips. . . .

The sound of an opening door reached his ears, and he suddenly awoke, cursed himself for dozing, and the young dream slipped tracelessly away and was instantly forgotten.

No. It was Klimin. Gornuikh knew his step. They

IRISH BOSSES IN BLACKLIST OF REBEL FIGHTERS

Irish Republicans Refused Employment

Thousands of former members of the Irish Republican Army, who fought against the Black and Tans and protected the property of Irish businessmen from destruction during the civil war, are now rewarded by being blacklisted by these employers and cannot get a job, according to Mrs. Kathleen Clarke, widow of Tom Clarke, one of the men who was executed with James Connolly in the 1916 Irish revolution.

Mrs. Clarke, a gray-haired rebel, is in America to tell the story of the present deplorable conditions in Ireland under the so-called Free State government. She spoke in North Side Turner Hall last Thursday night to a large audience, conspicuous by the absence of well-known politicians.

"The Free State loan issue," declared Mrs. Clarke, "was subsidized by the employing class, the Catholic and Protestant churches, the big insurance companies and other supporters of British imperialism in Ireland."

An instance of the brand of "Patriotism" the Free State has blessed the Irish workers with, can be judged from the fact that uniforms for the Free State army were bought in England because it would cost more to have them manufactured in Ireland.

The methods employed by the Free State government to deprive the Irish workers of the franchise were explained by Mrs. Clarke. "After the Republicans succeeded in electing 44 Republicans," she said, "in spite of all the obstructions the Free Staters could place in their way, the latter were afraid to allow the County Councils' elections to take place last fall. The Free State government realizing that the bulk of the republican vote came from the workers and the peasants, tried to pass a law which would give the property owner with a $10,000 valuation, four votes, one with a $5,000 valuation, two votes and one with $250 valuation one vote."

Speaking of the influence of British propaganda in the capitalist press of America, Mrs. Clarke said that the capitalist papers distorted the truth about the Irish movement or suppressed it. This remark was cheered by the audience, and when at the close of the meeting the chairman, Captain Denis Molloy, announced that the DAILY WORKER was for sale in the hall, hundreds of copies were sold.

In reply to questions from the floor, Mrs. Clarke stated that the rank and file of the labor unions in Ireland were in sympathy with the republican movement but that the leaders were reactionary.

Senator Couzens Lifts Veil on Mellon's Governmental Milking For the Benefit of Rich Trusts

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor.)

Coolidge's multi-millionaire secretary of the treasury is revealed as milking the government for the benefit of banks and corporations which pay no income or corporation taxes.

The curtain man is Senator James Couzens of Michigan, whose series of letters on the proposed reduction in surtaxes have stumped Mellon of Pittsburgh.

Couzen's latest letter challenges Mellon's good faith all along the line. His promise to reduce the cost of living by reducing the taxes of the rich is characterized as a most stupendous attempt to mislead the people.

The letter charges that lax enforcement of the law is sparing the rich and cutting down the revenues and that the treasury is playing directly into the hands of the corporations.

If Mellon were really interested in preventing the diminution of government revenues, according to Couzens, he would be out stopping the holes which permit the rich to evade the surtax law. The greatest loophole for avoiding surtaxes is the formation of holding companies in addition to the large number already in existence. Sinclair's Hyva Corporation was shown in the Teapot Dome hearings to have been formed for this purpose. According to the testimony of General Counsel Standford of the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., it was created to hold Sinclair's interests and receive his income without necessitating the payment of surtaxes. For the only tax on the income of corporations no matter how derived is the regular 12½ per cent tax.

Here is a new method of evasion revealed by Couzens. A very rich man, who uses most of his money to extend his power over working men by reinvestment, can create a corporation to receive his investment income for him. This dummy does not have to pay the graduated income tax or the surtax, only the straight 12½ per cent corporation income tax. It can act as the rich man's second personality investing his huge income and extending his control over workers in various industries and in all parts of the world.

Challenging the good faith of Mellon's expressed desire to collect more revenue from these incomes which are now escaping the tax gatherer, Couzens asks: "Is there any reason why corporations should not pay the same income tax on their receipts from interest on bank balances, dividends on stocks and interest on bonds and securities as individuals do?"

Mellon has turned over to the banks more than $100,000,000 thru selling them billions of dollars of government securities bearing unreasonably excessive rates. According to Couzens: "The excessive interest you are paying is proved by the fact that every issue you put out is enormously oversubscribed. In fact you are paying higher rates than some states and cities are paying for their borrowing. Your own bank, the Mellon National of Pittsburgh, holds nearly forty millions on which it pays no taxes whatsoever. The Chase National of New York is reported to hold nearly eighty million. You know that individuals holding these securities would have to pay income taxes. Why do you not recommend a remedy for this discrimination? Your policy has made it more difficult for industry to get money at reasonable rates than all the state and municipal bonds in existence. Banks do not hold many state and municipal bonds because they are not liquid enough but your issuing short time securities makes a very splendid investment for these financial institutions and manufacturers who keep their reserve in them."

Dealing with Mellon's claim that reduction in the rich man's tax burden will reduce the cost of living, Couzens cites the unanimous opinion of conservative economists to the effect that surtaxes on high incomes and the excess profits tax are the hardest taxes to pass along. According to Prof. T. S. Adams of Yale: "Taxes were responsible only in minor degree for the high cost of living. The cost of living went up before tax rates were increased, it stayed up when tax rates were reduced, and it will come down in the future whether tax rates be inceased or reduced."

During the seven years 1916 to 1922, Couzens shows, corporations averaged nearly $3,000,000,000 a year available for dividends and surplus, or more than 12 per cent on all common and preferred stock outstanding in 1922. What I desire, he says, is that the government should obtain its share of these enormous profits. Why lose all this revenue from those well able to pay? And why, if no one is paying these surtaxes is there such a tremendous campaign of propaganda to secure their reduction?

Chicago Newspaper Scale.

The union committee and the publishers have agreed to the following scale for composing rooms of newspaper plants: Day men $58, night men $63; 7½-hour day or night. The contract is for three years dating from last May but effective Feb. 11, 1924. Unless Typographical Union No. 16 fails to ratify at its next meeting, the negotiations which have dragged on for eight months are now successfully concluded.

Amalgamation means strength!

Fear Growing Revolt of Bankrupt Farmers

A committee of financiers, railroad presidents and business men with the American government represented by Herbert Hoover met here to save the bankers of the Northwest from bankruptcy and to keep the exploited farmers on the Coolidge bandwagon until the next election is over.

The assembled plutes announced that $100,000,000 were available for the relief of their fellow bankers. No time was wasted discussing the dire straits in which the farmers found themselve in; their troubles were of interest only because they had a direct connection with busted banks and bankrupt bankers.

Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, and Eugene Meyer, head of the War Finance Corporation, were present at the meeting and pledged the support of the government in the administration of the pool. If this pool is administered in the same highly efficient manner that the money appropriated for the disabled war veterans was handled by the republican administration, some of the farmers may come to the conclusion that it is not a pool but a bottomless pit.

It was announced at the meeting that $10,000,000 were immediately available for relief. The war finance corporation is good for ten times this amount.

How strange that relief is so hard to secure when the workers or farmers are in need of assistance but, let a banker send up a signal of distress and the government immediately places the United States treasury at his disposal.

Railroad Boss Farm Saviour!

C. T. Jaffray, Minneapolis, president of the "Soo" railroad, was elected chairman of the board of directors of the financing corporation which will start actual relief work within two or three weeks, it was announced. Jaffray will establish headquarters for the organization in Minneapolis.

The amounts pledged by districts are: New York and the eastern states, $5,000,000; Chicago, $2,000,000; the Twin Cities, $1,000,000; Detroit and Cleveland, $700,000 each, and Pittsburgh, $600,000.

Amalgamated Tells Workers Party of Steel Workers Fight Against Gunman Rule at Newport, Kentucky

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 17.—The District Executive Committee of the Workers Party here recently asked the Central Committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of North America, which has been carrying on the strike in the Newport Rolling Mills since July, 1921, for information in reference to the situation, sending at the same time a contribution to help the workers on strike.

In reply to this communication the following letter giving the history of the brave struggle of the workers at Newport was received from the Amalgamated's Central Committee, District No. 6, at Newport, Kentucky:

Workers Party of America,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Sirs and Brothers: In reply to your request of Feb. 4 inst., in which you ask for publicity, about the Newport strike situation, I wish to say that in order to give the brothers a thoro understanding of the situation in Newport it will be necessary to start from the beginning of the strike, and to which I am willing to add reports from time to time, as I get the news. This may help in keeping away from Newport, persons who go there to get employment at the mills and steel plant.

In July, 1921, the Andrews Steel Co. and the Newport Rolling Mills Co. decided to run the plants on the open shop plan, and refused to sign the scales of the Amalgamated Association and the consequence was, that about 2,300 members of the A. A. were left to choose between the two: either to stay loyal to the A. A. or become outcasts or scabs.

The company, not being as successful as they thought they would be, hired a bunch of thugs and gunmen, and the consequence was that there was a lot of disorder and disruption in the city of Newport, Ky., and the wind-up of the affair was that the state militia was sent to Newport to preserve order. After the militia arrived they soon realized that their presence was not required and after a short stay, the militia returned to their respective homes.

It seems that this did not suit the rolling mill company, for no more than the militia left than disorder again began to reign in Newport. The company at this time had about 65 armed guards and four machine guns stationed inside of their plant, and in January, 1922, the state militia returned to Newport, accompanied by tanks that were used in France, also machine guns, under the command of Colonel Denhart, who is now lieutenant governor of Kentucky.

Shoot at Citizens; Insult Women.

The militia at once gave a military demonstration, to show their strength. Citizens were shot at, women insulted, and law abiding citizens were cast in the bull pens. (The bull pen was a sort of prison located inside the Newport Rolling Mills.) The militia began to raid private homes and the saloons looking for moonshine and home brew.

(Of course the striking steel workers got all the blame; they were the supposed cause of disorder.) A reign of terror remained in Newport, as only countries of Russia were used to seeing. After about four months of military regime, the Hon. Governor Morrow, then governor of Kentucky, was finally persuaded to withdraw the troops from Newport and peace once more began to reign, and I am pleased to say has remained so up to the present time. The Newport Rolling Mill and the Andrew Steel Company have had at least 5,000 men in their employ since the beginning of the strike, and have made no success.

Negroes Quit.

They have brought Negroes from the sunny South, promising them the land of Eden, but it has been to the sorrow of the unfortunate Negro, for he soon saw his mistake. He saw that the golden apple was only a gilded one and did not prove to be what it should be. The result was that as soon as the Negro got enough together he started back South. Unfortunately there are a good many who can't get enough together to pay their way back.

Because three of our brothers told a truck driver that there was a strike on in Newport, the federal judge sentenced them to serve eight months in Winchester, Ky. prison. Thank God their time will soon be up as they only have about thirty days to serve.

Traitors Canned.

We have had about 100 of our brothers who deserted the ranks of the A. A. and became traitors to their fellow workmen. I am proud to say that only a few of these deserters remain at the mills, as the company itself has no use for a traitor.

Hoping that this is what you want to know and intending to write from time to time as I receive the news, I am,

Fraternally ond sincerely yours,
GEO. H. LAMPE, Cor., Rep.
817 Isabella St., Newport, Ky.

The District Committee at Cleveland will endeavor to arouse the workers in neighboring cities in Ohio to give support for the steel workers at Newport so that they will be able to continue their splendid fight.

WILMINGTON, DEL., IS SCENE OF THE LATEST SCARE

Police Surely Had This Meeting Covered

WILMINGTON, Del., Feb. 17.—Italian workers, who want to hold meetings for the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense committee, are told to go to Massachusetts to hold them, by local police. That organizations like the the Sons of Italy are willing to cooperate with the radical Italians makes no difference to the police. "Reds can't hold no meetings in this town," the police say.

The fear the police have of radical meetings goes rather far here. A Catholic priest, Rev. John S. Glucy, phoned the police recently that a meeting of reds would take place in a certain hall. Superintendent of police Black ordered more than a score of police to report to him in plain clothes. When they reported he ordered them to go to the hall where the meeting was to take place and scatter themselves in the audience.

The brave police went to the hall. They scattered. They tried to look desperate. They waited for the signal. The meeting opened.

The Rev. George Allison, pastor of the Second Baptist church, spoke and a number of children from his Sunday school sang.

"This is slick work on the part of the bloody reds," whispered the police. "We will give it to them when they show their colors."

Then the Rev. Mr. Allison gave a talk on "Italy, Its People, and Their Customs."

"The dirty bums," sighed the police. "They are the slick ones. They think we will leave and then they will overthrow the government of the country. Leave? Not us. We stay here and protect the government. We stay if it is all night."

There were more songs by the Sunday school children and then the meeting closed.

Feared There Was Mistake.

The policeman in charge of the detail at the meeting thought there might be some mistake. For all he knew the government was being overthrown in another hall. Maybe the police were in the wrong place. He spoke to the Rev. Mr. Allison.

Allison cleared the whole thing up. The meeting was being held for the benefit of a Polish Baptist church and apparently the Catholic priest who had called the police hoped to break up the meeting and so protect his flock from the ravages of hard-shelled Baptism.

After sending out a general alarm to all police stations to look out for red meetings and instructing them to protect and uphold the government of city, state and nation the police went back to headquarters to await developments.

aiding and abetting the perpetuation of these deplorable hardships which the workers are today enduring. The government is permitting the continuation of the worst evils of the housing crisis. An examination of the policy pursued by the government towards the workers and the capitalist landlords can yield only a scathing indictment of the government's inactivity in relieving the misery of the workers and of the energy it displays in protecting the landlord class.

Thousands of Tenement Houses Illegally Built.

At the hearings of the New York State Housing Commission it was testified that there were at present at least 5,000 illegally constructed tenement houses. Tenement House Commissioner Mann confessed that he was helpless in permitting the landlord to convert these houses illegally into tenements. He admitted that the people living in these buildings were under a heavy fire hazard. Under present conditions Commissioner Mann declared: "Public officials must close one eye and some times both." He went on to give an illustration of a tenement house in Bath Beach catching fire and taking the lives of six persons, despite the fact that violations had been pending against this fire trap for six months, the government did nothing to remove the defects.

False Economy at Workers Expense.

The government is pursuing a policy of criminal false economy at the expense of the workers. In New York orders have been issued from the city hall prohibiting any increase in appropriations for the different departments. In this way the Tenement House Department had its budget cut to a minimum and has been crippled thru a lack of sufficient inspectors.

Commissioner Mann told the Housing Commission that there are today at least 35,000 violations pending against landlords with 13,000 cancellations or compliances for the first half of the year (1923). It would be a physical impossibility for the 216 inspectors of the Tenement House Department to inspect every tenement house in the city even once a year. The Commission agreed that there should be regular inspection monthly if safety is to be considered. But the government, apparently, is not concerned with the safety of the workers for it is ready to throw away millions in graft to corporations and their tools while it is enforcing the minimum requirement and budget on a department so vital to the lives of the mass of people.

This tragic state of affairs and menace to the security of the working masses was emphasized by Captain Ely in his testimony before the housing commission when he declared: "We have ample evidence of Commissioner Mann's neglect to perform his duty as required under the law. We called his case to the attention of acting Mayor Murray Hulbert two weeks ago when Mr. Hulbert assumed the duties of mayor but further than to merely acknowledge receipt of our communication, the acting mayor practically ignored our demand."

While the government is quick to enforce the contracts of the capitalists for big profits, it is doing nothing to help the workers who are at the mercy of the landlords demanding large securities from them on renting houses. The effects of this practice, which is a direct outgrowth of the housing shortage, was summed up to the state investigators by a witness, Agnes M. Craig, as follows: "Tenants pay security to one landlord and the house is turned rapidly over to a dozen and one landlords, and as the first landlord moves away, the tenant has no redress under the law but to go to the first landlord for the security. If they cannot find the original landlord, then they cannot find their security!"

Under the law the landlord cannot enforce this security holdup game which, in effect, is a severe penalty on the tenant. Yet, the government permits these landlords to take advantage of the poor working man who does not know the law. Very often workers make no attempt even to take such cases to court and thus lose their security because they do not understand court procedure.

Evidence presented to the Housing Commission shows conclusively that the government has done nothing to stop the landlords from obtaining in this manner large sums of money which were frequently lost to the tenant either thru the disappearance of the owner or thru the sale of the property. Of course, tho the government has always been ready to guarantee a certain rate of interest or profit to the capitalists, it has not done a thing in this case to compel the landlords to pay interest to the tenants on these securities.

Allows Iron Clad Leases.

Under the very eyes of government officials the United Real Estate Owners of New York City, an organization composed of about 11,000 real estate owners, has been violating every principle of contracts, the sanctity of which has always been preached by our capitalist defenders of the constitution and for the enforcement of which the workers have often had to pay with their jobs, their homes and their very lives.

Despite the enactment of the emergency rent laws the government has blinked at the fact that the provisions of the eleventh clause of the "Iron-Clad Lease" is a complete abrogation of the tenant's rights. According to this clause "a court decision fixing the amount of rental to be charged for the apartment is to be disregarded, providing the amount of rent fixed by the court is less than the amount reserved in the lease or the rent last paid if it exceeds that amount." Other burdensome requirements include new penalties in the form of threatened rental increase if the tenant accepts a lodger, or if the tenant remains as a hold-over under the rent laws and the landlord obtains an offer of higher rent for the apartment.

The State Housing Commission has frankly declared that "such terms are obviously intended to subvert the purpose for which the rent laws were enacted and must be accepted as evidence of the disposition of the landlord to utilize the present emergency for the purpose of exacting the most oppressive and burdensome leasehold." Since this conclusion of the State investigators was made public not a single landlord has been compelled to stop breaking the laws of the State.

Evictions Menace Thousands.

One of the worst hardships from which the working men are suffering today is the power of summary evictions by the courts. These summary proceedings have permited landlords to throw people into the streets. This has set up the landlord class as a most favored group even amongst the capitalists, for the butcher, the grocer, or the shoemaker does not have this right to interfere with the personal security of the debtor.

How harsh the courts have been to the working men under these proceedings was told to the commission by Captain Ely in citing the following typical case: A working woman went to the court. She had mailed a check to the landlord. While she was at work she was notified over the telephone that her things were on the sidewalk. She came back and found part of her possessions there. The neighbors had taken in her clothing and told her that her things were moved out and a padlock placed on the door of her apartment. The woman sought entry thru the window on the fire escape. She then broke the padlock and moved her things back into the house. She told the marshal that a check for the landlord was left on the chiffonier. Thereupon the marshal phoned the landlord who ordered her dispossessed at once. She then proceeded to sent a registered letter with a check to the landlord and told the judge about it. The letter was returned opened with the check not accepted. Yet, the judge immediately ordered the working woman dispossessed.

Municipal Court Judge Aaron J. Levy summarized the extent of these eviction proceedings in the last four years as follows: "In 1919, in the five boroughs constituting the City of New York we had instituted 96,623 landlord and tenant proceedings. In 1920, which, I believe, was the year in which the rent laws were passed, they went to 118,240, in spite of the rent laws, and in the succeeding year of 1921, after the rent laws were in effect for almost a year, they jumped to 125,656. So the gentlement owning real estate in New York were not respectors of the rent laws." In 1922 there were 85,826 eviction proceedings. In the first half of 1923 there were 65,000 cases of this sort on the calendar. In one district court, the Seventh District Court of Judge Crain, these attempts of the landlords to evict their tenants rose from 9,779 in 1919 before the rent laws were enacted to 19,941 in 1920, after the rent laws were passed.

Government Saves Profiteers.

While the government was helping the landlords in their cruel practice of summarily evicting the poor tenants, it was, at the same time doing its best to guarantee the property owners minimum ample profits and to aid and abet many landlords in forcing the most exorbitant rents on the workers.

In a case before Judge Spiegelberg the latter ruled on the basis of an Appelate Division decision that eight per cent was not too high in view of the fact that investments at the time were netting above this amount.

Many landlords have seized upon this decision to compel their tenants to pay rentals at a rate of about eleven per cent profit and often where the property was heavily mortgaged, at rates as high as 40 to 50 per cent.

The Federation of Tenants' Association of Greater New York presented data to the State Commission showing that in seven cases on Washington Heights the landlords were garnering profits ranging anywhere from 128 to 349 per cent; in 40 cases at about 100 per cent, and in 200 cases from 7 to 29 per cent.

While the workers were being robbed of their food and the opportunity to send their children to school, in order to meet these rentals, the government was allowing the landlord class to continue to fleece the tenants in this cold-blooded fashion.

The Courts—The Landlord's Stronghold.

In the housing crisis, like in all other difficulties in which the working men find themselves under capitalism, the courts are invariably on the side of the rich and against the poor. According to the Emergency Rent Relief Laws the tenant is allowed a trial by jury to determine the reasonableness of the increase in rent.

On Jan. 21st, 1924, Congressman Fiorello H. LaGuardia wrote a letter to Mr. Bernhard Shientag, chairman of the State Commission of Housing and Regional Planning, in which he cited his experience with the high-handed conduct of the courts "vitiating the very purpose of the law." The congressman pointed out that in this case involving the protest of twenty-six tenants in the Sixth District Municipal Court, against an increase in rent, the judge, at the end of the case, "instead of permitting the jury to decide whether the rent was reasonable, or excessive, took that question away from the jury and submitted three questions for the jury to decide, instructing them to bring in replies to the three specified questions. The questions given to the jury were substantially as follows: 1. What is the present income derived from the property? 2. What are the operating expenses of the property? 3. What is the valuation of the property?

"The case was the usual one of the typical landlord padding his bill of particulars with excessive operating costs and with the usual expert testimony on the valuation of the property. The jury brought in a verdict fixing the value of the property at the figure of the assessed valuation, refusing to believe, of course, the flimsy, groundless figures of the experts on valuation and also cut the operating expenses in accordance with the facts as they believed them, seeing right thru the padded list of the landlord. The court not satisfied with taking the fundamental question away from the jury, then set aside that portion of the jury's verdict as to the operating expenses and substituted other figures. With the instructions as given the jury, and the setting aside of the figures unsatisfactory to the landlord, the Court assumed the province of the jury and defeated the very purpose of the Emergency Rent Relief Law. Thus the tenants were deprived in every sense of the word a trial by jury."

We see that here as in every contest between the workers and their exploiters the courts lined up on the side of the propertied interests, the capitalists, against the expropriated masses, the workers. The Court, in this instance, did not instruct the jury to find out how much the workers were able to pay but propagandized the jury to fix a handsome profit for the landlord.

Rent Laws No Remedy.

The Emergency Rent Relief Laws were and are at best only a half-hearted attempt to show an interest on the part of the government in the deplorable housing conditions of the working class. Every one admits and overwhelming evidence has been presented to the State Housing Commission to show that since the enactment of these laws the rent situation has grown worse. What is more, we have seen that every supposed purpose of relief in these laws has been frustrated by the landlords with the tacit or with the open aid of the government itself.

These laws were enacted, to use the words of the Housing Commission, "to avoid that which in their absence would have been a calamity." The Wall Street Journal of Oct. 18, 1923, saw the full significance of this point of view in its statement that: "The situation extends a grave warning to the whole class of New York realty owners. Indirectly all owners of private property must be condemned over a condition which makes for discontent, disrespect for existing social institutions and a dozen varieties of political radicalism."

And Patrick J. Reville, Superintendent of Buildings, Borough of the Bronx, made it clear to the Housing Commission that "The rent laws were as much an advantage to the investor as they were to the tenant. It would have been absolutely impossible to collect the rents if they insisted going along in the rampant way they were of raising rents, property changing hands from week to week, getting in the hands of new operators and speculators. It would have created a condition that your Police Department and even your military could not take care of, because your laws were affecting your working class."

Mr. Charles Brady, the Superintendent of Buildings in the Borough of Manhattan, went so far as to tell the Housing Commission that if it were not for the rent laws "we won't have enough marshals in the City of New York to put the tenants out."

Dr. Frank J. Monaghan, Health Commissioner, proved that the rent laws were not to the disadvantage of the landlords by citing the small number of foreclosures of tenements since their enactment by the legislature.

Speaking for the extension of these laws in order to keep the lid on the protests of the workers suffering from these incalculable troubles, Lillie Grant of the Mayor's Committee, said: "If these laws are not extended we are going to see bloodshed right in New York City, and riot."

Landlords Well Organized.

The government is simply carrying out the dictates of the capitalists and serving the landlords. A powerful lobby is maintained by these interests to see that the legislators should not go wrong on housing matters.

Thus Captain Ely, of the Tenants' Federation, informed the state investigators that he "was told by one of the members of the real estate trust that the slush fund which has been raised by real estate men to be used at Albany is so large that they are ashamed to look at it." The landlords, thru the Real Estate Board, are also making an effort to put all rent cases into the hands of a special commission which will be entirely removed from popular influence and be appointed by the governor.

The facts of capitalist control of the governmental agencies in the housing crisis are as legion as in all other instances where the workers are subject to employing class domination.

The government is doing nothing for the working class in the acute housing crisis. The government has surrended lock, stock and barrel to the landlords.

ASPIRATIONS OF CROWN PRINCE UP FOR DECISION

William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists was quoted as saying that McAdoo's connection with the Teapot Dome rendered him unavailable as a candidate, but Mr. Johnston now comes forward with a denial. He states that McAdoo has the support of a considerable portion of organized labor and that he (Mr. Johnston) has high personal esteem for Doheny's legal errand boy and that nothing has happened in the Teapot or anywhere else that has caused him to doubt McAdoo's integrity.

The Plot Thickens.

The oil scandal has caused as much consternation in the ranks of the labor fakers as it has in the ranks of the capitalist parties. That section of organized labor which accepts the leadership of Samuel Gompers is back of Crown Prince McAdoo while the railroad brotherhoods led by Warren S. Stone look on Senator Robert Marion LaFollette as the Moses who will lead the American people out of the political Egypt.

Should the Republican party bosses invite LaFollette to take along his broom and clean out their Aegean stables the railroad brotherhoods or the officials thereof, might be content to rally behind the man LaFollette rather than the party.

This would be the excuse of course. How Gompers, a Democrat party fixture, would feel in such ungodly company can be better imagined than described, hence the strenuous efforts to preserve McAdoo's political virtue, on the part of the Gompers lieutenant.

More Skeletons In His Closet.

That Mr. McAdoo has more skeletons in his closet than were revealed to the public gaze when Doheny opened the door, was proved by Representative Foster of Ohio when he informed the congress that the firm of McAdoo, Cotton and Franklin received retainers tot/ling a million dollars that they never would have received but for McAdoo's White House connections from the motion picture industry and from the Charles W. Morse shipping interests. This is the Mr. Morse who was released from the penitentiary by Attorney General Daugherty during the Taft regime for the consideration of $25,000. Evidently Mr. Morse still knows the efficacy of dollars. He made millions out of the three billion dollars that were wasted by the government ship building during the war, was arrested on charges of defrauding the government but thanks to his able lawyers and his generous retainers he went off scot free.

During the Morse trial Mr. McAdoo testified that his law firm had a contract with Morse which provided for a payment of approximately $500,000 in commissions on shipments of coal to France. How can Mr. McAdoo explain his profitable connection with a man who was a self confessed crook when he entered his employment?

McAdoo resigned from the Wilson cabinet two years before the termination of that administration. While his father-in-law was still in the White House, McAdoo was in Mexico City as the paid agent of Doheny trying to influence the Mexican government to change the constitution in behalf of American oil interests. McAdoo had the prestige and the influence of his father-in-law's administration behind him and Doheny considered him worth $250,000.

He secured coal contracts for Morse from the Italian and French governments thru their representatives in Washington, the same representatives he had negotiated loans with while he was secretary of the treasury. The money that was given to these governments out of the United States treasury by McAdoo, came mostly back to him in commissions after he had resigned that office.

The handpicked McAdoo campaign committee may express confidence in his candidacy but the American workers and farmers whose interests he promises to serve see in him only a political grafter and a tool of capitalism.

Rents in Working Class Districts to Go up on May 1st

Negroes on the south side are going to be hardest hit by rent increases that will be made May 1. Rents in all working class districts will be sent soaring above the present outrageous high levels, says the Tenants' Protective League.

The League estimates that flats renting for $60 a month in the near south side colored districts will be raised 100% May 1. Chicago as a whole will be asked to pay from 5% to 15% a month more after the first of May.

Apartments renting from $75 to $100 a month will be raised from $10 to $15 a month. The highest rates of increase will be put over on the south side. Speculation in property has been general in that district, because of the proposal to build a subway on the south side.

Renting agencies refuse to discuss the possibility of rent increases.

Teapot Dome Investigators Halt Probe to Examine Damage Done; Million Dollar Slush Fund Next

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Teapot Dome investigators are pausing today to decide the reaction and scope of their future inquiry into the leasing of naval oil reserves.

Hearings have been adjourned until Feb. 25, when the $1,000,000 "slush fund," reported to have been used here, will be gone into.

No congressional investigating committee in many years has produced such a variety of sensations with such rapidity as this committee has. The evidence thus far presented makes a mountain of documents.

Even committee members are a little confused at times in trying to keep clear in their minds just what the committee has developed. In brief, here is what has been shown the sensational phases of the inquiry opened:

What the Inquiry Has Opened.

1. That Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, obtained $1,000,000 from Edward L. Doheny, lessee of California Naval Reserves, and $25,000 from J. W. Zevely, representative of Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome.

2. That Fall and Secretary of the Navy Denby were the two men primarily responsible for transfer from the navy to the interior department by President Harding of the naval oil reserves.

3. That Denby approved the terms of the leases and the contracts for exchanging oil from tank storage, over the vigorous protests of naval officers, who held the contracts illegal under the law of 1920.

4. That Fall was negotiating with Sinclair about Teapot Dome shortly after he took office in March, 1921, altho the reserves were not transferred to the interior department until June, 1921.

5. That first Doheny and then Sinclair had been trying for a long time to get Teapot Dome. Claims held by the Pioneer Oil Company had been held invalid by the government and this apparently caused Doheny to drop the matter.

6. That Sinclair bought off the holders of these prior claims, agreeing to pay $1,000,000 to the Pioneer Oil Company; $1,000,000 to F. G. Bonfils and Leo Stack of Denver, and various other sums to other claimants, to prevent interference with his negotiations with Fall for Teapot Dome.

7. That Fall, making the Teapot Dome lease, secretly ordered interior department officials not to give out any information regarding the lease.

8. That Fall thought it unnecessary to ask Attorney-General Daugherty's opinion regarding legality of the lease and that Daugherty had expressed, informally and verbally, a belief that the leases were valid.

9. That the whole question of the legality of the leases was discussed at least casually in the cabinet, tho individual cabinet officers, in separate statements, said they did not remember this and President Coolidge, who as vice-president, attended cabinet meetings could not recall it.

10. That Attorney-General Daugherty and Fall, both knew the proposed leasing plan had been held invalid by government legal experts, who advised his company not to bid on those terms.

Development of these facts by the committee has brought about this action:

Adoption by the senate of a resolution, demanding Denby resign, which President Coolidge has served notice he will ignore.

Adoption of a resolution for appointment of special counsel to prosecute the matter civilly and criminally.,

Appointment by Mr. Coolidge of Owen J. Roberts and Atlee Pomerene as counsel for this purpose.

who hired out to Sinclair for the purpose of "bulling" Mammoth Oil Company Stock, the company that leased the Teapot Dome.

The stock was placed on the market at $26 and boosted it to $60 before the transaction closed.

The British press sees far-reaching effects, which eventually may become international in their scope, growing out of the oil leasing scandals uncovered in Washington.

Newspapers devoted much space to what is declared as a "panic" in Wall Street as a result of the revelations.

Typical of the comment is that of the London Daily News, which says: "Deplorable affairs are shaking American politics to its foundations. Soon it will become difficult to find a politician who the public does not believe in some way implicated. When the facts are finally established, there may be so great an upheaval in the political parties that the reactions will affect American relations in Europe."

Coolidge Protects Denby.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—President Coolidge has defied the senate, and placed a protecting arm around Edwin Denby, his secretary of the navy, who gave away the naval oil reserves, in connivance with Albert Fall. He says he has appointed special counsel who will study the Teapot Dome situation and report the facts to him. After he has their report, he will act.

Coolidge Tempts Fate.

Mr. Coolidge is faced with a return of the contemptuous remarks he hurled at the senate when it voted by a decisive majority to demand that he kick Denby out. He has hastened to verify LaFollette's prediction that he would run the same course that Taft ran in the Ballinger affair. Possibly he has as good a chance of a worthless nomination as Taft had, after he had defended Ballinger in vain. Opinion in Washington is almost unanimous that Denby and young Roosevelt will go, and that Coolidge meanwhile will have involved himself in the sordid intrigue of oil-in-government so completely as to leave no chance that the voters will forgive him next November.

The "Hush" Brigade.

Just how sordid has been this nationwide conspiracy to throttle the truth about the oil graft was indicated when the purchase of Carl McGee's Morning Journal, at Albuquerque, N. M., by the "First National Bank crowd" was re-told before the senate committee on Feb. 12. McGee bought the paper in 1920 from Fall and his associates, who included John W. Weeks and William Coolidge of Boston, the Chino Copper Co., the El Paso & Southwestern Railway, and Price, Kenny & Co., of Cleveland. He was a liberal Democrat, and soon was in conflict with the Fall crowd. Then he started to investigate the Teapot Dome lease, and wired to the Denver Post to learn who had sent blooded stock to Fall's ranch, he discovered that a libel suit brought against him by the bank on another issue would become serious. Presently he was approached with offers of purchase of his property.

Open Blackmail.

First came Dr. Barham of the Los Angeles Herald, who admitted having borrowed $250,000 from Doheny, but said that he could give McGee a high-salaried job with Hearst. McGee concluded that Doheny was the real bidder. Then came Tammen and Bonfils of the Denver Post, who were preparing to squeeze Sinclair for their $1,000,000 and thereafter to stop their exposure of Teapot Dome. Their agent told McGee that if he would sell to them he would "make more money than you ever heard of." This was obviously oil money to be furnished by Sinclair. Finally McGee was induced to sell to Weil, a go-between for the bank, who made him go to Chicago "to avoid local gossip," and there handle the deal thru the First Trust and Savings Bank and the First National Bank. This latter is the bank of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana.

Both Parties Guilty.

As tho to bind up all the elements with a firm band of oil, it was shown that one M. L. Fox, editor of this paper under Fall, and who received by mail, long in advance of its going to the president, Fall's whitewash report of June, 7, 1922, on Teapot Dome, has recently been one of the McAdoo headquarters staff in Chicago.

Edwin E. Brown, vice-president of the First National Bank of Chicago, testified that Jim McNary, who was nominated and rejected for comptroller of the currency last summer, was one of the crowd who bought McGee's paper—thru the First National Bank of Albuquerque—in competition with the bids from Los Angeles and the Denver Post, when McGee was beginning to show up the oil lease frauds.

Weil, the go-between, testified that criticism of Fall and the Fall policies stopped when McGee was eliminated.

Workers Party Role at Sanhedrin Related in Tomorrow's Issue

The only recognition of labor at the Negro All Race Congress or Sanhedrin came from the representatives of the Workers Party and other groups that worked in sympathy with them.

The story of the fight the Workers Party carried thru at the Sanhedrin will be described in the next issue of The DAILY WORKER. The story should be read by every class conscious worker of either race for few things are more significant in the American labor movement than the role of the colored race.

Convicts Burned to Death.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 17.—Four convicts were burned to death and damage estimated at from $80,000 to $100,000 was caused when fire completely destroyed the main prison building at Flat Top prison, about forty miles from here.

Get unity thru the Labor Party!

SANHEDRIN ENDS WITH MONEYED NEGROES AT HEAD

will continue to have the majority of delegates but Labor will see to it that every possible workers' organization will be represented with a full quota of delegates.

The labor delegates will make themselves felt from the beginning because they will not be fooled by the promises of Dean Kelly Miller and his kind. At this last congress Dean Miller fooled the labor representatives the first day by assuring them that he regarded Labor as the most important issue before the Race and promising them that it would receive full consideration.

Miller Sabotaged Labor

Dean Miller sabotaged Labor from the beginning, as Otto E. Huiswoud, of the African Blood Brotherhood, charged. He sabotaged Labor by appointing chamber of commerce and company union men to the labor commission and by denying labor the floor, in spite of previous promises. Labor finally forced itself onto the floor only by overwhelming the chairman with the protests of the sympathizers present.

Labor shook up the Miller machine. Labor wakened up Negroes to the fact that the Race issue is a labor issue tho the final decisions of the Sanhedrin, as expressed by the report of the Committee on Permanent Results, which boiled down the reports of the various committees, would not give that impression.

The final report of the committee of permanent results, which is quoted in part elsewhere makes no specific reference to the color line in labor unions, only implying that issue by demanding "recognition of Negro workers in fields where labor is organized."

Dodging Klan Issue

Entirely ignored is the ferocious Ku Klux Klan, which persecutes the Race so much, especially the workingclass elements of the Race. The Workers Party resolution calling for unity with the foreign-born against the "common enemy" the Klan, was the only anti-Klan resolution presented and was killed by the final committee.

Segregation is ignored: real estate dealers find the present policy more profitable than a policy of letting houses for the first comers.

Ignore Jim Crow Schools

The Jim Crow school issue is ignored. Instead a weak program calls for equal funds for Negro schools, not realizing that as long as the races are segregated that school boards will always discriminate against the black schools.

More government support is asked for Howard University insead of demanding that the other universities, which discriminate against the Negro, drop the color line.

Soviet Russia recognition, an issue displeasing to the government which subsidized Howard University, was kept from the floor.

Soviet Russia and the Klan were never presented to the floor for consideration. The work of the conference, as Dean Miller said, was done in committees—and committees appointed largely by himself.

46, But No Workers.

The reactionary policy of the commission of permanent results is easily explained. Of the 46 members not one is a workingman or farmer, tho workingmen and farmers compose 98 per cent of the Race. There are nearly a dozen clergymen, there are doctors, attorneys and business men and editors, chambers of commerce men and dealers in real estate.

The real estate men gain by the policy of segregation;

The business interests generally gain by the policy of segregation;

The chambers of commerce, which control the Urban League that acts as an open shop employment agency in large negro urban centers, are as reactionary as any white chamber of commerce. They are not only against labor organization but they are against aggressive racial action that might offend their white capitalistic friends;

The attorneys are attorneys and the preachers are preachers, tho some of the latter are more progressive than the others. The preachers are in closer touch with the workers of the Race.

Professors and Segregation.

The professors gain by the policy of segregation of the race in Negro schools. If the regular public schools admitted Negroes to the same classes as white children, sharing the same advantages, there would be little call for special endowed schools of the Race.

In short the hope of the oppressed Negro workers does not lie in the present set of Negro leaders. Marcus Garvey says they are too old. The workers say they are too bourgeois.

Sanhedrin Capitalists Denature Labor Report in Final Committee

How Dean Kelly Miller's machine took the starch out of the labor program at the All-Race Convention is illustrated in the three labor programs shown here. The first are the demands submitted by the Negro workers in the Workers Party delegation. It offers a definite method of campaigning for the removal of race distinctions in the American Federation of Labor.

The second is the labor program adopted by the Labor Committee. This is a modification of the Workers Party program, a modification caused by the fact that Dean Miller had packed non-labor and anti-union elements into the committee, such as Arnold T. Hill, of the Urban League, a chamber of commerce institution. Yet this labor committee program retains the basic idea of the appeal to the trade unions.

The third and last program is all that got thru the Committee for Permanent Results. It is intentionally weak and vague, avoiding use of the term "labor union." Elimination of the color line in labor unions is, however, implied in the line "recognition of Negro workers in fields where labor is organized," and radical Negroes will make an issue on this point and will make campaigns in the trade unions on this basis.

Workers Party Labor Demand

1. That the American Federation of Labor (and all other bodies of organized labor) make an intensive drive in the immediate future to organize Negro workers wherever found, on a basis of equality in the same unions with the whites.

2. That all such labor organizations be fraternally addressed by this body, with the request that such labor bodies shall immediately conduct among their members an official propaganda against discrimination of color and against racial snobbishness in the labor unions and in favor of enrolling all Negro workers into the unions. Further, that such campaign be carried on in collaboration with representatives of the Negro Sanhedrin.

3. That all Negro papers be requested to carry on an intensive propaganda among the race for the joining of labor unions on the basis of equality.

4. In view of the fact that the Negro in industry is as yet an unskilled laborer as a rule, and as the industrial form of union and the breaking down of craft aristocracy in the unions are in the interests of the Negro as an unskilled worker, we therefore favor the transformation of all craft unions into industrial unions. However, we are opposed to dual unionism, as well as "Jim-Crow" unionism, and favor the Negro joining everywhere the main body of labor organization.

As Modified by Labor Committee

1. The cessation of exploitation of Negro labor as a tool in the hands of capital.

2. An appeal to the A. F. of L. for the fullest and equal recognition of Negro workers in practice as well as in theory.

3. Securing of the support and cooperation of the Negro press in educating Negro workers to the value and need for organization and unity.

4. The promotion of an educational program for the conservation of abilities of Negro workers by aiding in adjusting workers in work for which they are best qualified.

5. A campaign for the increase of opportunities permitting of advancement for Negro workers.

6. An appeal to the Government for the removal of the discriminations and limitations placed upon Negro workers thruout the Civil Service, and for the securing of further recognition and opportunities for advancement for qualified Negro workers.

7. A program for the relief of Tenant Farmers and Share Farmers of the South.

8. The promotion of a nation-wide program of housing in industrial centers adequate to the needs of the increasing Negro population, in order to maintain workers in the best health and highest working efficiency.

9. The creation of a sentiment among white workers, both in and out of Trade Unions, for a fuller appreciation, recognition and support of Negro workers.

What Finally Got Thru

IT IS the sense of the Negro Sanhedrin that the exploitation of Negro labor in the conflict between capital and organized labor is unfair and detrimental and that the principle of equal pay, recognition of Negro workers in fields where labor is organized, and community assistance to Negro workers in industrial centers and organized financial relief in farming centers are all highly desirable.

SEE JAPS NEXT TO RECOGNIZE SOVIET RUSSIA

Idaho Senator Regrets U. S. Does Not Lead

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—"I expect to see Japan shortly take up final negotiations for the recognition of Russia," said Senator Borah to The Federated Press.

"Not only am I led to this conclusion by what I see in the press, but by private information. I deeply regret that we are not in the lead, but am delighted nevertheless that the great Russian problem is being slowly but effectively solved.

"England, Italy, now Austria and Norway, and Japan seem to be closing up their affairs with Russia.

"I should like very much if we were leading, but I am not at all doubtful as to what is finally going to be the result—and at no distant day."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—How to gain attention in Congress for the resolution proposing the child labor amendment to the federal constitution, is the chief topic under discussion at the quarterly meeting of the executive council of the A. NEGROES BARRED BY LABOR, JOINED COMPANY UNION

Sanhedrin Delegate in Talk on Topeka

Bar the Negro worker from the regular unions and you are likely to find him in a company union.

This is what happened at Topeka, Kansas, according to Mr. Frank W. Kirk, delegate to the Negro Sanhedrin and member of the Sanhedrin's labor commission.

Down in Topeka Mr. Kirk is president of the Negro lodge of the System Carmen's Association of the Sante Fe railroad. He organized the local himself at the call of his employers and there are 1,000 Negroes in the lodge, 1,700 being in a sister lodge of whites from the same shops.

Mr. Kirk blames the closed door policy of the regular labor unions for the Negro company union. He says he would welcome the right for his people to unite with the white workers in the recognized labor unions but says that the effort of the white unions to bar the Negro from employment in certain trades will never succeed. The Negro insists on his right to work and if he cannot work as a regular union man he will work anyhow.

Kirk has been asked by the Sante Fe system to go on an organizing tour thru all their shop centers where large numbers of Negroes are employed. These Negroes, for the most part, were brought in during the shopmen's strike of 1922. Their excuse was that the white men whose places they took had refused them the right to work.

It is a company union, that the Sante Fe supports in the belief that strikes will be prevented. As such it is obviously no instrument the workers can use to wrest better conditions from their employers.

Mr. Kirk says he will fight for the adoption of a program by the Sanhedrin that will work towards the elimination of the color line in the old unions.

He prefers regular labor unionism, controlled by the workers, to company unionism.

KLAN LEADER PLANS TO RAISE HELL IN HER

Young to Return fo More Bloodshed

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—"Hell's going to break loose" in bloody Williamson county "as soon as the troops leave," S. Glenn Young, deposed "prohibition czar" of the Illinois badlands, predicted in an interview here today.

"I'm going back there next week and as sure as there's a God in heaven, someone's going to pay for the murder of Caesar Cagle," Young declared with spirit.

The slaying of Cagle, constable of Herrin, and chief assistant to Young in his spectacular booze raids, precipitated conditions of near-riot in Williamson county a week ago which made it necessary for 1,800 state militiamen to take charge of the situation. Most of the troops are now withdrawn and the remainder are expected to be recalled shortly.

Strike Fear Brings Action.

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 17.—The action of General Milton Foreman in turning over Herrin to the American Legion and the Rotary Club, which means the big business elements, is attributed to the defeat of S. Glenn Young and the Klan by the militant element in the miners. Fear of the strike compelled the militia or those behind the militia to go thru the farce of slapping Young on the wrist and taking his guns away, as if he were just a wayward boy who conld not be trusted with firearms. But they had no intention of allowing the miners to feel that they could rule Herrin so the "neutrals" were called upon to act.

If there are people who think that the trouble here is over the illegal sale of booze, they are poorly informed. During the height of Young's lawless raidings and burnings, hundreds of bootleggers plied their trade openly. The foreign vendors of moonshine alone were interfered with.

It is quite obvious that the business interests are only too willing to make use of the elements that compose the Ku Klux Klan tho at times the Klan, due to its lack of intelligence, indulges in horse play which brings odium on it and on its backers.

What the capitalists are now doing is to divert the lawless energies of the Klansmen into channels in the control of well disciplined organizations that do not divert their energies into many directions but concentrate on the labor question instead of antagonizing the Catholics, Jews and wealthy foreigners.

K. K. K. Warns Young Worker.

Barney Mass, an organizer for the Young Workers League, was notified by the Klan to leave the town of West Frankfort or be severely punished. The letter that accompanied the threat contained the words "K. K. K. will not permit radical speakers in West Frankfort." But the Y. W. L. organizer does not intend to be intimidated by the K. K. K. He will carry on his organizing campaign.

The Workers Party and the Young Workers League have taken steps to wage a fight for the protection of the foreign-born and civil liberties. They are seeking the co-operation of all workers regardless of political views.

The general belief here is that should Young return to re-open his reign of rape, murder and terrorism, a civil war would result.

A hero is usually manufactured out of every affair of this kind. The hero of this outbreak is Dr. J. T. Black, superintendent of the Herrin hospital. He has called for a business government and is applauded by all the organs of Big Business in Herrin and thruout the state.

Berlin Throwing City Employes on the Street

(By The Federated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 17—Over 1500 municipal employes have been dismissed in Berlin alone as a result of the general policy of the governmental authorities in federal, state and city offices to economize by throwing workers upon the streets.

During the first two weeks of January 2500 city workers were dismissed. It is next to impossible for them to find work elsewhere. To make matters worse, Germany is hit by the severest winter in years.

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—System Federation 90, organization of the Pennsylvania railroad's 60,000 shopmen, has filed appeal from the decision of the United States district court in Philadelphia dismissing the workers' suit for $15,000,000 back pay.

TOO MANY MINERS SAY OPERATORS; LEWIS AGREES

Operators Disagree on Length of Contract

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 17.—John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and the coal operators now in session are in absolute agreement on the question of ridding the coal industry of 200,000 miners. Where these workers are to go was not indicated. Evidently it is not a serious problem for Lewis and his coal baron friends.

"The process of elimination has already commenced," declared a big coal operator. "One-half of the 700 bitumious shipping mines in the country must go with them 200,000 miners."

It never occurs to the miners leaders or to the operators that the men who dig the coal have any right to a voice in the disposition of coal mines. "There's not to reason why; there's but to work and die."

While John L. Lewis is talking about a four year contract it is not likely that the operators will submit to this. In election years the miners have the advantage of the delicacy of the political campaigns on their side. Administrations do not like to face the country and explain away a coal strike. Subtle pressure is therefore brought to bear on the operators to induce them to settle. The bosses are willing to sign up for one year, but the probability is that they may sign for two and that Lewis will agree. They do not want to negotiate again in 1928.

The big coal operators have accepted as settled an agreement without a reduction in wages, in the central competitive fields. The suggestion to return to the 1917 wage scale was not considered seriously.

The miners demanded the right to go into the different districts and make working and wage agreements tending to equalize the different conditions under which mines are operated. This the operators strenuously opposed.

Prejudice Dying Out.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 17.—"We dedicate this issue of the Journal to the cause of a labor press," declared the Locomotive Engineers Journal in an editorial in the February number. "We believe that it alone can safeguard democracy by insuring untrammeled and uncolored news. American labor must assume the responsibility of establishing a daily press."

Oscar Ameringer, editor, Oklahoma Leader and Illinois Miner, contributes an article, "How Labor Can Build a Daily Press." After detailing the almost insurmountable present obstacles he says, "If the international labor union would concentrate their work in say ten labor-owned plants, the legitimate earnings on this work would be sufficient to subsidize ten first class labor dailies. As it is, the labor press is starved to death by those it seeks to serve; and if the shortsighted policy is not changed the future of the American labor press is well nigh hopeless."

Norman Thomas, who was editor in chief of the short-lived New York Leader, recounts some problems of a labor editor. Half a dozen other labor journalists contribute to the issue.

Generals Holding Many Political Jobs in Germany

(By The Federated Press)

WEIMAR, Thuringia, Germany, Feb. 17.—Germany is raising a crop of generals that arrogate to themselves the right to manage everything from the formation of a political cabinet in a supposedly free state to the appointment of a theater manager.

In Thuringia, General von Hasse is dictator under the state of emergency law. Having successfully smashed the Proletarian Hundreds and after having brought about the arrest of the Socialist minister of the interior and established a united front of all nonworking class parties in the state, he looked about for new worlds to conquer. The realm of art attracted his imagination, and he proceeded forthwith to announce that the projected appointment of a certain Dr. Ulbrich of Meinengen as general manager of the State theater at Weimar must first have his indorsement.

This uncalled-for interference with a purely cultural question has created a wide stir thruout the nation. Even capitalist papers with more or less liberal tendencies are editorializing against it.

COMMUNIST-CHILDREN'S-COLUMN

THE ROSE-BUSH

By HERMINIA ZUR MUHLEN

(Synopsis: A beautiful rose bush, owned by a rich lady, who lived in a beautiful white house, was speaking to her comrade, the Wind. The Wind was telling the Rose-bush how he fights against the people who are rich and do not work.)

The Wind lifted one of his legs high and pushed it with all his weight against the magnificent white house. The windows clattered, many things in the house were broken; a woman's voice shrieked. The Wind laughed, then drew his leg back and said to the Rose-bush: "You also can do something, you flowers. Do not bloom for the rich idlers, and the fruit trees should not bear fruit. But you are pleasure-loving and lazy creatures. Look at the tulips that stand up so sturdily all day, always saying nothing but 'How lovely we are! How lovely we are!' They have no other interests."

The petals of the Rose-bush became a deeper red, so ashamed was she of her sister-flower.

The Wind noticed this and tried to comfort her. "You appear to be a sensible, kind-hearted bush. I shall visit you more often. Give me one of your petals as a parting gift." He took a deep red petal from a full-blown rose. "Be happy—now I must leave."

At that moment two poorly-dressed, pale children came along the street. They stopped before the gate and cried as tho with one voice, "Oh, the beautiful roses!" The little girl stretched her hands longingly toward the blossoms.

"Wind, beloved Wind," called the Rose-bush, as loud as she could. "Before you fly away, break off two of my loveliest roses and throw them to the children. But be careful that the petals do not drop off."

"Do you think I am so clumsy?" grumbled the insulted Wind, as he broke off two handsome roses, and blew them lightly, gently to the children.

The children shouted joyfully, the Wind flew away, and the Rose-bush enjoyed the happiness of the children. His enjoyment did not last long. An angry voice scolded the children, "What impudence is this, to steal the flowers out of my garden?"

The Rose-bush saw a silk-clad lady threatening the children with fingers that were covered with rings. Her smooth face was red with anger. The children were frightened and ran off crying.

The Rose-bush breathed deep with indignation, and her breath blew sweeter perfume towards the lady's face. She stepped closer. "Ah, the beautiful roses. I had better pick them, otherwise the rabble from the streets steal them. And they are such an expensive kind."

At this the Rose-bush became enraged, so that her blossoms blazed a fiery red. "If I were only as strong as the wind," thought she, "I would get hold of this evil woman and shake her so that she would become deaf and blind. Such a common creature has a whole garden full of the most gorgeous flowers and begrudges the children two paltry roses. But you shall not have even one of my blossoms, you bad woman, just wait."

And the woman bent down to pick the flowers, the Rose-bush hit her in the face with a twig, stretching out all her thorns like a cat stretches out its claws, and scratched up the woman's face.

She screamed aloud. The woman did not want to cease from her task, but the Rose-bush was as willful as she; wherever the hand of the woman reached, a large thorn sprang out and scratched her hand till it bled.

The Rose-bush was completely tired from the heated struggle. Her many green arms hung limply, her flowers were paler, she sighed softly. Yet she thought more deeply and arrived at a mighty resolution.

Late in the evening Wind came flying to bid the Rose-bush good-night, and the Rose-bush said to him solemnly, "Listen to me, Brother Wind, I will follow your advice, I will no longer bloom for the idlers."

The Wind caressed the leaves and flowers of the Rose-bush with gentle hands, saying earnestly, "Poor little Rose-bush, will you have the strength for that? You will have to suffer a great deal."

"Yes," replied the Rose-bush, "I know it. But I will have the strength. Only you must come every day and sing your song of freedom, so as always to renew my courage."

The Wind promised to do this.

BOSSES' LAWYER FRAMES WORKERS IN STATE OFFICE

Upholsterers' Trial Today in Boycott Case

Collusion between the Illinois Employers' Association and the State Attorney's office was exposed in the Chicago Federation meeting yesterday afternoon when Oscar Nelson reported on the state's prosecution against the five unionists charged with violation of the anti-boycott statute, for activities in the upholsters' strike.

The five workers go on trial this morning before Judge Wells. They are M. J. McKenna, business agent of upholsterers' local No. 110; Thomas O'Shay, business agent of local No. 111; J. Bahl and William J. Reardon, two other members of the upholsterers' union, and a member of Painters local No. 637, named Julich.

Usurps Prosecutor's Job.

Dudley Taylor, attorney for the Illinois Employers' Association, has been conducting the prosecution up to date. The only part States Attorney Robert E. Crowe and his assistants played up to date was in detailing their police to arrest the five unionists and bring them to the state attorney's office for cross examination. There they were cross examined by Dudley Taylor, not by the men elected and appointed by the people of the county.

All the evidence against the five unionists was obtained in cross examination by the employers' attorney, Oscar Nelson disclosed.

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor and Ed Nockles, secretary, went to Crowe's office to see about this vicious turning over of the government to the bosses and the facts were admitted by Assistant Attorney Gorman, who said "The courtesy of the office was extended to Dudley Taylor."

Labor men were never able to see Crowe himself.

Nelson reported:

"When He Is Sober."

"We had to talk to Gorman, who is assistant district attorney because Crowe is only in his office one or two days a month—when he is sober that often."

The Federation has received numerous complaints from workers summoned to the state's attorney's office and quizzed there by employers' representatives.

By vote of the Federation Secretary Nockles is instructed to write all unions warning men not to answer any questions if brought to the state's attorney's office on the ground that they might incriminate themselves.

Pictures of Crowe, the supposed state's attorney, and Dudley Taylor, the Illinois Employers' Association lawyer who is allowed to usurp his functions, are on the letter head of the warning and will be posted in local unions.

Wouldn't Work With Scabs.

Evidence against Julich, the painter, is solely that when he found he was working alongside non-union upholsterers he declared that either they must quit or he.

The charges against all the unionists in the case are summed up under these headings:

1. Attempting to induce men not to work;
2. Extorting money, thru dues and initiation fees;
3. Spreading and publishing stickers and other printed matter.

Forbidding such activities, declared the Federation, is forbidding legitimate trade union activity without which a union cannot be carried on. Support will be given the unionists' fight against convictions as felons.

Try to Split Farm Implement Trust Into Three Pieces

Action to split the $150,000,000 International Harvester Company of Chicago, into at least three independent parts was under way here today by the government.

Failure of the company to restore competition in the agricultural implement industry, as agreed upon five years ago in hearings in St. Paul, decided renewal of dissolution efforts.

Violation of the anti-trust law is charged by the government. The principal aim of the government is to separate the McCormick and Deering properties, Abram F. Myers, special assistant United States Attorney-General in charge of the prosecution, declared.

Strike in Linseed Mills When Bosses Demand More Work

(By The Federated Press)

SUPERIOR, Wis., Feb. 17.—The first strike for several years in a Superior shop or factory, excepting the railway shopmen's strike, is in progress here at the linseed crushing mill of Kellogg, Spencer & Co., a firm with branches in many cities. The cause of the walkout was the company's attempt to force each crew of three men to handle nine presses where they formerly handled eight. The strike was general, altho the men are not affiliated with any union.

None of those who quit have returned, but the company officials report that some presses are being operated by inexperienced men.

Work Daily for "The Daily!"

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

"Polikushka" Worthy of Moscow Art Theatre.

The Moscow Art Theatre is finishing its second year of sensational success upon the American stage. There is no reason why this motion picture, made by the same sterling artists from Tolstoy's immortal story, "Polikushka," should not meet with equal success.

Of course, the type of "critic" who predicted failure for the Russian artists because they offered neither bedroom farce nor leg show also hangs crepe on the reviews of this film. Thus one New York daily wrote, "Gripping Russian Film with a Kick for Highbrows, not for tired business man's evening nor the happy housewife's." And "Photoplay," one of the better grade of "fan" journals, calls it "A well made picture but morbid and sad. No chance of a pleasant evening of laughter here."

The assumption is that the American public is condemned forever to artistic diapers and that it can never hope to digest anything stronger than the "pap" of program pictures. The success of pictures like "Anna Christie" shows up this bunk and the same is true of "Polikushka" wherever it has been shown. In one of the five movie houses where it has been run the manager reported a thousand dollar jump in the week's receipts, directly attributable to the picture. Thus the "box office verdict" backs up the serious critics on Labor, Liberal, Daily, and Foreign Language Press in the praise of this Russian film.

The tragedy of Poli's life is the tragedy of the workers thruout the world, and working class audiences, as well as the art loving public generally will rally to the support of this film. When first shown in this country a leading commercial distributor asked for special showings to a selected audience of critics, but insisted it was much "too good for the mob." "The mob" are getting a chance at the picture which is being booked directly by the Russian Artfilms Company. Labor organizations in some cities are helping in getting the picture before the public. Bookings have already been made in Washington, Philadelphia, Boston and Cleveland. An attractive proposition is made to interested parties by the Russian Artfilm Co., 804 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

When Law and Profits clash, Law takes a back seat with the minimum amount of grace needed to save its face. There is a Federal Law prohibiting the interstate transportation of prize fight films. It was passed to prevent the showing of the famous Jeffries-Johnson fight films on the theory that the sight of a black boxer beating a white one might result in stimulating the negro's sense of race dignity and at the same time incite hundreds of murders by the white savages which inhabit some parts of these United States. The law is still on the books but fight pictures are being shown every day in almost every state. The process is simple, the first man showing the film is arrested and fined. He pays the fine out of the proceeds of the picture and then keeps right on rolling in the coin.

• • • •

In Germany a novel principle in taxation on movies has been introduced. To encourage attendance at the showing of a certain film the government has made a great reduction in the amusement tax. The kind government "encourages" pictures that are "good for the people."

• • • •

The size of the movie business can be glimpsed when we read of a recent day's receipts on one single Los Angeles "nickel show"—$5,241. A Frisco house made a record of $4,513 the same day.

• • • •

Good thing this is not charged to Russia. The Second Presbyterian Church of Auburn, N. Y., has been bought by theatrical interests for $35,000. They will spend $200,000 into turning it into a vaudeville and picture house.

The theatrical union, "Actors' Equity Association," has started negotiations with the producers toward the end of establishing a closed shop and the 48-hour week in the film industry. Frank Gilmore, of the Equity, said that 2,000 out of the 3,000 principals playing important parts have been lined up in the union, and that these players were seeking some sort of standardized conditions. At present only a handful of stars were properly treated due to their position, while the lesser known principals were helpless before the producers.

Coolidge's Friend Will Go to Mexico if Senate Agrees

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Calvin Coolidge has appointed Charles Beecher Warren to the post of Ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Beecher who was a personal friend of the late Mr. Harding and is considered one of the burdens that Coolidge assumed when he took over the White House.

The new appointee served as Ambassador to Japan during the first two years of the Harding administration and was one of the two successful diplomats who made a treaty with Mexico that satisfied Wall Street, and resulted in the recognition of the Obregon government.

DRESSMAKERS' STRIKE MAY BE CALLED TONIGHT

Bosses Given Last Day For Agreement

A strike of the 10,000 workers in the dressmaking industry in Chicago has not been called yet by the strike committee of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

One more day has been given the 200 employers to settle with the union. If no settlement is reached by tonight the strike committee will immediately fix the date for the walkout, the DAILY WORKER is informed.

That the strike will assume more of an industrial character than was first expected was indicated by the pledge of the cloakmakers' union here to go on sympathetic strike and act as pickets for the dressmakers. The international union will back the strike.

Leading the strike demands are the five-day week with recognition of the union and a variable raise in wages. Employers who have signed union agreements until now, demand the five and a half day week and reject the union's wage demand. Non-union employers continue to stand for the open shop.

This is the strategic time for a strike, in the opinion of veterans of the industry. It is the busy season of the year when the bosses need the workers most.

Expelled members of the union will support the strike to the limit in spite of the unfair treatment they have received from the Perlstein machine.

WORKERS BATTLE IN GERMAN CITIES; SEPARATISTS FLEE

COLOGNE, Feb. 17.—The specter of civil war raises its head in Germany as separatists secretly aided by the French engage German loyalists in bloody battles thruout the Bavarian Palatinate.

In a brush between security police and workers one of the former was killed and eight wounded. Workers to the number of 5,000 from Solingen and Bruhl attacked a detachment of safety police from the British zone in Cologne.

The British high commissioner is reported to have requested the French to prohibit a communist congress planned for this month.

Workers in Hamburg attempted to demonstrate but were prevented from doing so by troops.

Six separatists, including the leader Jager were killed today at Badduerkhelm.

Meanwhile, separatists are slipping quietly away from Palatinate towns, fearing to meet the fate suffered by Swab, separatist commissar, and his followers at Pirmasens, where many were hacked and burned to death by furious townsfolk.

Former German officers, nationalist partisans, are reported to have arrived in the Rhineland from Heidelberg, for the purpose of leading a campaign against the separatists. The German police are said to be not interfering.

Wonder Why Foster or Vind Do Not Head Organization Drive

Taking consolation from the Christian version of history, which enables a meek and lowly carpenter from Nazareth to go forth and conquering a spiritual world with twelve apostles, William Schoenberg, of the International Association of Machinists, informed an audience of 35 steel workers, most of them already organized, at a meeting held yesterday in South Chicago, that labor would win in the end even tho it may have to get its brains knocked out in the meantime.

The object of the meeting was to organize the steel workers. A representative of the Boilermakers felt quite optimistic.

"Labor will be in existence one thousand years from now," he declared. The few workers in the cold hall thought it was a rather long wait and wondered why a live organizer like William Z. Foster or Theodore Vind were not handling the steel organizing campaign instead of those fossils.

Mellon Tax Bill Scheduled for Rough Handling in Senate

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17—The real fight over the Mellon tax bill opens in the House today with a rough and tumble debate. It's outcome is still uncertain.

There is agreement, however, among all party and faction leaders that the Mellon bill as reported from the ways and means committee, with 25 per cent maximum surtax rates, cannot pass.

Republicans and democrats are split into three groups on maximum surtax rates—the key to the tax reduction situation.

While the democrats were bound by caucus action last night to vote for the 44 per cent rate in the Garner plan, democrats who pledged themselves to their constituents to vote for other rates will be free to do so. Seven democrats are pledged to vote for 50 per cent, the figure favored by the progressives.

Mexican Labor May Be Envoy to St. James Court

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 17.—"Congratulations achieving premiership. Note recognition Russia. England only country has not recognized revolutionary Obregon government." Such is the text of a cable sent by J. W. Brown, of the British Labor Party, Secretary of the Amsterdam International and representative of that organization in Mexico, to Ramsay MacDonald on the entrance into power of the British Labor cabinet. Brown has received an offer of a cabinet post by cable from England, but replied that he could not decide until his arrival. He left for England on Tuesday, Feb. 5.

Morones Greets MacDonald.

The Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana has requested Brown to propose that a prominent member of the British Labor Party be sent here as ambassador upon recognition of Mexico by Great Britain. They urge this on the ground that the Mexican government is the nearest thing to a labor government on the American continent.

Luis N. Morones, according to well-founded rumors, may go to England as ambassador from Mexico. Morones is the leader of the Mexican Federation of Labor. When Ramsay MacDonald entered into power, he sent, on behalf of his organization, the following telegram of congratulations: "Mexican labor sends warmest greetings to first English labor government. We are assured that your government will bring justice to England and break continental reaction."

Martial Glory O. K. Until Hero Was Called to Herrin

Illinois national guardsmen who joined the organization just to have a good time and a place to hang out are discovering that martial law means business when labor struggles and other controversies are in question.

Henry Gatz, a guardsman who had protected strikebreakers at Joliet, Ill., was called out again last week to go with his regiment to Herrin, where the state wanted men in uniform to function with guns. He did not answer the call immediately.

A flying squad of police dashed down to his home at 6:30 Monday morning and got him out of bed under arrest. The newspapers were told about it and branded him as a deserter. His family has been bombarded by reporters. His telephone has been ringing constantly. The home reflects in its atmosphere the feeling of being under fire.

"Henry is not a deserter," says his brother. "Under military law he is carried as absent without leave for the first ten days. Some bunch of wise nuts in the national guard, I say. I wouldn't belong to the outfit." He thinks there are better hangouts than the West Madison street armory.

Argentina Navy Gets 31,500,000 Pesos for Expansion

(By The Federated Press)

BUENOS AIRES, Feb. 17.—Argentina has appropriated 9,500,000 pesos in gold for the modernizing of its fleet, followed immediately by 22,000,000 for the enlargement of the same. The workers' organizations of the country are forming anti-armament commitees to combat these expenditures.

Back of this big increase in armament may be seen the hand of the American armament companies and of the American state department. The next most powerful country to Argentina in Latin America is Brazil and there a commission of American naval experts is supervising Brazilian war preparedness, which means hefty sales there.

Argentina, to protect itself buys twice as much. Both countries borrow money from American bankers on condition that they spend it that way and give American financial experts the right to supervise their internal finances. At the same time, all this carefully promoted competition and suspicion prevents a Latin American unity for protection against the real enemy of every Latin American country, which is Yankee imperialism.

Carter Sulks: Tut Waits.

LUXOR, Feb. 17.—Guards paced the Valley of Kings today, guarding the silent tomb of Pharaoh Tut-Ankh-Amen. Howard Carter, co-discoverer with Lord Carnarvon of the ancient monarch's resting place, sulked in his house and refused to comment on his action in suddenly ceasing the work of excavation at a moment when the actual mummy case itself was disclosed.

UNION TEAMSTERS GET PAY RAISE; STRIKE IS OVER

Men Stood Solid; the Bosses Had to Settle

After a two day strike which tied up every construction job in Chicago, the contracting teamsters were obliged to settle with the members of the Excavating, Grading and Asphalt Teamsters' and Chaffeurs' Union granting them a wage increase of 50 cents a day.

The men originally demanded $1.00 and the eight-hour day. The new wage scale gives the teamsters $6 a day and the chaffeurs, $7. The eight hour day demand is held in abeyance.

The threat of the committee to enforce the Landis Award to organize a fleet of scab trucks was not calculated to inspire a feeling of security in the ranks of the contracting teamsters. They feared violence should the open shoppers attempt to break the strike by the use of scabs. The hurried settlement demonstrated the power of the workers to make the masters come to terms when real solidarity is displayed.

LEN SMALL MAY LET UNION RUN INDUSTRY BOARD

Favoritism to Employers Is Charged

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 17—The governor of Illinois in the midst of a campaign for re-election with the opposition of the big interests in the republican machine lined up solidly against him has turned to the workers for consolation in his hour of stress.

The Illinois Industrial commission under his administration has a very bad record among the workers who had occasion to test its impartiality. Complaints hitherto fell on deaf ears but now as the election approaches the governor has evidently decided to make a last mad dash for the labor vote which is rapidly vanishing.

As a result of the advice of politicians closer to labor than the governor the Industrial commission board is to be shaken up or down and "friends of labor" substituted for those now on. It is stated that Frank Farrington, head of the Illinois miners, and A. W. Kerr, miners' attorney, had a conference with Small and William Hale Thompson of Chicago and on the latter's advice the changes in personnel on the industrial board were made.

Charges were made that during the Small administration awards to injured workers were reduced 25 per cent, that settlements were not expedited by the board, that employers were favored resulting in a loss to injured workers of over $1,000,000.

BRITISH LABOR PARTY WINS IN FIRST DIVISION

Baldwin Attacks Recognition of Russia

LONDON, Feb. 17.—In its first division in the House of Commons the British Labor Party won by a vote of 290 to 103. There were only less than half the members present. The liberals supported MacDonald.

Stanley Baldwin, the apostle of tranquility and business administration, attacked the Labor Party's policy on Soviet Russia. He expressed the view that unless the British government succeeded in collecting on the debts the Czar owed to England, every other country in Europe that owed England money would consider themselves under no further obligations to pay.

Former Prime Minister Asquith attacked the Labor Party for giving the Poplar Board of Guardians a free hand in the distribution of doles. This borough is dominated by radicals and under the Tory regime several guardians went to jail in a clash with the government over the distribution of doles to the unemployed.

Mr. Baldwin wished his successor well but expressed pessimism in the Labor Party's ability to achieve success.

Man, if they cut them it might even prevent his return!

Mayor Is Encouraging Mob Violence

WILKES BARRE, Pa., Feb. 17.—"We will make every effort to hold our meetings in Wilkes Barre in spite of the efforts of the mayor and the American Legion to stop us," said Herbert Benjamin, organizer of the Workers Party in Wilkes Barre.

The Workers Party was prevented from holding one Lenin memorial meeting here recently by Mayor Hart and the American Legion, but another was successfully held despite the opposition of the mayor and the Legion. Plans to hold other meetings in the near future are being made by the Workers Party.

Cappellini Anxious.

Rinaldo Cappellini, president of District No. 1 of the United Mine Workers of America, is very much interested in the outcome of this fight. A victory for the Workers Party would seriously interfere with his efforts to perfect organization of the Lewis machine in this district. Cappellini is more responsible for the election of Dan Hart as mayor of Wilkes Barre than any other single individual.

Legionaires Active.

The American Legion is initiating a rule of mob violence and terror in this city in the hope of intimidating the workers into accepting without protest the deprivation of their fundamental right to meet and speak as they will. We will not be intimidated. On the contrary we have just begun to fight. It is the duty of the mayor to enforce order and to protect us in the exercise of our constitutional right, instead, he is encouraging mob rule and inciting to riot. The mayor has no power to issue or withhold permits for public meetings and we will set no precedent that will constitute the recognition of such a right. Not a permit but the police protection to which we are entitled, is our demand.

Party Making Progress.

Our party members have been making a fine showing during the entire period of the fight, they have not allowed the Legion to intimidate them in spite of the many threats and hints of violence which the press has been publishing almost daily since the fight began, and which are still appearing. The unusual expenses to which we have been subject are being met by voluntary contributions of the comrades in the entire sub-district.

Branches and individual members in the anthracite region as well as in other sections of the country can assist in waging this fight by sending contributions to the treasurer of the committee, J. Miller, 310 Barney St., Wilkes Barre.

Detectives from the Philadelphia office of the department of justice are here and are busy giving out interviews to the local papers in which they say the whole hard coal region is honey-combed with red organizers.

Challenge From Reading

READING, Pa., Feb. 17.—"If the action of the mayor of Wilkes-Barre in stopping the Lenin memorial meeting at the behest of the American Legion is to go unchallenged the labor movement of Pennsylvania might as well go out of existence," says the Reading Labor Advocate, official organ of the Socialist Party of Pennsylvania and the Federated Trades council of Berks County. It says:

"If the American Legion and similar organizations are to be given the right to determine when working people can hold a meeting, it is certain that no Union meetings will be permitted in times of industrial strife. It is time for all those, who value the precious rights for which our forefathers sacrificed so much to make a final stand against this sort of official tyranny, which has gone unchallenged far too long.

"Such officials should be held liable in damages for all losses resulting from their refusal to obey the laws of the State. By united action we can soon build up a public opinion, that will compel the restoration of our rights. Let us do it now before it is too late."

MINN. FARMERS DECLARE FOR MORATORIUM

Newton Township Meet Discusses Problems

In a statement issued over the signatures of Sam G. Wallace and K. E. Heikkinen, chairman and secretary of the meeting respectively, the assembled farmers went on record as opposed to the futile attempts of the Coolidge administration to tinker with the problems confronting the farmers by turning their salvation over to committees of Wall Street bankers. As well turn a hold-up victim over to the bandit who robbed him.

During the war, the statement says, the working farmers of this country sacrificed their sons for patriotism, as they were told. They purchased liberty bonds to free the world from German militarism but only succeeded in fastening the bonds of the mortgage sharks on their own limbs.

But since the termination of the war an increasing burden of debt, taxes and freight rates has mounted while the prices of farm products have been reduced to the pre-war level. The result is that bankruptcy stares millions of farmers in the face.

The only measure which would tend to give actual immediate relief to farming would be a moratorium for at least five years to come on all debentures of farmers, considerable reduction of taxes on farm properties, considerable reduction of freight rates on farm products, and stabilized prices for farm products, as well as the industrial magnates have received in various lines of their products backed by the national government or, if a moratorium will not be granted, we find ourselves to be entitled to substantial loans direct from national resources enjoying the same privileges of one-half of one per cent, and two per cent rate of interest, as the non-producing bankers' systems are enjoying, providing these loans will be used to pay off the present loans drawing interest from eight to 15 per cent.

ST. PAUL LABOR NAMES TICKET IN CITY ELECTION

F. F.-L. P. Secretary Addresses Convention

ST. PAUL, Feb. 17.—In a convention held at St. Paul attended by 400 representatives of trade unions and other working class organizations, it was unanimously decided to enter the city campaign. George L. Siegel, an attorney with a 100 per cent labor legislative record and a man who defended the persecuted Socialists during the war, was nominated for mayor.

J. F. Clancy of the plasterers' union, H. C. Wendell of the barbers', C. J. McGlogen of the electrical workers and J. E. Corcoran of the typographical union were nominated as candidates for councilmen. W. F. Scott, a former soldier and a member of the city and county employees' union, was nominated for city comptroller. A platform was drawn up declaring for public ownership of all public utilities.

For United Front.

Paul Blanschard, secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy, addressed the convention and told of the rise of the British Labor Party. "There is one logical basis for the Labor Party in this country," he declared, "and that is class consciousness." There is room in the labor political movement for every faction which is aware of the fact that there is a struggle of producers for a better society."

Theoretical differences should not separate us as long as we can agree on the next step. There is no reason why we should not have as successful a Labor Party as England has. Mr. Blanschard stated the cause of the unity of state socialists and Communists as well as trade unions in support of the British Labor Party. He advocated a party in this country constructed on a federation basis with unions and political locals affiliated in a body.

For Farmer-Labor Alliance.

Joseph Manley, secretary of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, told of the developments of the farmer-labor movement in this country and the necessity for all of the workers and farmers getting together for the coming national election. He explained the development at the convention of the non-partisan league and Farmer-Labor Party in North Dakota. At the conclusion of his address, he was given an ovation by the audience.

High School Girl Wins First Place with Lenin Talk

The other day there was held a public speaking meeting in the Northwestern High School, Detroit, Michigan. The students were assigned to select their favorite great men and deliver eulogies of them.

Among the men chosen by the members of the class were Woodrow Wilson, Benjamin Franklin, etc. Ruth Reynolds, 17 years old, a member of the senior class at the high school and an active member of the Young Workers League selected Lenin as her favorite great man.

Comrade Reynold's eulogy was the only one to receive applause. Her speech was rated 95 by the teacher. Comrade Reynolds is also a member of the undefeated Champion Debating Team of the Detroit high schools.

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—The New York state senate and assembly committees on labor and industry will meet on Feb. 19 to discuss the passage of bills, demanding a 48-hour working week and the establishment of minimum wage boards for employed women and minors.

Labor Official Is Tariff Booster; What Awful Stuff!

(By The Federated Press)

TORONTO, Feb. 17.—The campaign to raise the Canadian tariff has been joined by Gideon B. Robertson, Canadian vice-president, Order of Railroad Telegraphers. Robertson is a member of the Canadian senate and was minister of labor in the Conservative cabinet, which went out of office in 1921. The Conservative leader, Arthur Meighan, has been advocating an increase in the tariff, and Robertson's attitude is in line with his policy.

The Labor senator made his declaration on the subject in a speech here, advocating a higher tariff and a reduction in the sales tax as a means of attracting population to Canada. He predicted an increase of five million in the population of Canada within 15 years by these means.

MONTREAL, Feb. 17.—Canadian maintenance of way men will not strike until the joint board of adjustment which opens its seasonal sessions here soon has had its say on the wage dispute.

Competition Grows In Sub Contest

VERY often the method followed in contests for subscriptions, such as Local Chicago is carrying on for the DAILY WORKER, is to hold back until the campaign nears the end. This cannot be said, however, for the present "One Thousand New Subscribers by March 10th" campaign, judging by activities of the First South Slavic Branch and others. "There is no time like the present" seems to be their motto.

The South Slavic Branch did not even wait for the contest to begin, but had a house-to-house canvas on Feb. 3rd. Even tho the subscriptions secured did not count in the present contest, they are content to know that they have started the ball rolling and something has been accomplished. And another house-to-house canvas has been arranged for Sunday, Feb. 17th, in which all its members will participate.

"Rest assured that we of the South Slavic Branch will do all we can to make this drive for OUR DAILY a success" is the message of its branch agent, and if their good work in the campaign for shares is any criterion, this Branch has a splendid chance to win the prize for the leading Language Branch.

The Karl Marx Scandinavian Branch, the first to make good in its pledge in the campaign for DAILY WORKER shares, has sent in its first batch of subs. It is predicted by other Language Branches that the Karl Marx Branch will have to hustle to carry off the honors this time.

"We are not merely interested in the prize as a prize, altho we want the picture of Lenin in appreciation of his services to the movement and as a constant reminder of our pledge to carry on the work. But we feel that in boosting the DAILY, we are helping to do the very thing we have set out to do—to continue Lenin's work to the best of our ability." The branch of which the comrade who made this statement is a member must be reckoned with in the contest.

Nothing less than first prize, and no compromise in that, is what the Nicolai Lenin Branch of the Young Workers League has to say.

Nip-and-tuck is the best description of the race going on between A. Nickolchuk, of the North-West Russian, and C. Kratchovil, of the Czecho-Slovak Branch No. 1, who are tied for third place for individuals. Third place is not their goal, however. Inquiries are coming in constantly on the standing of John Heinrichson, the leading individual contestant. "Only a few today," are the words of the latter when handing in his subscriptions yesterday, "but more tomorrow. And I expect that the Englewood (English) Branch will continue in the lead."

Nearly all Branches have now appointed committees of three or five, who with the Branch Subscription Agent constitute the Branch DAILY WORKER Committee. The committees are busy carrying out the plans for covering their territory. Branch members are pledging Saturday afternoons and Sundays or at least two evenings a week to the Subscription Campaign, with every member an "active" DAILY WORKER agent. Sample copies can be gotten free for the asking at the DAILY WORKER office to help the agents in getting subs.

Just as we are going to press with the Editor calling on us to hurry up with this story, Comrade Heinrichson walks in with more subs, making his total 76 points. "Once inside the door, the subscription is mine," is his method, and there is no doubt that it "works."

SCANDINAVIAN SECTIONS OF C. I. FORM FEDERATION

Big Unemployment Is Found in Norway

By DR. K. M. LANDBERG

The Scandinavian sections of the C. I. have, at the request of the E. C., formed a federation with headquarters in Christiania. The secretariat consists of Scheflo and Stostad for Norway, Fr. Strom for Sweden and Ernst Christiansen for Denmark. Arvid Hansen, secretary.

The two factions of the party in Norway, the Norwegian Workers Party, which was expelled by the C. I. and the Norwegian Communist Party, the seceding faction of the former are both working hard to gather up the pieces of the old party and to gain new members, but in spite of the split, they are able to arrange Lenin memorial meetings together with speakers from both factions.

A Year of Struggle.

The president of the Norwegian F. of L. Ole O. Lian, gives a resume of the years work. The compulsory arbitration law expired in March, 1923, and was not renewed. The year has been one of constant fight, the employers starting with a general attack to force down wages and reduce conditions. It was met by a strong and stubborn defense all along the line and the final result has been that wages have been kept up and in some cases even increased; the membership has also been kept up and increased. At the end of 1922, there were 83,640 members in 32 national unions with 1449 locals. Nov. 30, 1923, there were 88,697 members. This however, is still far below the high figure of 143,926 in 1919.

Unemployment.

There is 18,750 unemployed, which is an improvement over 1922, when the number was 26,000.

10,000 are employed in "work for the needy," mostly by the state. The federation has definitely left the Amsterdam International and the question of joining another is coming up for a referendum of the membership.

Industrial Organization.

The change from craft to industrial organization is rapidly being carried out. Four large industrial organizations have already been perfected, the building trades, the chemical industries, the food workers and the communal workers, with a membership of 21,000. The paper industry, the textile industry and the hide, leather and shoe industry is nearing organization. At the same time local joint organizations of labor are being formed by districts, 20 such have been arranged and a few only remain to be formed.

Strikes.

Several strikes, some legal and some illegal, are taking place. That of the Ironworkers', has now been running 17 weeks. They made an agreement with their employers last spring for a certain scale, but with the reservation, that this might be reduced in case the expense index on Oct. 30, should go below 232. It went down to 230 and the employers immediately declared a cut; but expenses instead of having decreased actually having risen the workers, refused to accept the cut and struck. The courts are after them and two editors of workers papers have been indicted for "praising an illegal strike." But the workers, organized and unorganized, stand firm and united on their demands.

The strike of the rubber workers is also declared illegal; judgement has just fallen against them, ordering them to announce the illegality of their strike in Arbeiderbladet and Norges Kommunistblad.

The State employes have held a mass meeting and demand increase in wages. The purchasing value of their wages declining daily. But the most serious strike is the one of the transport workers, paralyzing the shipping, the most important industry of Norway. Ships cannot be loaded or unloaded. Teamsters and chaffeurs are refusing to haul goods to and from them. A few strikebreakers are working, but the International Transport Workers Union has been appealed to, members in other harbors are notified that it might be difficult to get scab cargoes unloaded at point of destination.

Other industries are suffering from the strike and may have to stop their activities. The government has forbidden the export of coal and coke, these articles having become scarce.

Norway's Financial Condition.

The low exchange value of the Norwegian kroner, 13.45 (regular valuation 27.00) is partly due to these strikes but mainly to the financial condition of the country, its indebtedness having increased 101½ million last year, reading the enormous sum of 1,503,160,000 kr. To balance the budget, the government proposes to make customers payable in gold and to remove the prohibition, estimating hereby a gain of 35 to 20 mil. respectively. The increase in custom duties naturally would increase the cost of living and the proposal has caused a general protest.

Frees Labor Editor.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 17.—Jacob Cohen, editor, Memphis Labor Review, was not guilty of contempt of court during the railroad shopmen's strike of 1922, the United States circuit court of appeals sitting in Cincinnati declares. The sentence of six months and $1,000 imposed by Ross, the Tennessee federal injunction judge, is reversed 18 months after the event.

Youth Views

By HARRY GANNES

Those Who Govern—Old and Young.

Men with one foot in the grave make the best legislators for capitalism. A picture of the United States Senate is like a group in an old man's home. The majority of presidents were so old they were becoming young. Even in the state legislatures, old men predominate. It is rare to find an elected official under 30; and all the important governmental jobs are given to greyheaded, tried and proven reactionaries. Capitalism requires years of servitude on its behalf before it can trust an individual as a law-maker. Old men do not seem to have so much sentiment about graft; youth is too idealistic, therefore too foolish to trust with the machinery of state. The average law-maker in the United States receives a long training in a law office; then he becomes a junior corporation attorney, and from that position he can hope to rise to the heights of some minor political job. The "babies" of congress compare to infants in that they are toothless and hairless.

But turn to a working-class movement—Russia—and see who are the leaders of the people. The recent Ekaterinislov election elected over 700 representatives to the district soviet and the majority of those chosen were under 40; 39 belonged to the Young Communist League of Russia, which means that these were under 18; and over 200 were under 25. These young fellows have had no training in the intricacies of diplomacy and precedent. They are nearly all workers, active in the Communist movement in the interest of the vast Russian masses. Their energies, their youth and enthusiasm, their abilities are all dedicated to the interests of the working class. Russia, with its workers' government, is the only nation in the world that trusts the future in the hands of those to whom it belongs—the youth—and they cannot fail.

Armed Workers Helped to Crush De La Huerta Revolt

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Brigades of armed workers have had a leading part in breaking the backbone of the fascist revolt in Mexico, says Canuto Vargas, secretary Pan-American Federation of Labor. The organized labor movement thruout the republic has enrolled its forces under Obregon, and in many places these contingents took part in the actual fighting.

"Celestino Gasca, member of the Shoemakers' union and former governor of the Federal district, collaborated with his Liberty Brigade in taking Pachuca, the capital of Hidalgo," Vargas told The Federated Press. "The Liberty Brigade is composed exclusively of organized workers, 1000 strong.

"In the state Puebla, Generals Jose Maria Sanchez and Heriberto Jara are commanding the C. R. O. M. brigade, composed of agricultural organized workers. The C. R. O. M. stands for Confederation Regional Obrera Mexicana, the Mexican Federation of Labor. Samuel Yudico, Fernando Rodarte, Juan Lozano and Ricardo Trevino, some of the most prominent leaders in the Mexican Federation of Labor, are all commanding battalions of trade unionists in San Luis Potosi and Coahuila, under the direct leadership of Gen. Plutarcho Elias Calles. The city of Aguas Calientes is garrisoned by 2000 well armed agricultural organized workers, and so on all down the line.

"There was never a time in Mexico when a government was so sympathetic with the masses of the people, with their problems and aspirations. This statement was made over two years ago by Luis Morones, head of the Mexican labor movement, and it holds good today. That is why Mexican labor is with Obregon. The Obregon administration has honestly and earnestly endeavored to translate into terms of reality the labor provisions of the Mexican constitution, which is the most progressive and liberal constitution in the western hemisphere.

"The precedent of the past 13 years that no Mexican government was safe against revolt has been broken. It was broken because in Mexico today there is an organization—the labor organization—that will defend the interests of the masses against any and all who dare attack them.

"De la Huerta may as well dive into the Atlantic."

Book Describing Filthy Military Jail Brings About Arrest

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—Frederick Mott, author of a pamphlet denouncing conditions on Alcatraz island, the United States military prison in San Francisco bay, has been arrested by department of justice agents and is held here in $500 bail for "interfering with recruiting." If he is acquitted, he will be turned over to state officials for prosecution on a criminal syndicalism charge. Alcatraz was one of the prisons for war objectors and many cruelties, including confinement in an iron cage too small for movement, were perpetrated on them. A damp underground cell dating from Spanish times and infested with rodents was long used for solitary confinement.

CHILE CABINET CABLES SORROW ON LENIN'S DEATH

Forced to Do So by Radicals

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

CHILE, Feb. 17.—By the uniting of Communist and Socialist deputies in the Chilean congress, the government was forced much against its will to send messages of condolence to Russia on the death of Lenin. This action was not forced upon the reluctant government until after the death of Wilson, when the cabinet, of its own accord, sent a cable expressing its sorrow to the United States. The socialists and even some radicals then joined the Communists in insisting that the death of Lenin be equally honored under threat of blocking all legislation until this was done. The government then yielded.

HONDURAS, Feb. 17.—On February 1, the legal presidential term of Gen. Lopez Gutierrez came to an end. On Feb. 5 a revolt broke out under candidate Cariaz who declared himself constitutional president and the continuance of Lopez Gutierrez in office after the end of his term as a violation of the constitution. On Feb. 6, the government of the United States recognized General Gutierrez as president of the government de facto of Honduras in spite of the fact that his term has expired and in spite of the previous declarations of Hughes that he would not permit a dictatorship to be set up in the country. Evidently, an agreement was arrived at in the recent conferences between Lopez and the commander of the U. S. battleship Rochester. The self-acclaimed dictator has given a shadow of legality to his actions by forming a new cabinent (in lieu of a new government) and by convoking a constituent assembly. The revolt cannot last long as the marines of the battleship Rochester will no doubt turn the trick in short order of making the recognized de facto government the only one.

CUBA, Feb. 17.—A series of persistent frameups that will make Bill Burns look to his laurels or teach him respect for the old adage, "If at first you don't succeed try, try again," have at last landed the three Cuban labor leaders, Angel Arias, Luiz Quiroz and Eduardo Rivera, behind the bars on the charge of poisoning beer in a factory in which they were not working.

Arias is easily the most framed-up man in the world, I guess, but a vigorous defense committee is so stirring up the workers of Cuba, that he will probably soon be at liberty again. About four years ago in utter defiance of the Cuban constitution which contains a clause forbidding the deportation or exile of citizens, he was suddenly deported on a ship bound for Fernando Poo, a lonely, sea locked island that Spain uses as a penal colony, somewhere off the Gold Coast of Africa. Spain was nothing loath to aid the Cuban government until Arias made himself so useful to the island's natives that he was deported back to Cuba on a Spanish ship after three years on the African island.

No sooner did Arias arrive in Cuba than he took part in the strike of the paper company there and the boycott of the Polar brewing company. The two companies joined hands and suddenly, bombs were exploded right in front of the speeding autos of the administrators of both companies and on the same day. No one was hurt. Arias, Quiroz, and Rivera were accused of planting the bombs. They had been so active in the strike meetings, that their alibi was complete and absolute with masses of witnesses. They were released.

The assistant chief of police then arranged a little private blowout exploding a bomb in his own home, again without killing a fly. This time the house of Arias was watched, it was believed that he was asleep in it and thus without witnesses to prove an alibi. But alas! It was the squad of watchers outside that were asleep and he went out to address a strike meeting while they were watching, not even knowing that he was thus honored. When they came to testify that they had been watching his house and had seen him enter at such and such time, he brought the entire strike meeting including several reluctant dicks who had acted as stool pigions there, to testify that he had been addressing the meeting at the hour stated.

Then poison was put into Polar beer and several drinkers poisoned. The district attorney, in place of prosecuting the Polar company, went into conference with its manager and then arrested Arias, Quiroz and Rivera. At the preliminary hearing, the judge admitted that no evidence had been introduced to connect them with the beer or the poison, but rejected a motion to dismiss the case. They are now in jail and a defense committee is active putting this astonishing array of facts before the Cuban workers. They are having such success that Arias and his two companions will soon be flying around again until the next trap is set.

McAdoo's Last Stand

Mr. McAdoo, the discredited democratic white hope, recently issued an appeal for a conference of all democrats, "progressives," farmers, workers, and what not, who had been inspired at some time or other by his chances for the presidency and their chances for patronage as a result of his success.

We are asked to believe that this conference, to be held in Chicago today, is called for the purpose of enabling public opinion itself to decide whether Mr. McAdoo is to continue his drive for the White House. In the words of this Latter Day Saint of Wilsonian imperialism garbed in the cloak of hypocritical liberal cant, this conference is made imperative "by the appalling conditions prevailing in Washington today—corruption, graft, incompetence—have created a situation more dangerous to government than Bolshevism itself."

Even the most amateurish observer of the Teapot tragedy can detect the hollow sound in these ringing appeals to save the country emanating from the oily corporation lawyer of California and lower Broadway. We can see how Mr. McAdoo can become desperate, but we must confess that we are somwhat astounded at his developing a degree of desperation leading him to the unfounded belief that he can pull the wool over anybody's eyes today by the fraud of a hand-picked conference and an eleventh-hour appeal to "the index of public opinion" which he never consulted when his quarter of a million dollar fee was at stake.

If Mr. McAdoo and the big financial interests backing him had the slightest doubt as to their being able to organize and manipulate this conference in such a fashion as to secure his being implored and urged in the name of the most sacred duties to and crying needs of the country, to continue in the race and be the standard bearer of "progressivism," such a conference would never have been called. Mr. McAdoo would then discreetly, with perhaps less valor, have slowly and without much ado have withdrawn from the race and would have done some "watchful waiting" for a better day. If Mr. McAdoo had felt that there was any possibility of this conference telling him cold-bloodedly to quit, he would never take chances on dramatizing the disaster that has befallen him thru his contact with the oil prince, Doheny.

The McAdoo discovery of a greater menace than Bolshevism is especially significant. It shows that McAdoo is appealing to all elements of the capitalist class to rally to him as the least damaged in the calamity that threatens to overwhelm them.

Mr. McAdoo's latest maneuver is bound to fail. The working and farming masses have his number. This number is exactly the price Mr. Doheny paid him in dollars and cents for services rendered.

Two Remedies

Fifteen thousand tons of French and Belgian steel products have been sold recently on the Atlantic seaboard for from $8 to $10 under the prices of similar American products.

The Virginian Railway, managed by superpatriots, as the Locomotive Engineers Union can testify, has bought 4,000 tons of French steel for its electrification project.

All of which shows that tariffs and restriction of immigration cannot and does not stop American labor competing with lower paid labor in other nations. No matter where a commodity that is needed in capitalist economy is produced, if it can undersell like commodities, it will find its way into the world markets and displace higher costing products.

American labor has viewed complaisantly the titanic struggle of the German, French and German workers to maintain their living standards. Its officialdom is today in full accord with the rape of the Ruhr and the impoverishment of the German workers.

No nation in the world can compete with the steel and iron mills of the Ruhr while the wages of the workers are at the present low level and it is on the steel industry that modern capitalism is based.

As soon as there is a comfortable surplus of labor the employers of America will forget their love for the highly paid American worker and endeavor to shove his living standard down near the level of the European workers; it will not go quite so low because the American worker is more efficient—he earns more for the boss in proportion to the wages paid—but a smash at living standards will be made.

The British employers, with 2,000,000 unemployed besieging the factory doors, have lowered the already low living standard of the British workers because British iron and steel have been driven off the markets by German competition. In no other way can even a substantial portion of the German reparations be paid. Our government and our labor leaders want them paid.

If the reparations are collected it will be not from the German workers alone.

Every working class in the world will pay—and is paying now—in poorer food, shoddier clothing, less comfortable dwellings.

The question of German reparations is an international question but not for capitalists alone. It is an international question for labor as well, but American labor speaks only thru American capitalist government with the exception of the Workers Party, which joins its voice with the other 42 parties of the Third International in protest and action against the exploitation and brutalities of capitalism the world over.

The Gompers remedy for foreign competition is restriction of immigration and isolation of the American working class from the international field of the class conflict.

The remedy of the Workers Party of America is unity of all labor movements in the Red International of Labor Unions, the raising of living standards in all countries and relentless struggle against capitalism everywhere.

Anticipated Pleasures

It was cold comfort that Senator Moses brought to the Coolidge cohorts in the rock-bound fastnesses of New Hampshire day before yesterday.

According to the senator the worst is yet to come. More and more prominent names are to be unearthed as parties to the greatest fraud for four decades.

"Those yet unnamed are greater in number and of more consequence than the ones already involved," declared the New Hampshire solon.

Only presidents are of greater importance than cabinet officials—who are already soaked in oil—and Senator Moses must have meant that the greasy trail leads straight to the White House.

As American citizens we are prepared. Nothing that can happen can lower our opinion of the present incumbent of the White House, either as a president or as a politician.

Why did he keep the gang of highbinders which composes the cabinet if he knew, as he must have known, that they were engaged in plundering the public domain without due process of law?

He is either the poorest politician since U. S. Grant or else he knew and they knew that he did not dare to ask for their resignations.

Let us say right here that we are indulging in no moral spasms over the Teapot Dome disclosures, nor will we, even tho the President himself is shown to have had a guilty connection with the Doheny's, Sinclairs and other small fry of capitalism.

If the whole administration is shown to have violated every law of the land we will be surprised—pleasantly—only because of this evidence of the weakness of the capitalist machine—its failure to conceal and protect its most ardent supporters in their speculations.

We hold that laws are made by and in behalf of the capitalist class. They are their laws and they have the power to evade or live up to them—as may be most profitable. They break a thousand laws every day but it is only in a situation such as exists at present—where the middle class is discontented and clamoring for relief—that any but the always victimized workers pay any attention to the fact.

We do not share the indignation of the fearless crusaders in the house and senate whose own records are just as spotty—with oil or steel or copper or coal—as the officials they are showing up. We recognize the value of their services, however, not to the cause of good government as understood by the morality squad of capitalism, but to the workers and farmers of the United States who are watching with intense interest the process of denuding American government of its respectability.

Senator Moses probably knows what he is talking about. We hope so because the higher the officials involved the more speedily will the knowledge be spread that capitalist government, like capitalist business enterprise, consists of trickery, fraud, chicanery—and force when these fail.

The Albanians want Harry F. Sinclair for king. We have no objection, but we suggest that they lock up the silverware and other valuables before he takes office.

If they need some cabinet officials to match the set we beg to be allowed to nominate Fall, Daugherty and Denby with the understanding that the Albanian babies will have their milk bottles fitted with burglar-proof locks.

Michigan friends of Senator Newberry, acting on the old golden rule that one good turn deserves another, engaged lawyers to go to Washington for the defense of Secretary of the Navy Denby. The naval chief was one of Newberry's staunchest friends when the latter was charged with buying his way into the senate.

Coolidge threatens to sift the "rape of Alaska." But while he holds on to Denby he is keeping the rapists in his cabinet.

And, following Klimin into the inner office, Gornuikh heard of the three meetings at which Kimin had been present, heard of Ziman's report, of Robeiko's speech, of the meeting of the Party Committee.

"And what did Karaulov say?" he asked anxiously.

And struggling in pleasant morning sleepiness, like a fly in scented jam, Klimin told his story, and ended it with a sleepy yawn. Gornuikh silently nodded his head. He went to his own room, took from the shelf a fat portfolio of current work, and began carefully to look thru several dossiers.

Two years had already gone by since the revolution had torn Gornuikh as a seventeen-year old lad from the dull factory, and the Party had sent him to work in the Cheka. He could beat a chisel with a hammer without looking at his hand and without fear of smashing it, and he had the same confidence in himself and in the results of his work. He never spoke at meetings, and very rarely in the gatherings of the Party Group.

Gornuikh was always full of wide-awake anxiety. He knew how to connect every crime with those disturbance unnoticeable by the majority, which, like deep submarine currents, are perpetually brewing in the people, toss themselves from village to village, thru markets and fairs, and stir the many thousands of the townsfolk. And sometimes it seemed to him that he himself and the thousands of the comrades were walking on a thin, fragile crust of ice, beneath which was surging angry water ready to carry away and drown everything. . . . And so, when Klimin told him of Karaulov's protests, he nodded his head with approval, and, looking thru the last cases and the bulletins of information, he said to himself, "Good fellow, Karaulov!"

Imperceptibly, delicately, but none the less with insistent force, the pale dawn took possession of the room and made unnecessary and pitiable the light of the electric lamp.

The sun rose, not hot, but scarlet and bright, and threw yellow patches on the floor of the room. Greedily pulling at his cigarette, which did not seem strong enough, Gornuikh swore angrily because his head ached after the sleepless night, and his weary body begged for rest. The working day in the Cheka was already beginning; typewriters were tapping alertly, chasing each other. And from outside, into the life of the Cheka, every minute, now in one room, now in another, broke the ringing of the telephone bells. . . .

Close by Klimin's ear the silver telephone bell rang, and, vexedly shaking his finger at Gornuikh, Klimin took down the instrument. From far, far away came words, incomprehensible, as if written on rough paper. And the voice, thru long inaudible, transformed by the telephone, became suddenly recognizable, familiar. . . .

And Gornuikh noticed how Klimin's face joyfully lightened, and how it grew clear that he was still young, tho the skin of his face was grey and there were many wrinkles under his eyes. But a smile of white teeth brought the dawn into his face, and suddenly he was young, and tenderly confused. "What is the matter with him?" thought Gornuikh.

"Good morning! Good morning! . . . Long from Moscow? At the railway station? Send horses? Good. . . . I'll come myself." He stood up from the table and hung up the instrument. "Comrade Gornuikh, here is Simkova come from Moscow, bringing literature. I have no time to spare for the moment. We'll talk later. . . ."

And he was already running down the staircase into the yard.

BOLD MUSICIANS EXHUME BACH AT ORCHESTRA HALL

Antiquities Featured by Symphony Orchestra

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Antiquities of two very different kinds featured the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Orchestra Hall last Friday and Saturday. The program opened with an overture by Handel in a modern setting. Like the Gluck overture of last week, this is a big, solid composition, composed of solid musical rock.

A concerto for two pianos and orchestra by Philip Emmanuel Bach followed. It was played by the inseparable Guy Maier and Lee Pattison. The younger Bach did not revere the stiff style of his famous father, as musicians of later date do, but wrote freer, more elastic music. This concerto shows nothing remarkable, it is a piece of pleasant stupidity.

The next number, a miniature symphony in three movements by Schumann, is a little more pleasant, but scarcely less stupid.

"King Estmere."

Leo Sowerby's ballad, "King Estmere," for two pianos and orchestra, played by Maier and Pattison, is by far the best work of its composer that we have heard. The ink on the score has not been dry for a year, but the poem from which the subject is taken is a very ancient English ballad. It tells the story of a king winning his bride by magic, and Sowerby has caught the spirit of it most marvelously. The music runs with a great, pulsating rush and spirit, with original and wonderful harmonies and instrumental combinations. Sowerby is the most important American composer, and if he continues to write works like "King Estmere" he will probably become the most important composer of the century.

Another modern work, "The Fountains of Rome," by the Italian, Respighi, was played. A most unique conception, this, of the varying moods expressed thru impressions of four fountains at different times of the day. Shadowy, mysterious, pastoral is the Valle Giula fountain at dawn, a dance of water nymphs in the Triton fountain in the morning sun, while more solemn and reflective music paints the Trevi fountain at mid-day. The poem ends in the mystery in which it began, with the playing water of the Villa Medici fountain at sunset.

Boring and Sleepy.

To conclude the program the corpse of old J. S. Bach was exhumed again. This time a concerto for three pianos, played by Maier, Pattison and Arthur Shattuck, was performed. The two fast movements could have been more boring, and the slow movement could have been more sleepy, but they were boring enough and sufficiently sleepy.

Next week Felix Salmond, cellist, will be the soloist. He will play a concerto by Lalo, and the orchestra wil play the Beethoven first symphony, a march by Debussy, Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale," and selections from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust."

Principal of Firetrap Thorp School Says School Board's Inspection Was a "Whitewash"

"The board of education resents the charge that their inspection of the fire hazards in some of the fire trap schools was a whitewash, but I think that is just what it was," said Henry D. Hatch, principal of the J. N. Thorp school in South Chicago.

Mr. Hatch was largely responsible for the exposure of the conditions in his and many other schools. For years he has been fighting for the improvement of conditions in his school which serves a large working-class district. He is thoroly disliked by the business officials of the board of education because of his fearless attitude and fighting spirit.

Inspector Admits Evil.

"When the inspectors were at my school one of them told me that if it was a private school he would order it closed and have a policeman placed at the door so as to prevent its use till it was fixed up properly."

The board of education in making public the report of the inspectors on the Thorp school said the inspectors found it all right and that it had one of the best fire escapes in the city.

"The men who do inspection work for the various departments of the city grow to have one track minds. They look for specific violations of specific city ordinances. When inspecting a city building they are well satisfied if the building meets the minimum requirements of the ordinances. They are not authorized nor do they think in inspecting a building, 'is this building the sort of place necessary and proper for serving the social purposes it was intended to serve?' They think only of the city ordinances.

"There is no agency in this city to pass on such a question. In erecting a school there is no one to ask: 'will this building be socially serviceable?'"

Demands "Social Architect."

"There should be such an agency. There should be a social architect connected with the board of education who would try to make the schools more effective instruments in society.

"I am glad to see your paper come out and fight for better schools. It is a fine work."

Mr. Hatch declared that he intended to continue to fight for a new school building for the Thorp school to replace the present unsafe and inadequate one.

United States Is Bar to Workers' Rule in Mexico

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 17.—A proposal for the government to hack its way thru the tangle of juridical obstacles to the pacifying of the country and the distribution of the land and seizure of wilfully closed factories by the establishment of a military social dictatorship under Obregon for the period of the civil war will be made by Dr. Siurob (pro-government) in the chamber of deputies.

The plan is for a constitutional dictatorship in the sense that it is to be voted by the national congress. This is to concede extraordinary faculties in all departments of government to President Obregon. These extraordinary powers are to last till the pacification of the country has been completed when he is to convoke a new constituent assembly to revise the constitution of 1917 ,which, however radical it may have seemed to American petroleum companies and big land owners and employers of labor, Siurob regards as antiquated and not in accord with the social tendencies of our times.

All states are to be put in charge for the time being of military governors. These are to use their extraordinary powers to begin in earnest the distribution of lands which has so long been blocked by court procedures, injunctions, hostility of state and local governments and legal tangles generally. Once for all the redivision is to be made thoro and complete. All industries that have been shut down without just cause (many owners are trying to embarrass the government or lower wage standards thru such maneuvers) shall be operated by their workers thru co-operatives or thru state controlled organizations.

All citizens are to be subject to possible draft until peace has been restored. A commission is to be named to consider compensation for seized property. It is doubtful whether the president will approve these measures out of fear of his "uncle"—Tio Sam—to the north.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

We are informed that several hundred of foreign born residents of Chicago took out their final papers last week. The exercises were in charge of the American Legion. A person by the name of Shick made a speech after which a Mr. McCarthy prayed. The reporter who covered the meeting testified that McCarthy "prayed like the devil." Whether he read the gospel according to Billy Sunday or some of the more ancient reformed sinners is not what we are concerned with but why the services usually associated with introducing the foreign born into the mysteries of Americanism should be delegated to the American Legion.

States Attorney Crowe has a rather peculiar conception of how to economize in public office. He generously offered to lop off $10,000 of his annual appropriation for office expenses other than salaries, but requested a special appropriation of $75,000 for a graft investigation. We suggest that another $75,000 be raised to investigate the first $75,000. The politicians in the city of Chicago like their brothers in Washington fight like Kilkenny cats over the division of the spoils and if they cannot agree they squeal on each other and the result is what always happens when thieves quarrel. We have a Teapot Dome in Washington and real estate graft probes, school graft probes and state treasury probes in Chicago and vicinity. The trouble does not lie in the individuals. It is in the system that breeds graft and corruption—the capitalist system. Before public life can be cleansed of grafters the robber system of capitalism must be abolished. A lily cannot flourish in a sewer, neither can honesty flourish under a state of society where the incentive to action is personal gain and not the communal good.

The weekly edition of the moribund New York Call and its short lived successor, the New York Leader, is running true to form. Commenting on the miners' convention, an editorial attacks Alexander Howat viciously and charges him with associating with radicals, instead of relying on the fairness of John L. Lewis and the union constitution for a redress of his grievances. The editorial denounced the communists for endeavoring to give the policies of the miners' union a jolt forward and break the power of the bosses' friends who now control it. The paper in which the editorial appears is a socialist weekly organ of the Socialist Party—or what is left of it—of New York. It is edited by James Oneal.

The executive board of the Illinois Federation of Labor endorsed Governor Small's record after examining it we are told. We are willing to bet a German mark that it did not take the labor fakers very long to peruse Mr. Small's record. Besides endorsing the governor, who is a "friend of labor" in the Gompers sense, the meeting also endorsed Newton Jenkins, endorsed by the Conference for Progressive Political Action. The endorsement of these labor skates are fast losing their value. The rank and file of the organized labor movement are losing faith in them. Men like John L. Walker, who change their political clothing so suddenly are justly suspected of ulterior motives. The suspicion is more than well founded.

William Gibbs McAdoo will have a tough job trying to shake off the empty oil can that makes an irritating noise every time he moves his feet in the direction of the democratic nomination for the presidency. One of the refinements of cruelty practiced on criminals in the middle ages was to have them immersed in cauldrons of boiling oil. If they emerged unscathed from the ordeal their innocence was affirmed. If not—? With tears in his eyes "Mac" calls on his "progressive friends," among them the Ku Klux Klan, we believe, to decide in the interests of the nation whether he shall come forth untarnished from the seething oil tank. BRITISH DOCK STRIKE HALTS U. S. MAILS

Every Port In United Kingdom Is Tied Up

PLYMOUTH, England, Feb. 18.—Five thousand bags of American mail were held up here today because of the national dock workers' strike.

Two thousand bags were landed from liners which arrived from the United States over the week end, but the striking dock workers refused to move the mail.

Labor Cabinet Discusses Strike.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—The labor cabinet met this afternoon to discuss the nation-wide strike of 110,000 workers which has tied up shipping and paralyzed transportation at every port in the United Kingdom with the exception of London.

Strike Has Paralyzing Effect.

The paralyzing effect of the strike, which started at noon Saturday after final negotiations between union leaders and employers to reach a compromise of the men's demand for a two shilling a day increase failed, became apparent today.

Already there is a serious shortage of meat in the country. Meat porters, in sympathy with the dock workers who are holding up the unloading of beef ships by the strike, refused to handle cold storage stocks.

Railwaymen Help Dockers.

John Bromley, head of the Society of Enginemen and Firemen, the organization which recently won its strike, has ordered those members employed in and around the docks to assist the dockers in every way.

In Liverpool, the warehousemen are out in sympathy with the dockers following the breaking off of their own wage negotiations. Dock railway workers in Liverpool also struck and the shipments of food from the warehouses are stopped completely.

Prices have begun to rise thruout Great Britain as the prospects of an early shortage of foodstuffs increases. There is said to be but a weeks supply of meat and homegrown vegetables but much doubt is expressed as to whether the strike will be over in that length of time.

The dockers are affiliated with the transport workers in the largest union in the British labor movement. The union has nine members in parliament with Ben Tillet as their leader.

No move toward bringing the employers and dockers together has been made as yet but Frank Hodges, now civil head of the admiralty, has suggested that the dockers refer their demands to the council of the Trades Union Congress. Ben Tillet has made no answer to the suggestions yet.

The dockers union is in a strategic position and unless the Labor Party government interferes they will undoubtedly win their demands of two shillings per day increase.

Mellon Juggled Treasury Accounts To Defeat Bonus, Is Soldiers' Charge

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Soldier bonus advocates in congress will confer this week with Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian, and Representative Fairchild, New York, regarding a possible congressional investigation of charges that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon misled President Harding and is misleading President Coolidge concerning the condition of the treasury, in order to defeat the bonus.

That each time a bonus estimate was asked for, treasury officials made their cost higher.

That figures were "juggled" so that Mr. Harding was led to believe there would be a treasury deficit whereas it turned out there was a $300,000,000 surplus.

That by the same sort of juggling, Mr. Coolidge is being led to oppose granting of a bonus.

When the charges were taken to Mellon, he said his denial of them could not be made too emphatic.

School Children Slain by Speeding Southern R. R. Train

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 18. — Two children were killed and two others injured near here today when a school bus was hit by a speeding Southern Railway passenger train.

W. M. Harper, 16, was driving the bus. One of his sisters, Virginia Harper, 12, and Ruby Brown, 11, were killed. A heavy fog was blamed for the accident.

Many Die in Fires.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 18—Fires in Illinois cost 95 lives, 55 injuries and caused $4,462,332 damage, according to the monthly report of state fire marshal Gamber. Of the 95 deaths, 42 were victims of the fire and explosion at the Pekin plant of the Corn Products company.

DICTATORS IN BAVARIA QUIT; OUST LANDTAG

BERLIN, Feb. 18—Dictator von Kahr and General Lossow, heads of the Bavarian government, resigned today.

Von Kahr and General Lossow were known as "putschists"—conspirators against the republican government.

They had become extremely unpopular in Munich because of a story that the former broke his word of honor in connection with the recently frustrated "beer cellar putsch," a thing unbearable from an officer or government head.

Munich messages report that a plebiscite regarding dissolution of the landtag, or Bavarian parliament, has shown a majority in favor of dissolution.

Contrary to expectations, Colonel Seisser, head of the state police in Bavaria, who was supposed to be in the conspiracy with von Kahr and General Lossow, did not resign.

Railway Union Leaders Give Confidence Vote

William Gibbs McAdoo will not withdraw as a candidate for the democratic presidential nomination, it was definitely decided yesterday at a meeting of 200 democrats, including representatives of the sixteen standard railway unions, held in the Crystal Room of the Great Northern Hotel.

Incidentally, the resolution of confidence in McAdoo, submitted by representatives of the railway unions, is a clear indication that the Cleveland convention of the Conference for Progressive Political Action will, in the event of McAdoo receiving the democratic nomination, be a mere ratification meeting, unless strife develops in the meantime.

The resolution submitted and signed by the railway representatives is as follows:

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 18, 1924.

WHEREAS, the propriety of Mr. William G. McAdoo's actions in connection with certain oil interests have been questioned and his availability as a candidate for President of the United States is now under consideration, and

WHEREAS, careful inquiry has failed to indicate that Mr. McAdoo has done anything improper or immoral,

THEREFORE, be it Resolved that we, as representatives of Railroad Labor assert our belief that his availability as a candidate has not been impaired and that there is no valid reason why any fair minded person should oppose Mr. McAdoo's nomination on account of the allegations made regarding his association as attorney for the Oil Company. REPRESENTING LABOR:

Signed: Timothy Shea, E. J. Ross, Thomas Clohessy, Frank M. Burns, J. A. Sylvester, J. A. Franklin, J. G. Luhrsen, E. J. Manion, E. H. Fitzgerald, Martin F. Ryan, T. H. Fjpsdale, L. S. Sheppard, A. O. Wharton, James J. Forester, B. M. Jewell, Timothy Healy.

Walsh for McAdoo.

A telegram from Senator Walsh of Montana, who has taken the leading part in the oil exposures, endorsing McAdoo was largely instrumental in swinging the conference to the son-in-law of Woodrow Wilson whose connection with the Doheny oil interests almost ruined his political career. The Walsh telegram expressed complete confidence in McAdoo and discounted any bad effect his employment as Doheny's attorney, for a $250,000 fee, might have had.

"I am committed to the candidacy of William G. McAdoo, whose character is untouched by any revelation

WALSH BOOSTS THE MC ADOO CANDIDACY DESPITE OILY RECORD

McAdoo was not involved in oil corruption, Senator Walsh, Montana, chairman of the senate committee investigating the oil leases, declared in a telegram to the Chicago conference.

"I am committed to the candidacy of William G. McAdoo," Walsh's telegram stated.

"I should regard any effort to place another progressive candidate in the field as serving the interests of the Republican party.

"I am most deeply appreciative that any citizen should deem me worthy of elevation to the presidency but I am unable to give countenance to any movement to that end."

Walsh has been suggested as a possible candidate for the Democratic nomination in the event McAdoo's name was withdrawn.

PARLEYS HALT AS BOSSES WRANGLE OVER PACT PERIOD

Coal Wage Sessions Are Deadlocked

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 18.—Miners and operators of the central competitive field, resumed the task today of trying to reach agreement on a new contract.

Operators during the week-end vacation sought to compose their internal differences over the question of a one or a three year agreement at the present wage scale.

The miners' delegates said they were simply marking time until the operators decided on the length of time of the agreement and then will open their fight for a four year contract.

The session, which has been deadlocked for a week, showed no indications of making any progress today.

Operators opposed to the union program but willing to continue the present wage on a short term contract basis appeared to be having internal differences. One faction in the operators' ranks was in favor of attempting to compromise with the miners on a three-year basis while the opposition would listen to nothing but a year to year agreement.

The disagreement among the operators gave the miners renewed confidence and they were preparing to hold out indefinitely for their original demands. They were convinced that a settlement would be reached soon.

Phil H. Penna, Indiana operator, declared today that 65,000,000 tons of coal were mined as insurance against a strike.

Reject Longer Workday.

BERNE, Switzerland, Feb. 18. — Switzerland today, by referendum, rejected a proposal to increase the working hours in factories to fifty-four weekly. The vote was 433,000 against 316,000.

DENBY QUITS; OIL GRAFT IS REAL REASON

Pressure on President Cans Naval Head

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Secretary of the Navy Denby today resigned from the cabinet. President Coolidge accepted the resignation.

Assistant Secretary Roosevel also offered his resignation and the President will decide within a short time whether to accept it.

Friends Couldn't Help Him.

Denby's decision to quit came jus as his friends were beginning a campaign here to "clear his name" from the criticism attaching to him o the oil leases.

The two attorneys were sent her by Michigan friends of Denby. They said in a statement that Denby doe not want his friends to interfere, bu declared it was necessary that step be taken to "give Edwin Denby somehow, somewhere, a fair hearing."

"Lost" Coolidge's Confidence.

Denby has quit, it was indicated on high authority, because h feels he has lost President Coolidge's confidence and that he cannot therefore remain as a member of the cabinet.

Mr. Coolidge was in conference with Denby by telephone this morning and later Theodore Clark, the president's personal secretary, wen to Denby's office.

Denby left his office a short time later. He said he had "absolutely nothing to say" but would issue a statement at four o'clock. It was stated by an official close to the situation that Denby's decision was the result of his own "matured judgment" and not because of any suggestion from the White House.

Resignation Predicted.

The DAILY WORKER on Saturday told the imminence of Denby's withdrawal from the cabinet, because of the withdrawal of the president's support of the projected polar fligh

SENATE COMMITTEE GETS NEW DOPE ON OFFICIALS' SPECULATION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—A sensational "confession" has provided the senate oil investigators with new evidence relating to oil speculation, it was learned today.

Committee members declined to reveal who made the confession and were carefully guarding details of the new evidence. Several subpoenaes have been issued, however, for "important witnesses" whose names are being withheld for the present.

—The Russian Communist Party is at grips with counter-revolution. Earlier Installments told of the party meeting in the City Circus and the economic crisis. The farmers must have seed grain, but seed grain waits on railroad transportation and railroad transportation waits on fuel. If the Red Army is sent out for fuel and bandits and counter-revolutionists may seize the town. The party decides to take the risk.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

THE horse flung up the Spring mud from the road and people's voices sounded noisy and cheerful. . . . And Klimin, after long, long months was careless and happy, just as if some one had taken a dustcover from his soul. It had seemed that during these last months he had thought of nothing but work, that he had lived from day to day in its ceaseless rhythm, and only now he understood that all that time she had been present in the furthest corner of his mind.

He had met her first at a meeting of the Party Committee; she had golden hair carelessly wound into a lump, surrounding her head with a gold aureole, and falling over her eyes and her severe, serious forehead with its wrinkle in the middle. They met often in Party work and he knew that she was in the Political Department, and that before the revolution she had been a village schoolmistress, and had entered the Party in 1918. She had retained from her teaching the habit of speaking loudly, clearly, with affectionately persuasive, protective intonations, as if she were talking with her pupils. And during her reports, Klimin often ceased to understand the words, and only listened to the soft rise and fall of her voice and admired the joyful blue smile that lived in her eyes, a smile that did not harmonize with the severe expression of her mouth. And now and again he caught himself watching the movement of her strong little hand, that replied so firmly to a handshake, the mechanical movement of her long fingers, in the light touch of which was to be divined so much delicacy hidden from men. Catching himself, with slight annoyance, he had thown off these ideas.

But like this, rosy-cheeked, healthy, tall, carrying her gold-haired head on her well-knit body, he had not known her long. The typhus epidemic that seized the town laid her for six weeks in a hospital. And, swallowed up in a feverish struggle with plots, banditism and typhus, he almost forgot her, and, meeting her after her illness, had not known her at first. She had grown pale, literally bloodless, her cheeks and lips had faded, and her shaved head seemed naked and fragile. Her eyes had grown larger and more transparent, and weariness after her severe illness remained in them for a long time.

Often, Klimin noticed, she went to sleep during some report or other, laying her pink shaven head on her arm, and then started up, a weary smile lighting her eyes. Sometimes, after the meetings, they talked of politics, of the life of the Party, of current work, and soon adopted the comradely "thou" that joins the Communists of a huge country in a single united family. But not only had there been no words of love between them; there had been none of friendship even, and indeed there had been no time to think of personal experiences—work was too feverish and left too little leisure. Only, before her departure, in the moment of hurried leave-taking, a profound youthful desire had whispered to Klimin to kiss her lips.

She rarely smiled and her quiet laugh he heard for the first time now, in the midst of the bustle and hurry of the railway station, as he helped her to carry her bundles of literature. He saw her now quite different from what she had been: she had browned and grown thinner; her hair had grown again; her movements seemed quicker and she laughed with a quiet happy laugh. Hurriedly replying to her questions, he told her of the current work of the Party Committee, of the general state of affairs in the district, of the project for getting wood. . . . And, as they drove into the town along the road, silvery and glistening with snow and mud, Klimin caught himself feeling that there was something or other he had not told her, the most important of all.

In the crowd that pressed together on the narrow station platform, among the Red Army men on leave with their weather-beaten faces, and the peasants losing their heads in the unaccustomed bustle of the station, two other people also met, and after they had greeted each other, one of them said: "Look! The President of the Cheka . . . there, with a woman."

"And she?"

"Of the Party. . . ." The one who replaid was a fat mouzhik with a big red beard, in the long sheepskin coat of a sledge driver, with a whip in his hands and a worn fur cap on his head, from beneath which drops of sweat rolled on his forehead.

The other—well-built, in a short yellow fur coat tightly enclosing his strong body, and a black Red army helmet with a big red star. He had blue eyes and a handsome sensitive mouth. . . . On his sleeve were sewn a star and two chevrons—but in his walk, his carriage, in every turn of the head was the regular officer. He had just arrived and had a travelling bag in his hand. His eyes looked carefully and with enmity at Klimin and Simkova, observing and marking their every movement.

"Let's get along quickly. . . . I have found a room in the house of some one here . . . one of the Jews. But he helps us, gives money, and twice saved me and hid me. What sort of documents have you got?"

"I am travelling from the District Staff to be at the disposal of the local War Commissariat as a military specialist. . . . My name . . . Repin, Boris, and in my service record, two years of work in the Red Army. Officially thanked therefore. . . ."

They were already driving thru the streets and from time to time the red-haired one bent down from the driver's seat and talked to Repin:

"And we did not expect you. . . . As soon as I heard that they had destroyed your organization, I thought—that's the end, I shall not see you again. . . . Small military strength here now. . . . Scattered thru the villages and factories. . . . Now the peasantry are for us. . . . There is no seed in the villages. . . . With God's help we'll give them a thrashing. . . ."

LADIES GARMENT WORKERS READY FOR BIG STRIKE

Walkout Is Set For Secret Date

Failing to receive any reply from the employers in the ladies' garment industry to their repeated demands to affect a settlement with the union strike committee of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has completed organization of machinery to carry on a strike. A strike has been decided on but is being kept secret. Not only the 10,000 girls and women in the dressmaking industry will be called out but the 3,000 men who are employed as cloak makers will also walk out, it was said at the union headquarters.

Cloakmakers to Fight Thugs.

The cloak makers will remain out on strike for a couple of days to organize for the protection of the women members of the union from the violence that is feared from the thugs and sluggers of the bosses. As soon as the cloak makers are sure they can protect the women members of the union they will return to work.

The strike committee at a meeting Sunday decided to give the bosses till Monday night to answer the demands of the union. Up to a late hour last night the union had received no answer.

Demand 5-Day Week.

The garment workers are demanding a five-day forty-hour week with pay for forty-four hours, unemployment insurance, and the setting up of machinery for settling disputes that arise between the workers and the bosses.

For the last nine months the union has been conducting an intensive organization campaign. In a letter to the dress manufacturers the union pointed out that since 1916 there has been a steady drift in the dress industry toward the return of the sweat shop conditions that existed before the coming of the union.

The only statement the union would make about the date of the strike was that "it will be called in the very near future."

made to the Senate committee investigating the naval oil leases.

"I should regard any effort to place another progressive candidacy in the field as an effort in the interests of the republican party to divert the public mind from the iniquities of the present administration and as a contribution to the plan of the great interests allied to defeat the former distinguished secretary of the treasury.

"I am most deeply appreciative that you or any other citizen should deem me worthy of elevation to the presidency. And I thank you and those associated with you most cordially, but am unable to give countenance to any movement to that end."

The name of B. M. Jewell, head of the Railway Department of the American Federation of Labor, signed to resolution of confidence, is believed to show that the executive council of the Federation approves of the McAdoo candidacy officially and a statement to this effect is expected soon from President Gompers.

Marsh Sounds Warning.

The only note of pessimism sounded at the conference came from Benjamin Marsh, national representative of the farmers' council, who declared that the farmers were disgusted with both old parties and were going to organize a farmer-labor party to contest the coming elections.

Now that the renovating of McAdoo has been accomplished to the satisfaction of his democratic supporters it is planned to intensify the work for his nomination that was halted by the Teapot Dome exposures.

Galloway Miners Aid Locked Out Men In Fennelton Field

GALLOWAY, W. Va., Feb. 18.—A $200 donation was forwarded by Galloway local of the United Mine Workers to their locked out brothers at Fennelton, W. Va., and a committee of two miners was selected to investigate conditions in that field.

At a mass meeting in Galloway, with 600 miners from three local unions present, resolutions were passed against the Davis bills that would enslave the foreign born workers in America.

U. S. Lieutenant Falls In Attack On Rebel Filipinos

MANILA, P. I., Feb. 18.—Filipino rebels accounted for nine members of General Wood's constabulary in a fight at Balete, Agusan province. Thirty-five natives were slain. The American constabulary were better armed but the Filipinos defended themselves with great bravery. Lieut. Eugenio Mendes was one of the American casualties.

Growth of Workers Party influence among the Negroes is the certain result of the constructive work of its delegates at the big All Race Congress or Sanhedrin held here last week.

No one could follow the Sanhedrin without seeing that the only force fighting aggressively for the Negro race there was the force represented by the Workers Party delegates, the African Blood Brotherhood and several individual delegates from other organizations who rallied to their progam.

The labor delegates insisted that the only hope of the oppressed Negro Race was in lining up with the oppressed of other races: that the oppression of the Negro had an economic basis and was for the purpose of maintaining him as a voteless and unskilled worker in field and mill.

All Workers Party resolutions, incorporating their race program, had the unity of the black worker with the white worker, as the solution of the race problem.

Workers Party Demands.

This was shown in their vigorous demand for the elimination of the color line in the unions; in their insistence that the Ku Klux Klan could only be fought effectively in co-operation with the foreign-born workers; in their demand that the same schools must be open to blacks and whites because where the races were segregated the Negro always got less attention; in their solution of the residential segregation into "black belts" by the remedy of having all houses let to first comers at stipulated prices—regardless of the applicant's color, and in other resolutions.

Ninety-eight per cent of the Negroes are workers or farmers, and when farmers are almost invariably tenant farmers, in many cases in peonage or debt slavery.

Dean Miller—the Deceiver.

Dean Kelly Miller, chairman of the Sanhedrin, also declared at the outset of the congress that the Negro group was essentially a labor group, therefore the Negro problem was a labor problem.

This was said to members of the Workers Party and other radicals in the effort to throw dust in their eyes. It was said, with the promise that labor would receive full consideration in the sessions of the Sanhedrin.

Dean Miller never had any intention to give labor any consideration at the Sanhedrin. Nor did he intend to encourage any aggressive race attitude against lynching, disfranchisement, segregation in residential districts, schools and Jim Crow cars, against the race. Dean Miller and the organizers of the Congress wanted to do nothing that would offend the social welfare organizations, white chambers of commerce, Republican Party and any of the other institutions which supported the leaders—tho not the masses—of the race. Nor would he do anything which would offend any vested interests of the Race.

Labor knew the Congress would be controlled by conservatives but it was not prepared for the deceitful tactics of the leaders. So when Dean Miller explained that labor would be given a regular place on the program they gave him a chance to make good.

Force Labor Committees.

There would have been no labor committee at all if the radicals had not insisted. Then Dean Miller appointed a committee of six headed by Arnold T. Hill, an official of the Urban League, a chamber of commerce institution, and containing another Urban Leaguer. One Workers Party delegate, Lovett Fort-Whiteman got on the committee. Other Workers Party delegates and men from the African Blood Brotherhood insisted on getting onto the committee also. Miller evened it up by other conservative appointments.

However, the radicals had the only program to present to the labor committee and most of their program got thru, especially the part calling for the elimination of the color line in the unions and the solidarity of white and black workers.

Radicals Get Out Publicity.

To the alarm of the conservatives the clear cut resolutions of the two class conscious organizations—the Workers Party and the African Blood Brotherhood, were mimeographed by the hundreds and distributed to every delegate and to visitors, and mailed out.

The Workers Party labor program for the Negro race was thus spread far and wide.

Aiding the work of the labor delegates was the Daily Worker, the only daily paper in Chicago to report the trial. An average of 200 copies a day was sold to the delegates. As the regular Negro press did not come out until the latter part of the week the DAILY WORKER, with the message it contained, was the daily reading of these delegates from the North and the South, the East and the West. It awakened a sympathetic response in many who were not workers but whose associations were with the poorly paid workers. This was the case with some of the clergymen present.

Daily Worker Gains.

Incidently, the DAILY WORKER gained considerable circulation in the Negro district in the South Side of Chicago, during the progress of the Sanhedrin—which means many more persons subjected to the Workers Party influence.

Suspicion was soon aroused that Dean Miller's strategy was to kid the working class element along until the close of the convention, and then adjourn without having done anything in their behalf. This suspicion proved to be correct.

Dean Kelly Miller.

Radicals Revolt.

Thursday afternoon the radicals revolted openly. The revolt came at the end of a series of speeches on inter-racial relationships in which Labor, the one sure tie between the Races, had been ignored.

Applause which the audience gave Otto E. Huiswoud, of the African Blood Brotherhood, a union printer, when a charge that labor was an outcast at the Sanhedrin as it was outside showed the majority of the delegates did not agree with Dean Miller's conception of the Race Movement, as a gathering of business and professional men.

So hot was the discussion, by Houiswoud, Fort-Whiteman, and other delegates, the chairman was unable to stop, that the half promise was made that labor would be given attention the next morning.

Miller's Slick Move Fails.

Next morning it was shoved aside again. At noon when labor delegates took the floor Dean Miller smoothly announced that "those interested in labor" could adjourn to the assembly room while the main body continued in session to hear the report of the organization committee.

This slick move would have gotten rid of the radicals while the important report on the constitution was being adopted.

Here Miller lost control of the convention for 40 minutes. Speakers not affiliated with the Workers Party and the African Blood Brotherhood followed their delegates lead in pointing out that labor was the supreme issue before a Negro congress because the Negroes were workers and farmers basically, not preachers, bankers and lawyers.

Black Capitalists.

The auditorium rocked with applause when Gordon Owens of the Workers Party declared that a black capitalist was just as obnoxious as a white capitalist and a black real estate shark as dangerous as one of the other color.

Men in ministerial collars clapped their hands at this, but one brother of the cloth tried to rise "in defense of capital," to be greeted with the cry "Are you one of those black capitalists?"

S. V. Phillips and Lovett Fort-Whiteman of the Workers Party made telling speeches, and so did Otto E. Huiswoud. Miller squirmed under his charge that he had been sabotaging labor.

When Miller finally got back the floor the entire audience realized that there was a body of men there fighting for the 98 per cent of the Race who were toilers.

Solidarity With White Workers.

The Workers Party was seen as the movement fighting for solution of the Race Problem by organization of the black worker with his white brother, in contrast to the policy of begging from the white rulers that the leaders of the Sanhedrin stood for.

It will be impossible for the Negro bourgeoisie to develop a race movement that is isolated from the labor movement. The radical Negroes will not let them.

Coolidge Prodded to Action by Bullet that Plugged Greene

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—President Coolidge has taken personal charge of an investigation of the prohibition enforcement situation in Washington as a result of shooting of Senator Greene, Vermont, by a stray bullet fired in a battle between dry agents and bootleggers.

The President sent his secretary, C. Bascom Slemp, to Emergency Hospital to get from Mr. Green the circumstances of the shooting.

UPHOLSTERERS' TRIAL BEGINS IN BOYCOTT CASE

Bosses' Lawyer Handles Case for State

Dudley Taylor, lawyer for the Illinois Employers' Association, will be the captain and chief mate in the prosecution of five union workers before Judge Hosea Wells in county court, it was revealed yesterday when four members of the Upholsterers' union and one member of the Painters' union came up for trial for activities in the upholsterers' strike.

The five union men are Thomas O'Shea, business agent of local 111 of the Upholsterers' union; Michael J. McKenna, business agent for local 110 of the Upholsterers' union and secretary of Upholsterers' District Council; William Riordon and Gus J. Dahl, members of Upholsterers' union, and Fred Jurish, a member of local 637 of the Painters' union. They are all charged with "conspiricy to boycott" on an indictment of six counts. If found guilty they can be sentenced to from one to five years in prison on each count.

Taylor Is Real Prosecutor.

The evidence on which the indictments were based was gathered by Dudley Taylor. States Attorney Crowe "extended the courtesies of the office" and the assistance of special police to Taylor to enable him to gather the evidence.

Michael Romano, assistant states attorney, is nominally chief prosecutor, assisted by Assistant States Attorney Chervist, but it is well known that Dudley Taylor prepared the case for Romano and is instructing and assisting him in presenting it.

Taylor Chief Witness Also.

Romano announced that Dudley Taylor would be the chief witness for the prosecution when the tentative jury had been sworn. The jury panel is composed largely of clerical workers and small business men who seem to have an open shop psychology. It looks as if it will take at least two days to get a jury that will satisfy both the defense and the prosecution.

Court sessions yesterday were taken up with the questioning of jurors. The defense and the prosecution both have ten peremptory challenges.

The questioning of the jurors revealed that the prosecution is anxious to get men who have never had any connection with labor organizations. The defense is anxious to get men of broad experience who are without prejudice against organized labor.

The indictment charges that the unionists "did wrongfully and maliciously conspire to injure, damage and destroy the business" of certain upholstery concerns by hindering them from execution of their contracts. They are charged with having done this by attempting to make the upholstery bosses employ only members of the union.

Trial Is Strikebreaking Plot.

Michael McKenna, one of the defendants, told a reporter for the DAILY WORKER that the prosecution of himself and the other defendants was the result of the failure of the boss upholsterer to break the strike of upholstery workers which began last May.

"The bosses failed to get any men who were mechanics to return to work. The men who did scab were anything but upholsterers they were hod carriers when it came to laying carpet. With the assistance of Dudley Taylor of the Employers Association they had us indicted. We are charged with conspiring together. We fellows who are upholsterers never saw or heard of Fred Jurish before we were all indicted. Yet we are charged with conspiring with a man we didn't know existed," McKenna said.

Jurish refused to work on the same job with scab upholsterers and because of that he was indicted and is being tried for attempting to damage and destroy the business of the upholstery bosses.

At the close of the court yesterday four jurors had been tentatively accepted by both sides. The prosecution had used 11 of their 50 peremptory challenges, challenging every juror who is now or ever was a member of a labor union.

A contractor who was not doing work under the Landis award was challenged by the prosecution. The defense has used only four of their challenges. Two other jurors were passed to the defense as acceptable to the prosecution when court closed.

Congress Killing Tax Program of Andrew Mellon

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The administration's tax program seemed doomed today when a two-hour conference between house republican and progressive leaders failed to break the deadlock on income tax rates.

No further conference has been arranged and administration leaders concede defeat for their program unless a compromise is made before the vote.

Progressives stood pat for a 50 per cent cut in the normal income tax rates but republican leader Longworth refused to budge from his position that the lower rate would be a fundamental change in the Mellon program of the navy dirigible Shenandoah. When the president ordered plans for the flight stopped he struck at Denby's pet project and thus clearly indicated to the navy secretary that his usefulness as a cabinet member had been impaired by his connection with the leasing of the naval oil reserves and the consequent demand by the senate that he resign.

Teapot Oil Scandal Forces Denby Into the Discard

As he left the navy department shortly before 11 a. m. today, Denby said:

"This is my birthday. I am 54 years old today. I am going home. I have absolutely nothing to say. I won't say I have resigned or that I haven't or that I intend to. I hope you will let me alone on my birthday. If you see me at four o'clock I may have some statement to make."

Photographers snapped Denby as he was leaving the navy department. "What will the caption be over that picture?" Nobody replied.

"Well," said Denby, "don't use it right away if you are going to make it 'resigned'."

At the White House it was stated that there was no announcement forthcoming regarding Denby and that anything that was to be said would come from the navy department.

Denby Successor Unknown.

Secretary of the Navy Denby's successor will "not be a man from Michigan nor a man now connected with the navy," it was said by an official close to President Coolidge this afternoon.

This was taken as disposing of the possibility that Charles B. Warren, Detroit, would be appointed. Warren was believed to have the inside track as Denby's successor.

At the White House it was stated Denby's resignation probably would be effective March 10.

Denby first discussed his resignation with Mr. Coolidge on Sunday at the White House, it was learned. Nothing was decided then, however.

Denby then talked it over further with his friends, the understanding being that if he would quit the cabinet, his friends would organize an effort to vindicate him. It was suggested today that he might run for the senate.

Roosevelt May Also Go.

Denby this morning called up the President and told him he had decided to quit. Mr. Coolidge at once said he would accept the secretary's decision and release him.

Roosevelt, it was learned, offered his resignation but Mr. Coolidge told him the question need not be discussed at this time.

The assistant secretary is understood to have told the President he was ready to step out if his connection with the Denby regime in the navy department had hurt his continued usefulness.

Roberts Second Oil Broker.

Owen J. Roberts of Philadelphia, was confirmed as second oil counsel by the Senate today.

His confirmation, coming by an overwhelming majority, completed action of the Senate toward bringing the leases into the federal court.

Court Action In Scandal.

Court action in the Teapot Dome oil scandal is due within 48 hours.

If the senate today confirms Owen J. Roberts, Philadelphia, the republican member of the president's special counsel to prosecute the oil cases, nothing will then stand in the way of an immediate application for an injunction to stop Harry Sinclair and E. L. Doheny from withdrawing more oil from the government oil reserves.

That will be the first step to get back the oil leases and to punish any guilty of fraud or corruption in connection with the leasing.

Confirmation of Roberts by the senate was believed by administration leaders to be certain, after considerable criticism from Senator La Follette and others.

Additional counsel may be selected by the senate. Senator Pittman, member of the investigating committee, believes that Roberts and Pomerene ought to have some capable assistance. He wants to propose that a call of the nation's greatest legal authorities might offer their assistance.

Grand Jury to Convene.

Atlee Pomerene, Ohio, who was confirmed Saturday night by the senate, said today that as soon as Roberts is confirmed a statement will be issued, outlining the procedure the special counsel will follow.

Pomerene indicated this will consist, first, of the injunction suit to stop further pumping of oil from the reserves and application for receivers to take care of the interests of the government and the lessees until the cases are finally decided; second, suits to abrogate the cases, and finally, convening of a federal grand jury to return indictments against any deemed guilty of criminal acts in connection with the leasing.

Immediately after Roberts is confirmed, the senate is to dispose of the resolution appropriating $100,000 for court action. This already has passed the house and its adoption by the senate will provide funds for employment of assistants by Pomerene and Roberts.

With these steps taken, the Teapot Dome scandal will definitely pass from the realm of investigation into that of action. At the same time, however, the committee will keep close contact with the special counsel and new developments when the inquiry is resumed will be constantly communicated to the lawyers for such action as may be necessary.

Senator Walsh, Montana, chief investigator of the committee, left last night for Pinehurst for a brief rest and no more witnesses will be questioned until he returns.

Wheeler Replaces Walsh.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, democrat, who is not a member of the investigating committee, is leading the new trial during the absence of Senator Walsh of Montana.

Edward B. McLean, millionaire Washington publisher, who was subpoenaed from Palm Beach, Fla., has arrived in Washington. Senator Walsh previously said that McLean was called to tell what he knew of reports regarding existence of a so-called slush fund and other matters.

The books of the brokers are expected to be in Lenroot's hands by tomorrow at the latest.

Lenroot said no meeting of the committee had been called, but the matter will be placed informally before committee members.

Lenroot refused to confirm or deny that subpoenaes were issued for Harry Payne Whitney, associate of Harry F. Sinclair, Elmer Smathers, J. Philip Benkard, Harry B. Benkard and also the order clerk and office manager of J. P. Benkard and Company of New York.

Calls McAdoo Jury Packed.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—"The vital point, which the American public mind has really grasped," says the Wall Street Journal, editorially dealing with the case of McAdoo, "is that Mr. McAdoo's connection with Mr. Doheny was not primarily legal, without prejudice to his abilities as a lawyer, or even as a financier on his record at the treasury.

"It was clearly and nakedly political, and the distinction is vital. He took to Mr. Doheny, some months after he relinquished office, experience and information which he could only have had as a consequence of his great position in the very inside of the Wilson cabinet."

Referring to McAdoo's call to his supporters to meet and discuss the situation the editorial states "that nothing that his packed jury could do would make any difference in the public view of his relations with Doheny."

The Alaska Steal.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—John E. Ballaine of Seward, Alaska, and Seattle, has laid before President Coolidge his proofs that Secretaries Fall and Denby stopped the development of the great naval coal deposits in Alaska—the coal involved in the Ballinger scandal and other coal held for the use of the navy—since Denby turned these coal lands over to Fall at the time of the transfer of the naval oil reserves.

Railway Unions Aroused.

Ballaine has the support of the railroad brotherhoods in this matter, since he has convinced them that Fall-Denby policy has been one of deliberate sabotage of the government's railroad in Alaska and the discrediting of government ownership and operation of railroads. He has shown that the administration has cut Alaska off from the rest of the United States by refusing to furnish steamship connections between Seattle or San Francisco and the terminus of the railroad at Seward. The Guggenheims control the only shipping, and they charge freight rates several times as high as formerly were paid. The Guggenheims are slowly strangling Alaska. They hope to get hold of its best mineral deposits.

Ballaine says the records will show that as early as July, 1921, Fall began negotiations for the transfer of the Matanuska coal field to his control, and for a lease of this coal to private parties for 50 years. The lease never was made, but during the negotiations and since that time "misleading announcements, contrary to the official facts" as to the quality of the Matanuska coal have been given out by the offices controlled by Admiral Robinson and by Director Bain of the bureau of mines.

CAPITAL RIFE WITH RUMORS LINKING THE WILSONITES WITH OIL

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—In spite of Doheny's denial that Bainbridge Colby, the last secretary of state under the Wilson administration, got any of his money, the capitol is buzzing with rumors which link Colby with oil, and with the non-recognition of Mexico while he was at the head of the state department. Doheny's denial is understood to refer to the rumor that $500,000 was the price of protection of American oil interests against recognition of Obregon at that time.

Colby will be remembered as the secretary who excluded The Federated Press representatives from his "news" conferences, because they called attention to his attempts to irresponsibly color the press dispatches from Washington dealing with the Russo-Polish war and the chance of American aid to Poland, in the summer of 1920.

HERRIN WORKERS SAY "NEUTRALS" MASK K. K. K.'S

Vigilance Committees Are Part of Plan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 18.—The statement made a day or two ago by Glenn Young, deposed dictator, that "someone would pay for the murder of Cagle" has been followed by a quarrel between the anti-klan elements headed by Ora Thomas and the klan forces now under the leadership of Chief of Police Ford.

The situation is tense.

The grand jury has returned ten counts charging larceny and robbery against Young and his bail has been fixed at $20,000. Klan leaders say they expect Young to return to Herrin about the middle of the week.

The plans of the citizens committee, alleged to be composed of individuals who remained neutral during the recent conflicts, includes the formation of local vigilance committees and the resignation of Sheriff Galligan, who is known to be sympathetic towards labor and the anti-klan forces.

Labor men charge that the citizens committee is merely a new camouflage for the klan elements and that impartiality is impossible in a situation in which the klan insists on violating all constitutional guarantees in its war on its opponents.

Four companies of militia are still quartered here and in Marion. It is believed that they will stay until Thursday when the county supervisors meet to consider the program mapped out by the citizens' committee.

Birth of a Nation Operators Will Be Tried Next Week

Having been accused of being both a Jew and a member of the Ku Klux Klan Judge Henry Walker announced in Municipal Court yesterday that he did not think he wanted to try the cases of two men arrested in connection with the showing of the "Birth of a Nation."

The cases of two movie operators who were arrested for showing the anti-Negro, pro Ku Klux Klan picture, the "Birth of a Nation," were then transferred to Judge J. J. Rooney who issued the warrants on which the movie operators were arrested. The case was set for trial a week from next Wednesday.

Big Anthracite Strikes Threatening.

WILKES BARRE, Pa., Feb. 18.—Two general strikes are threatened in this district which will involve over 40,000 miners unless a settlement is reached by next Monday. 1,800 men were called out today. In addition, eleven thousand miners threaten to quit unless grievances of long standing are speedily redressed.

The entire working force of the Glen Alden Company will quit next Monday unless their grievances are adjusted. A meeting of miners' representatives will be held Saturday night to determine whether the call will go out for a general strike.

On the same night representatives of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre and Hudson coal companies numbering 25,000 miners will meet to receive reports from their grievance committees.

1,800 men at the Woodward Colliery of the Glen Alden Company went on strike on Feb. 14, because of the employment of a man who scabbed during the rail strike. Just as soon as he entered the mine the entire force walked out.

DE LA HUERTA'S LAST HOPE LIES IN ESTRADA'S ARMY

Fascisti Forces May Cut Railroad Lines

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 18.—Exactly two months after de la Huerta and his associates raised the standard of revolt in Vera Cruz, they abandoned the city and fled by sea to the Yucatan peninsula.

They will make their last stand where they can easily cross the border into Guatemala. But this by no means indicates the end of the rebellion, for the strongest of the two revolting contingents, that of Enrique Estrada on the western front has not been beaten decisively.

However, the battle for Esperanza station on the Mexico City-Vera Cruz line was very important. The rebels were completely routed. They tried to reform for the defense of Cordoba, but after a day and a night of fighting retreated again. Cordoba is the last mountainous place between the capital and Vera Cruz, the last place where numbers do not count for much, the last possible ambuscade ground.

Mountain Campaign.

This terminates the mountain campaign in which the superior numbers of the federals were partially compensated by the rebels' superior knowledge of the difficult territory. From Cordoba to the sea, ground is comparatively level. Open country fighting means victory for the larger force. That is why the rebels abandoned Vera Cruz, several hundred miles away, when the federals took Cordoba.

The financial importance of Vera Cruz to the government is incalculable. The government owes its employes here 49-odd days of pay, but with the opening of the country's principal custom house and export center all that will change.

The battle on the other front between Obregon, who is personally leading his forces, and Estrada is not a battle—it is a race. Estrada, with his superior knowledge of his own territory, is racing northward at full speed, trying to give the enemy the slip and thus circle over to the railroad lines that connect the capital with Laredo and El Paso. To cut these lines only for a few days would be to cut off supplies and injure the prestige of the central government.

Obregon Commandeers Jitneys.

The rebels are at no time far from the great railroad lines. But the federals are still nearer and thus far have been able to keep between them and the rails, without being able to get close enough to force a battle. In order to increase his speed in the race, Obregon has commandeered vast numbers of cannons (jitney busses) in the capital and is transporting his troops in them.

The executive committee of the central labor council of Colombia has expressed sympathy with the Obregon government in the present rebellion.

See Breadline, as South Carolina Men Lose Jobs

By JACK METTE
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

CHARLESTON, S. C., Feb. 18.—Conditions continue to grow worse here as hundreds of workmen are laid off. The United States navy yard, which normally employs about 500, has cut its force down to nearly 150 men. Other large industries are following suit, among them being Standard Oil, which is running far below capacity.

Hundreds of workmen, failing to find work here, are leaving the city. Many of them go to northern industrial centers, ignorant of conditions there. The railroads have been taking on a few men for the fertilizer season which was supposed to open Feb. 1, but so far very little fertilizer has been shipped.

Despite a recent government report that unemployment in South Carolina is on the wane, many citizens here predict a breadline shortly if conditions do not improve.

Amalgamation means strength!

Less and Less For Education, Is Policy of Industrial Lords, Who Want Workers To Be Mere Cogs

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

An industrial order in the United States which sets a higher value on increase in manufactures than on providing adequate educational facilities for its children is revealed in the U. S. bureau of education report by Professor F. H. Swift, University of Minnesota.

Swift finds the inequalities in educational opportunity glaring and ominous. In nearly every section of the country he finds the same story, inadequate housing, inadequate teachers' salaries and inadequate revenues.

The tremendous increase in dollar expenditure for public education since prewar days has nevertheless been insufficient to keep pace with rising prices. The country has been ready to increase its expenditure for manufacture more rapidly than for the production of educated citizens.

Conditions Getting Worse.

Swift's figures show that considered as a whole the average child in attendance on public schools in 1920 was not as well provided for as the average child in the prewar period.

In 1913 the country spent approximately $522,000,000 for its schools; in 1918, $763,000,000; in 1920, $1,036,000,000 and in 1922 (estimated, $1,526,000,000. But based on the decline in the dollar's worth the country acutally spent $84,000,000 less on public schools in 1918 than in 1913 and $4,000,000 less in 1920 than in 1913.

"The inadequacy of the expenditure in 1918 and 1920 becomes even more evident," Swift says, "when we discover that there were nearly 2,000,000 more children in average daily attendance in the public schools in 1918 than in 1913 and more than 2,500,000 more in 1920 than in 1913."

The following table shows the increase in the number of children in average daily attendance on public schools in the United States and the total expenditures for this purpose since 1890.

	Attendance.	Expenditure.
1890	8,153,635	$140,506,715
1900	10,632,772	214,964,618
1910	12,827,307	426,250,434
1913	13,510,643	534,058,580
1918	15,548,914	763,678,089

Between 1913 and 1920 the annual expenditure per child increased from $39.50 to $64 or by 62 per cent. During the same period the cost of living was increasing by more than 100 per cent.

Using such figures, according to Swift, scientific students are answering the cry that public education has exceeded all legitimate bounds and must be curtailed. He declares that school facilities must not be lessened but immeasurably increased. Basing his conclusion on a first hand study of nearly one-third of the United States he says that there is not a state in the union that is not financially able to place adequate educational facilities within the reach of every school child and to maintain a complete free system of public education from the kindergarten to the university.

Want Cogs, Not Thinkers.

Swift might have pointed out that the present public school system developed along side of modern commercialism and the factory system to provide workers with just enough education to become intelligent cogs in the machine. In spite of all the idealism which has been cast around it there has been no strong movement to extend education beyond the bounds necessary to develop an adequate supply of mechanics, clerks and technicians. And the reaction against the present public school expenditure of over $1,000,000,000 a year has come from the highest financial circles. Perhaps it means that the development of automatic machinery has gone so far that the need for intelligent human cogs is decreasing rather than increasing. As the country goes on toward highly organized mass production under the domination of absentee owners who govern thru trained technicians the propaganda against popular education may increase. A mere mechanical man is less likely to organize independently and declare a strike.

Minneapolis Labor Mobilizes to Fight Anti-Foreign Born Laws

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 18.—The Council for Protection of Foreign-Born Workers was organized here and started a systematic campaign to arouse the labor and other organizations of Minneapolis against the laws now pending before Congress, directed at the enslavement of the foreign-born workers.

The Council has adopted a resolution which is also being sent to all other organizations for endorsement, which states that by the anti-foreign born legislation "the employers hope to cow into submission by the threat of deportation and separation from their families, the foreign-born workers, who are the majority in such basic industries as mining, textiles, leather and meat packing, and thus prevent their being organized into unions and going out on strike," and calls upon all organizations of workers to unite to fight against the anti-foreign born laws.

Organize in Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 18.—Representatives of sixty-three Jewish organizations in this city met here this week and formed a division of the Council for the Protection of Foreign-born workers which is fighting the laws against registration and finger-printing of foreign-born workers, who are in and come to the United States. The Jewish workers organizations will combine with others for the formation of a City Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born which will carry on an aggressive campaign against the proposed laws.

HOUSING BILL PUZZLES NEW YORK SOLONS

May Need Philadelphia Lawyer to Interpret It

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 18.—The housing bill which was passed by the state legislature and is now awaiting the signature of the governor to make it law, leaves grave doubts in the minds of many assemblymen whether or not it applies to New York City. The language of the bill, which continues the present rent laws till June, 1926, is vague and many persons believe that it will be declared to be unconstitutional when brought into court.

All efforts of senators who wanted to amend the bill so as to make it apply specifically to New York city were defeated when debate was cut off and the bill put to a vote. The bill is so jumbled that it would be impossibe for a court to hold that part of the law was constitutional and others were not.

May Step on Hylan Corns.

In addition to not being clear about its application to New York city the bill may run counter to the Home Rule Amendment by specifying it applied to certain cities only.

The bill is so mixed, bungled, and jumbled that it will do nothing for the poor tenants of New York city who are hardest hit by the housing shortage, high rents and unsanitary conditions.

Princeton "Profs" View Censorship Barring Everything

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—It was too raw for 'em, and the faculty of Princeton University have adopted resolutions of protest. It's a bill for censoring history and this is the gist of it: "No history or textbook or reference book shall be adopted for use or be used in any of the public and private schools located in the state of New Jersey, which ignores, omits, discounts or in any manner belittles, falsifies, misrepresents, distorts, doubts or denies the events leading up to the American Declaration of Independence or those conducted with the War for Independence or any other war in which the country has been engaged, or which ignores, omits, etc., etc., the deeds of the noted American patriots. . . . "The Princeton faculty protests that nearly every one (the "nearly" is pleasantly conservative) made mistakes and this bill would prevent the use in New Jersey's public and private schools of statements made by Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln—yes, and Roosevelt. The opinions of our Presidents of their contemporaries could not be quoted."

Huertista Uprising in Mexico Cost the Federals 8 Millions

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 18.—It has cost the Mexican government approximately $8,000,000 and some 2,500 men killed to put down the de la Huerta uprising.

While there is a wide divergence of opinion as to the drain of the Fascisti counter-revolution on national resources, it generally is estimated by experts that actual cash expenditures have approximated 14,000,000 pesos ($7,000,000) plus a paper indebtedness, contracted directly as a consequence of the counter-revolution, approximating $1,000,000.

These figures do not take into account the loss of revenue resulting from the fascisti occupation of Vera Cruz and other ports and their ensuing appropriation of the funds collected there.

S. DAKOTA F.-L. P. CAN'T WAIT FOR THE C. P. P. A.

Urges Support of May 30 St. Paul Conference

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Feb. 18.—The South Dakota Farmer-Labor Leader, edited by Tom Ayres, Farmer-Labor candidate for United States Senator, in South Dakota, declares in an editorial in its Feb. 20th issue that the farmers and workers are going ahead in building for their own Farmer-Labor Party, in spite of the call for the July 4th gathering at Cleveland, issued by the conference for progressive political action.

The editorial is headed, "We Cannot Wait for You," and urges that workers and farmers send their delegates to the St. Paul conference, on May 30th. It reads as follows:

We Cannot Wait For You.

"The Conference for Progressive Political Action which met at St. Louis last week, decided to hold a national convention at Cleveland, Ohio, on July 4th, next to decide whether it would engage in a new political party enterprise.

"The inference, from the proceedings reported thru the press, is that if some person satisfactory to the sixteen standard railroad brotherhoods is nominated by one of the old parties, no new party candidate will be chosen. New party activity will be entertained only if a candidate on one of the old party tickets is nominated who is particularly objectionable to the railroad brotherhoods.

"This may be all right for the brotherhoods, but there are others interested in politics and these others will have something to say about the matter.

"Mr. McAdoo may be satisfactory to the brotherhoods, notwithstanding his oil smear, but Mr. McAdoo will not be agreeable to the farmers and other workers. The same may be said of Governor Smith of New York.

"The voters in the United States who have made the mark in politics are the fellows who began the organization of the Non-Partisan League in the Northwestern states, without consulting anybody but their own people. These voters are responsible for Shipstead, Johnson, Frazier, Ladd, Dill, Wheeler and Howell. The foundation for the election of these members of congress was laid before the railroad brotherhoods, thought it necessary for them to engage in politics. When they did go in they helped mightily, and it is to be hoped that they will look at the present situation in no narrow and selfish light.

Whatever they may conclude to do, however, the farmers and other workers are going to have a farmer-labor party, to which the brotherhoods will be welcome when they get ready to enter. On to St. Paul, May 30th!"

Workers' Education Is and Must Be Class Education

KATONAH, N. Y., Feb. 18.—"Workers' education is, and must be, class education, and its highest function is the emancipation of the class it serves," is the conclusion of the leading editorial in the current Brookwood Review, published by Brookwood labor college here. The Review explains its attitude by saying, "The employers may rant against talking in terms of classes. But let the workers consider the conditions of their lives, let them consider their submission to the whims of those who control their means of livelihood, let them consider the great gulf fixed between their own lives at the best and the lives of the parasites of modern society, and they can do nothing else but think in terms of classes."

Workers' Education.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Widespread revival of interest in workers' education is reported by Spencer Miller, secretary Workers' Education bureau, who has returned here after a tour of the country.

Miller says that the state federations of labor in Pennsylania, Colorado, California, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Wyoming, Oregon and other states either have, or plan to have, permanent state educational directors who cooperate with the Workers' Educational Bureau.

Many international unions have arrangements with the bureau for printing books and pamphlets, and for correspondence courses and other educational activities for their membership, according to Miller.

Baldwin Clips Payroll.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 18.—Despite the fact that last year was a record year, with gross sales approximating $102,700,000, Baldwin Locomotive works will work on a 25 per cent basis, employing only 7,000 men.

Nineteen twenty-three was the best year in its history, with the exception of 1918, which was a war year. Shares reached their highest at a value of $262.50 per share. After paying a 7 per cent dividend, over seven millions will be added to the surplus account.

Shareholders on the inside congratulate the company, while on the outside the unemployed hope for a return to "good times.'

Pot and Kettle, Eh!

Detroit Party Members Issue Challenge to their Chicago Comrades in Daily Sub Drive

The Workers Party of Detroit has challenged the Workers Party of Chicago to a contest to see which district can get the most subscribers for the DAILY WORKER by March 15th.

That is part of the answer of Edgar Owens to the inquiry of the business office of the DAILY WORKER about the method Owens used to get $65 worth of subs for the DAILY WORKER in a week.

The rest of the Detroit method consists in organization. There has been organized in Detroit a "Boost Our Press Club," which makes it its business to get subs to the DAILY WORKER. The drive for subscribers will go on till March 15th and then Detroit will give a banquet at the House of the Masses to their sub-getters. The branch of the party which gets the largest number of subs during the drive will be presented with a silk banner with the emblem of the party and the name of the branch on it. Bill Dunne, joint editor of the DAILY WORKER, will be the main speaker at this dinner and will present the banner to the hard working branch.

Branches and individuals are both considered members of the "Boost Our Press Club." For every sub secured and forwarded to the DAILY WORKER thru the Detroit district office will count a certain number of points. Subscriptions from members of the Workers Party will count one point for every $1 and subs from non-party members will count three points for every $1.

The individual who gets the greatest number of points will be given $10 in gold at the March 15th dinner, the second highest will receive $5 in gold. The five next highest will each get a book of their own selection. The worker in each branch of the party who gets the largest number of points will also be given a book that they are privileged to select themselves.

The second and third highest comrades in each branch will each be given a free ticket to the dinner.

William Reynolds now leads the DAILY WORKER boosters in Detroit with 200 points. J. Ferris is second with 166 points and a lot of determination. Next in order are D. Treschak, 141, O. Hanesiu, 101, M. Rapp, 88.

It is easily seen that Edgar Owens' method of getting subs for the DAILY WORKER consists in getting a bunch of live sub boosters on the job and encouraging them.

For several weeks he has had the business office of the DAILY WORKER under the impression that he was doing all the work himself.

"Without waiting to see if Chicago accepts, our challenge on DAILY WORKER subscriptions, we in Detroit will consider that the race is on," writes Owens. "Tell those people around 166 West Washington St., to get busy if they don't want to be disgraced. We mean business here."

New York Workers Party Develops the Membership Drive

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—In the short period of its existence the Workers Party has proven itself to be a real living revolutionary organization participating in every struggle of the workers, educating and organizing the American working class for the final overthrow of the capitalist system of exploitation and the inauguration of a sane system of society.

Every working man who would not be a lackey of the present social order must become a member of the Workers Party and help free himself and his class from wage slavery by abolishing the wage system.

A special membership drive meeting has been arranged for Thursday, Feb. 14, at 8 p. m., at Stuyvesant Casino, 142 Second Ave., where prominent speakers will tell of the work of the Workers Party and explain why every worker should be a Communist and join the Workers Party.

Every class conscious worker in this vicinity must attend this meeting.

Working Class Women Open Fight in New York Against Rents

Get unity thru the Labor Party!

LABOR PRISONERS ARE EAGER FOR DAILY WORKER

"Last Issue Worn Out," Says Correspondent

"I have seen the first issue of the DAILY WORKER and have been sighing ever since to see the other issues," writes a class war prisoner. "The issue I saw was not all there because the other labor prisoners here had worn it out almost, before I saw it. Is there no way we can receive it regularly here?"

The DAILY WORKER business office has been receiving dozens of such letters from almost every prison in the country. One prisoner in California writes that twenty men will read the DAILY WORKER if it is sent there.

The business office has finally worked out a plan whereby political and class war prisoners will receive the DAILY WORKER regularly, if the other readers of the paper will help. Here is the plan. If any reader of the DAILY WORKER will send $3 and the name of a political prisoner to whom he wishes to have the paper sent we will send it for one year. That is just dividing the cost between the readers and the business office of the DAILY WORKER.

Because we want to have the DAILY WORKER reach as many prisoners as possible we are anxious to send it to as many different prisons as possible. If you don't know any political prisoner to whom you particularly want the paper sent, send us $3 and we will see that one political prisoner is put on the mailing list and at least five others will be given a chance to keep in touch with what is happening outside.

We have a complete list of all the political and class war prisoners in the country and we know they will all be glad to see the DAILY WORKER and know that there are a few workers on the outside who still remember them.

Postal Wage Is $1,000 Shy; Raise Asked by Meeting

Two thousand postal service employes demand a raise in wages for the postoffice staffs thruout the country at a mass meeting held in a church building at the corner of 33d street and Indiana avenue Sunday.

Clerks and carriers now receive a minimum of $1,400 and a maximum of $1,800 a year. They want a $2,000 minimum and a $2,400 maximum, with a provision authorizing payment of $2,500 to some special clerks and $2,600 to others.

Solomon Cohen, president of the Chicago union of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, stated that more than 300,000 postal employees would receive the increases if the measure was passed by congress.

The average pay of the postoffice employees, said Cohen, is now about $1,000 under the amount indicated by labor bureau statistics as necessary to preserve a decent standard of living.

There are approximately 9,500 postal employees in the Chicago district.

FRENCH FRANC IS FALLING IN SPITE OF M. POINCARE

Premier's Plan Does Not Halt Panic

PARIS, Feb. 18.—The French franc collapsed to a record low today, falling to 23.07 to the dollar shortly before noon.

When the bourse opened, amid scenes of tremendous excitement and activity in foreign exchanges and securities, the franc was within ten centimes of its previous low mark of 23.20.

Passes the Record Low.

Within a few minutes, further decline was in evidence and at 11:30, while traders struggled frantically in the corridors and on the steps of the bourse, the franc passed its record low and went to 23.07. The pound was at 95.50.

The new decline came in the face of Premier Poincare's strong program for strengthening of national finances and was attributed in part to opposition to the program.

The Socialists, in a meeting yesterday, condemned the 20 per cent increase in taxes before it became effective and outlined a series of measures of their own to rehabilitate the franc.

Senator Loucheur, leading industrialist and the man who has tried several times to solve the reparations question by direct negotiations with Hugo Stinnes and other German industrial leaders, addressed a meeting of the republican federation at Cambrai, pleading for drastic measures to uphold the franc.

Loucheur Has Hopes.

A new fall can be prevented by the government, Loucheur believed, favoring the appeal to French holders of thirty billion francs in foreign securities from whom he believed it is possible to obtain at least five billion francs for action in the leading exchange markets of the world.

In event the appeal does not bring results, Loucheur said, "the government could apply coercive measures.

"Moreover, it is certain that there are at least two billion francs gold hidden in France. The government should force disgorgement of this fund for use in defense of the franc.

The New York Money Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—French franc closed at a new record low in the foreign exchange market after slumping all day. The final quotation was 0414 off 0023. Sterling demand closed at 42; lire 0428½ off 0005; Belgian francs 0356½ off 0017½ marks 4,650,000,000,000,000 to the dollar; Yokohama yen 45.125; Russian chernovetz 4.63.

Hesselberg Got Off Easy.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Held guilty of violation of a city ordinance which requires a certain minimum temperature in rented dwellings, Max Hesselbert, a landlord, received a gentle slap on the wrist in city court and was fined $5. According to Mrs. Clara Depew, the complaining tenant, she complained to Hesselberg "50 to 100 times" of the badly heated condition of her apartment but to no avail.

City health inspectors testified they found the temperature as low as 45 degrees in the apartment on various visits. The city ordinance requires a minimum heat of 70 degrees during the day and 60 at night. In imposing sentence the judge expressed the opinion that Hesselberg deserved a fine of $100 for freezing his tenant.

Ohio Farmers Dead Broke

TOLEDO, O., Feb. 17.—Farmers east of the Mississippi are as hard up as their western brethren. In Ohio where diversified farming as recommended by President Coolidge, is the rule, the average farmer is forced to sell his stock to keep alive until the next crop is harvested.

Scores of farmers near here are selling. The country papers are full of advertisements like the following taken from one of them:

HAY AND STOCK SALE

Tuesday, Jan. 29, 1924

80 Pigs and shoats; 8 sows and pigs; 3 milch cows,
2 fresh; 50 tons of hay, mostly alfalfa
Terms: 6 to 10 months at 6% on bankable note;
3% off for cash

The farmer who inserted this ad has been on the land all his life and has a well-located watered farm with fair crops last season. He says:

"We have had less than $10 in cash in ten weeks. The farmers cannot buy each other's stuff except thru these sales and by giving notes to each other which will mature when the next crop falls due. I have not seen a gold note or any bill larger than $5 for over a year and, of course, we [illegible] no gold at all."

GERMAN UNIONS FIGHT LUTHER'S WAGE CUT PLAN

Finance Minister Is Tool of Industrialists

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 18.—German trade unionists of every political faith are up in arms over a letter written by Minister of Finance Luther, to the minister of labor, protesting against awards of the latter's arbitrators by which wages paid by private industry is higher than the wage paid for similar work in government services. Luther claims that this makes it difficult to proceed upon the program of economy upon which the government has embarked. He says:

"I would suggest that a decree be issued under the state-of-emergency act, by which the activities of the arbitrators are to be restricted in that they are not to make awards beyond the wage-and-salary scales paid by the federal government, except under certain specified conditions."

The workers are indignant that a department of the government should thus move to the assistance of the bosses, against whom, even without government interference, the trade unions are waging an almost superhuman struggle. Insolent and arrogant as never before since the revolution, employers have used every occasion and pretext for reducing wages, employing workers only part-time, and firing thousands of them. It has remained for the federal minister of finance, say the workers, to furnish a "patriotic" reason for paying the workers starvation wages.

Workers Angered.

In this connection it is recalled that Luther was chief mayor of the city of Essen, in the Ruhr valley, before he became cabinet minister, and that the big industrials of Essen openly boast that no city government can exist save by their grace.

Employers Harsh.

The industrials were quick to take the hint given by the minister of finance. The Association of German Employers' societies published a declaration indorsing the minister's point of view. "Private industry," says the psuedo-patriotic declaration, "must avoid everything that could depress the spirit of the state officials and employes, whose lot it already a difficult one." But the cat is let out of the bag when in the next sentence the declaration admits: "Private industry is, however, fully persuaded—and this finds expression in its wage policy—that the whole German nation is in a state of transition and that the last word regarding the conditions of work has not yet been spoken."

As the trade union leaders point out, this last sentence, taken in connection with the whole policy adopted by private industry in recent weeks, means that they are planning to reduce wages further.

Labor Minister Objects.

The finance minister's letter proved too strong medicine even for the conservative Minister of Labor Brauns who came from the Catholic trade union movement. He declines to follow Luther's suggestion, saying that the very thing that Luther professes to be after, namely that of getting German industry going again, would be defeated, because the purchasing power of the people would be immeasurably reduced by such a leveling downward of wages.

Imply Bankers Gave Aid to Big Gang of Check Forgers

Police here today were on the trail of a band of 50 check forgers, said to have fleeced Chicago banks of more than $200,000. Three men already are under arrest.

The band, headed by Aaron Moshiek, known by detective agencies as an expert penman, is said to have operated thru bootleggers' syndicates, their checks passing thru so many hands before they reached banks that it was difficult to run them down.

Several bank officials, police said, are under surveillance in connection with the band's operation. Mosheik has not been apprehended.

Work for Jobless at Union Wage, Is Demand in Britain

(By The Federated Press)

LONDON, Feb. 18.—The growing protest against unemployment in Britain has centered in a campaign, supported by the council of the Trade Union Congress and the Unemployed Workers' committee, for immediate action on the "unemployed workers' charter." The six points of the charter follow:

First—Work of effective maintenance for all unemployed and increased government assistance, to be provided thru the trade unions, all relief being completely dissociated from the poor law administration.

Second—Immediate development of government schemes for employment to absorb the unemployed in their own trades as trade union wages.

Third—Establishment of state workshops to supply the necessary service or commodities to meet the requirements of the government departments.

Fourth—Reduction in the hours of labor sufficiently to absorb the unemployed workers, the normal working day or week to be regulated by the requirements of industry.

Court Ruling May Wipe Out Bonuses for the Bricklayers

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Building contractors who pay bonuses in order to secure bricklayers during the busy season must continue to pay them during the period the building is in course of construction, ruled Supreme Court Justice Ford, arbitrator between the Mason Builders' Association and the executive committee of the New York Bricklayers' Union.

Under this decision builders who paid $14, $15 and $16 per day to get bricklayers when there was a scarcity of skilled labor, must continue to pay it. Ten large buildings now in construction must pay the extra wages until the building is completed.

The employers feel that the decision may have the effect of stopping the payment of bonuses, for the time being. They also state that the coming summer will find many employers eager to pay the bonus in order that they may have sufficient skilled labor to enable them to complete their contracts.

It Admires Our Vigor

"The Nation's" Comment on the DAILY WORKER.

"THE DAILY WORKER, born and published in Chicago, may live and prosper after many another paper is forgotten, for it has several sources of strength that many of its ill-fated contemporaries have lacked. It is the organ of a cohesive and highly disciplined organization, whose members will support it as a matter of party loyalty. It is a propaganda sheet; its news and its editorials are frankly "colored"—and their color is red. It makes no efforts to please various factions, no pretense at being a "general" newspaper. It is the voice of the members of the Workers Party, and its money and its readers will presumably be drawn from that group. Such are the sources of its weakness. In so far as it refuses to cater to the non-Communist workers, it will also fail to win them. We so need a labor daily in these days of high journalistic mortality and low journalistic standards that we welcome the existence of the DAILY WORKER and admire its straightforward vigor; but we hope that it will yield to the human demand for general and non-partisan news with propaganda relegated to the editorial pages."

SOVIET RUSSIA WILL WELCOME 9,000 DUKHOBORS

Members of Sect Quitting Canadian Farms

WINNIPEG, Mant., Feb. 17.—Because "economic conditions here are not good for the farmer, and we are just making money for men who take advantage of the fact that we are simple people who keep our word and do not go to law," 9,000 Dukhobors are planning to leave Canada and go to Russia. They are selling over 200,000 acres of land to an American syndicate.

The Dukhobors, who are a religious sect that does not believe in war, came to Canada from Russia more than a quarter of a century ago. They came here to escape serving in the Czar's army. During the late war Canada forced many of them to serve in her army and the fact that Soviet Russia recognizes the right of religious sects to refuse military service is a strong factor in their decision to return to Russia.

The first party expects to leave a Canadian port shortly on a chartered ship for Odessa. The rest of the colony will follow later. They will take with them several million dollars in cash for the purchase of farm machinery. The Soviet government will give them all the land they can use for one-sixth of the crops. The emigrants will pay their own way to Russia.

St. Louis Postal Workers Demand Boost in Wages

(By The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Three thousand citizens met in public mass meeting here and adopted unanimously a resolution endorsing legislation for increased pay for postoffice employes. The resolution sets out that inadequate pay and unsatisfactory working conditions are lowering the efficiency and morale of the postal service.

"The salaries of the postal employes of the United States are inadequate to properly rear their families in accordance with the standards of American living," the resolution declares. "Conditions within the service are such that it is becoming increasingly difficult to retain an efficient personnel."

St. Louis' Postmaster Alt, favoring the resolution, said he is surprised that postal service is so good with existing meager salaries. He pledged his support to the move for improved wage rates. Former Congressman Bartholdt said if the public realized present conditions in the postal service it would force action by congress.

More than 3,000 employes are employed in the St. Louis postoffice. They are organized and affiliated with the Central Trades and Labor union. This effort for better pay has the undivided support of organized labor.

Senator Phipps Uses Job to Guard His Power Monopoly

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Senator Phipps, of Colorado, once treasurer of Carnegie Steel, is chief owner of the Southern Sierra Power Co.

He is collecting extortionate rates for power and light from the people of the southwest.

The annual appropriation bill for the interior department, now in the senate, came over from the house with an item of $250,000, recommended by the reclamation service and the budget bureau, for construction of a hydro-electric power plant at the Yuma reclamation dam in Arizona. This project would smash Phipps' monopoly in that region. The bill went to a committee in which Phipps is a member, and when it emerged the item of $250,000 had been cut out. Another similar item, which would put a crimp in another private power monopoly in Idaho and eastern Washington, was likewise eliminated in that committee.

Democratic senators from the regions affected took the warpath. They declared that this was a bit too raw, even from Phipps, and they would tell the country about it.

SOVIET RECOGNITION MEANS TRADE REVIVAL SAYS SHIPPING HEAD

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—That the United States government may soon be compelled to follow the lead of Britain and Italy in recognizing Soviet Russia is the inference drawn from a statement made by Leigh C. Palmer, president of the fleet corporation of the shipping board. "Recognition of Russia by the powers will cause a distinct revival in world trade and put many languishing marine concerns on their feet" declared Mr. Palmer. American businessmen are already secretly cursing the folly of Charles Evans Hughes and his anti-Russian policy. Before long they will curse openly and a movement to force the whiskered secretary's hand is looked for.

Granite State R. R. Workers Still Out After 18 Months

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 18.—Nineteen months, a long weary strike, and not yet settled. Since July, 1921, when the shopmen struck against the union wrecking railroad companies, those in Concord have refused to go back. They stuck, ninety per cent of the seven hundred that went out. They got jobs at anything, stone cutting, quarrying, weaving. And others left the city.

Even a year after the strike began, the men had the never say die spirit. "We won't go back, until we can go back like men." And they didn't.

The Boston and Maine management told the men that they would not have anything to do with them; they would come back at the terms given to them, or not at all. But the leaders have been putting the men off with promises, of an early settlement and it looks as tho Godfrey Cass was talking about the Concord leaders, when he said: "Marner was in the right about a man's putting off a blessing; it falls to somebody else."

Many of the strikers feel that the strike has been a fizzle, due to the separation of the workers into too many unions; the betrayal by Grable, the capitalist lickspittle; and the pussyfooting of the railroad union officials. They point to the need for amalgamation of all the railroad unions, and show that now all the shopcrafts meet together in Concord every Sunday night. They claim that if they can meet together, they can decide together.

Even the scabs are being laid off; this is their reward for betrayal. The same thing is happening in the Bellerica shops, the main ones on the B. & M. line.

Independent Union of Lumber Workers Seeks Affiliation

(By The Federated Press)

VANCOUVER, B. C., Feb. 18.—At the recent annual convention of the Lumber Workers' Industrial Union of Canada held here, the union voted for affiliation with the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada as a part of its united front program. The convention decided that the L. W. I. U. would adhere to its original policy for the organization of workers engaged in the timber industry thruout the dominion on an industrial basis without regard to race or color, skilled or unskilled.

The system of piece work and the contract system were condemned, but the union decided that so long as a worker is actually engaged in the lumber industry he is eligible for membership in the union regardless of whether or not he is compelled by the boss to work under the piece work system.

The convention voted to appoint a committee of three members to meet and interview the officials of the Vancouver branch of the I. W. W., No. 120, to reach an understanding as to organization activities among the lumber workers of this province and to provide a means for cohesion between the two unions.

Recognition Must Come Before Trade Pact, Says Litvinoff

MOSCOW, Feb. 18.—In future Russia will not sign commercial treaties with countries prior to their de jure recognition of the Soviet government, declared Maxim Litvinoff, deputy minister of foreign affairs. Great Britain, Italy and Norway already have recognized the present government.

M. Litvinoff would not take a definite stand in connection with the United States, tho he was firm in his statement that European countries would have to accede to the terms. He drew a distinction between trade agreements implying de facto recognition and commercial treaties. He added also that the United States has not made an approach on the subject.

"Some countries go on muttering about old debts," M. Litvinoff said. "We refuse to consider any preliminary condition to commercial treaties. Countries first must recognize us de jure, then we will discuss matters with them."

DAILY WORKER IS BARRED FROM FOLSOM PRISON

Heavy Censorship Over California Bastille

REPRESA, Calif., Feb. 18.—A new rule has been made at Folsom prison that will make it impossible to send The DAILY WORKER to the fourteen political prisoners there. The new rule is that no books, magazines, or newspapers may be sent to the prisoners even tho they come directly from the publisher. The only gift allowed under the new rule will be money, and the warden will "use his judgment" in permitting the prisoners to spend that money.

This is obviously an act of revenge on the part of the warden, who has been charged with the unmerciful beating of a political prisoner, Louis Allen. In order to protect the warden, Governor Richardson has made some changes in the prison board that will give the warden a majority that will stick with him under any circumstances.

Folsom is the "hell hole" prison of California. When Hiram Johnson was governor of this state, he had Richard Ford and Herman Suhr, labor prisoners, who are serving life, sent to this prison so that their spirits might be broken.

The new rule about reading matter will affect the political and labor prisoners more than it will any other class as they were great readers.

* * *

Other Prisons Still Open.

The business offices of The DAILY WORKER want to make it plain that only Folsom prison has a rule that forbids the sending of newspapers to the prisoners and that there are over a hundred class war and political prisoners in other prisons. The business office will send The DAILY WORKER to any political prisoner for a year if a reader will send $3 for the sub; that is, just half the regular price.

If you know a political prisoner send him The DAILY WORKER for a year to keep him in touch with the outside world. If you don't know any politicals send the business office $3 and they will send a political prisoner the paper for a year and inform you to whom your gift was

To Provide the World's Workers with Common Tongue

In order to eliminate one of the main obstacles to the international solidarity of the working class an organization was formed to provide the workers with a common language for use in international relations without, however, abolishing the existing languages.

At its last international congress in Cassel, Germany, this organization called the International Communist Ido Federation adopted the following declaration of principles:

1. The International Language to be used exclusively for the international relations, without abolishing neither the nations or the national language, is a characteristic postulate of the proletarian society and movement. All efforts to materialize it in the capitalist bourgeois society is utopianism and abuts necessarily upon intellectual sport and sterile sectarianism.

2. The practical materialization of the International Language becomes possible in the same degree as the political power of the proletarian struggle for power increases in the world. Therefore, the proletarian movement for International Language must work and fight in the closest contact with the proletarian movement for the conquest and conservation of the political power, i. e., with the Third (Communist) International, on which it depends spiritually and politically.

3. The proletarian movement for the International Language has as its aim the realization and practical adoption of the International Language in society. It does not work for any certain system against another, and will practically propagate and practice the International Language such as it is and will be presented by its science. ("Mondolinguismo.")

4. Because among all existing systems of the International Language the language IDO today offers the greatest guarantees for constant and easy adaptness, at present and in future, to the progress of science the proletarian movement for the International Language takes as a base for its propaganda and tactics the international language IDO (scientifically perfected Esperanto) and constitutes its fighting organization under the name of the International Communist Ido Federation (Kifintern).

Crippled Soldiers Protest Plan to Reduce Pensions

(By The Federated Press)

VIENNA, Austria, Feb. 18.—An unusual spectacle was presented here recently when 300 wounded ex-soldiers entered the magnificent parliament building to protest against an order of the government by which the benefits paid to them by the government are reduced.

What lent color to the demonstration was the fact that among the invalids were cripples who had to be dragged into the building by their comrades, since they were unable to move alone, and that there were many ex-soldiers on crutches.

Police Frame-ups Hit Snag in Mo. Supreme Court Rule

By MARTIN A. DILLMON
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Police officials cannot break the law to enforce it, says a decision of the Missouri supreme court, handed down in three liquor cases. Convictions on evidence obtained by the police unlawfully will not be sustained by the high court, the opinion states.

In one of the cases the court orders the release of Alfred Owens, convicted in Stone county of possession of a bottle of whisky, because he was convicted on evidence obtained by officers searching without a warrant. Justice White wrote the opinion and reviewed several liquor cases in various parts of the country. The trend of argument, the judge says, in favor of admission of illegally obtained evidence of violation of the prohibition law is that it is necessary and the only way to enforce the law—that it is necessary to violate the law to enforce it.

"If peace officers are rewarded for breaking the peace, what more potent influence could induce people generally to hold law in contempt and to break thru legal barriers which stand across the path of their desires?" Judge White asks.

"If a rule obtains," the judge continues, "that an officer may enter any home and search any person or place without a warrant—if he, vaingloriously sensible of the little brief authority with which he is invested—is encouraged to arrest and search because he suspects someone of some unknown crime, and is rewarded according to his own success in discovery; if he is encouraged to hunt and ferret on a chance of hitting on something suspicious, a system of espionage would ensue characteristic of those countries where the sanctity of the home and inviolability of the citizen are unknown."

Anti-Militarist Play Is Latest Berlin Sensation

(By The Federated Press)

DRESDEN, Saxony, Germany, Feb. 18.—Ernst Töller's anti-militaristic play, Hinkemann (Limping Man), is the most talked about theme in Dresden today. After having proved a great success in Leipsic, where it first went over the boards, it was to be staged in the state theater at the capital, Dresden.

But in Dresden the reactionaries are in control. Dresden is the headquarters of the military dictator, General Mueller, and everything red is anathema to the powers here. Accordingly, when Hinkemann was announced a group of nationalists decided to break up the first performance and to make later performances impossible. They bought seats in various parts of the house and soon after the opening of the play hisses and cries of shame were heard, and the 100 per cent patriots started to sing nationalistic songs.

After breaking up the first performance, they next addressed letters to every member of the cast, threatening to shoot them on the open stage in case they continued to produce this searching denunciation by the noted revolutionary dramatist. The play has therefore been cancelled for the present.

Amoskeag Textile Barons Attempt Evidence Suppression

MANCHESTER, N. H., Feb. 18.—The lawyers for the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., textile barons, strove strenuously to keep out of the evidence damaging testimony to their propaganda. The Amoskeag is trying to have its taxes reduced, altho their present rates are low, and the farmers bear the brunt of the taxation. The main point stressed by the labor-hating Amoskeag has been the fear of southern competition.

But the lawyers do not want this question discussed; they objected to the introduction of evidence that not all textile interests fear southern competition. The evidence, however, was introduced; it was shown that Henry F. Lippit of Manville, R. I. and H. C. Meserve, president and secretary respectively, of the National Cotton Manufacturers' Association had testified at other hearings that they did not fear southern competition.

Not only southern competition but also the 48-hour week are brought into the hearing. Both issues were involved in the textile strike last year.

THE PRINCE IS LUCKY; HE HAS NO COUNTRY

All Locked up; No Place to Go

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Prince Michael Dmitri Obolenski—sometimes known as plain Harry Gerguson—self-styled scion of the Romanoffs and an enigma to police chiefs thruout the middle west, has become a man without a country.

Authorities at Ellis Island, where he is held, are unable to deport him because they haven't any place to send him.

The prince was arrested three months ago and sent to the island for deportation, because he entered this country without a passport, swimming ashore—or so he says—from Ellis Island one dark and stormy night. For a year previous he had roamed the United States, debonair, immaculate, with his tale of royal relationships disseminated in the cultured accents of Oxford and Eton and his too apparent poverty a merry jest for his friends, in whose polite amusement he never failed to share.

The department of labor at Washington directed that the prince be deported and the prince took out a writ of habeas corpus. Now, from his chilly confinement at Ellis Island whence, lacking $1,000 for bond, he cannot escape, Obolenski or Gerguson as they somehow prefer to call him there defies the authorities.

Not Prejudiced Against Truth.

Send him if they will, but where? He possesses no passport whatever. It will do no good to dump him upon the sunny shores of France, or of England, or even of far off Russia; in fact, the authorities admit it would be highly improper.

For the present, in answer to questions Obolenski says he is an American citizen. Nobody believes that; but then, nobody believes anything he says. In answer to questions, he admits he is not telling the truth, adding he would be pleased to do so if it would serve his interests.

Nova Scotia Coal Miners Return to Work, Strike Over

By JOHN ROBUR
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

MONTREAL, Feb. 18—After negotiations stretching over three months the Nova Scotia miners have secured an increase in wages over those in force last year. Work and negotiations went hand in hand from November till the middle of January, when the British Empire Steel Corp. locked out the men, and ordered a reduction of 20% in pay. Negotiations were renewed after a weeks' break, and later carried from Cape Breton to Montreal, where the head office of "Besco" is situated.

Datal men, underground, 30 cents a day; datal, surface men, 25 cents a day; shooters and loaders and contract men, including helpers, 7 cents a ton; local contracts, 6%; hand pick miners, 8 cents a ton. At the same time the price of domestic coal to the miners in increased from $2.25 to $3.60 a ton.

The final adjustment between the company and the men came about after intervention by a representative of the federal department of labor, E. McG. Quirk of Montreal.

Strike of Stage Hands Coming in San Francisco

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 18.—This city is faced by the probability of a strike of all stage hands, motion picture operators, theater musicians and other stage employes, unless the theaters grant a 14 per cent wage increase at once. By the rules of the Federated Stage Crafts, all allied trades must walk out if the stage hands quit, and the result will be the darkening of nearly every theater in San Francisco. A 5 per cent raise was offered and refused.

The managers are evidently preparing for a siege, as evidenced by the refusal of the owner of the Curran theater to allow the orchestra to play. "That was an experiment to prove that we can get along without an orchestra," he explained, "and if necessary we'll get along without stage hands." The musicians recently asked for a 11 per cent increase and accepted a compromise of 8 per cent.

MANY FIRETRAP SCHOOLS FOUND IN NEW YORK CITY

Show Conditions Rotten in 40 Buildings

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—New York, like Chicago, has scores of fire trap public schools. Sanitary conditions and fire hazards in many of the schools here are as bad as those described in the DAILY WORKER survey of Chicago schools.

The joint committee of education has just completed a survey of more than forty schools where they declare conditions are rotten. The report points out lack of fire prevention, bad lighting, overcrowding, and unsanitary conditions.

The survey completed is the fourth made by the committee. The committee was able by repeated check-ups to get needed repairs in some schools. In the fourth survey the same schools were visited but a new group of thirteen schools were added.

The survey indicated that while the forty schools which had been surveyed four times were getting repairs, the thirteen school buildings added in the last survey were in very bad condition. The committee said that this indicated that an effort had been made because of publicity but no real concern was manifested about the general condition of the schools.

"Schools surveyed for the first time this year where the committee feels there is urgent need for better condition are:

"Manhattan—P. S. 50: Menace to health, fire protection nil, sanitary conditions bad. P. S.—26: Sanitary facilities poor, everything in bad repair, factory next door a bad situation. P. S. 33: Shocking sanitary conditions, lighting bad, surrounding streets dangerous.

"Brooklyn—P. S. 23: Disastrously overcrowded, bad general repair. Annex to P. S. 17: Disreputable old ferry boat, in worst possible condition; sanitation especially bad. Annex to P. S. 33, formerly annex to P. S. 17: Old structure built around court, unsafe wooden balcony and shaky wooden stairs the only exit leading into court, which in turn has but one small exit—possible fire trap.

"Bronx—P. S. 14: Serious overcrowding, lighting bad, no play space. P. S. 18: Artificial lighting bad, lacks modern sanitation, garbage is dumped opposite school by neighbors and left several days at a time."

Catholics Fight Unions.

FULDA, Germany, Feb. 18.—At a meeting of Catholic bishops recently held here, the threat of excommunication was hurled at workers who dare join the free trade unions of Germany, which are frankly Communist or social-democratic.

"If Catholics, despite warning, and altho membership in another organization (i. e., a Catholic union) is possible for them, persist in remaining members of the free trade unions, they are to be barred from receiving the sacraments."

Coolidge Classes Child Labor with Booze.

Classing the exploitation of the 2,500,000 child workers in this country with dope and liquor, Strikebreaker Coolidge, completely dodged the issue of the abolition of child labor in his first message to congress.

He is for a "limitation of child labor," "for purposes of national uniformity." The fact that the millions of children are in jeopardy of life and limb in dangerous mines, shops and factories is of no concern to the anti-labor president.

Coolidge's recommendations to congress are entirely in harmony with the actions of the United States Supreme Court on the two occasions in which they threw out two national anti-child labor laws.

Anti-child labor legislation, declared the Supreme Court, was a matter for state action, and the federal government should not intervene in regulations affecting the life and limb of the children. Coolidge declares that the carrying out of any law would be a question for local consideration plus the "power of enforcement in the influence of public opinion."

Experience has shown that even with definite anti-child labor laws, in many states, providing for appropriations for factory inspectors, such laws were not carried out.

The first need as expressed by Coolidge for his magnanimous opinion that child labor should be treated as booze, is that it "would secure greater continuity of production." In other words, would benefit the factory owners.

Coolidge's message definitely proves that the oppressed children can expect nothing from the boss's government to relieve their aching backs from immature labor.

Samuel Gompers' agitation against child labor has resulted, not in getting the masses of workers themselves interested in the abolition of this admitted evil, but precisely in the statement of Coolidge.

More than ever, all working class organizations should intensify their activities against child labor, as no help can be expected from Washington. The present administration takes into account primarily the cost to the manufacturers and to the finance capitalists, and considers not at all the bitterness of the children laboring under the blistering sun in the South, or the unhealthy factories in the North.

Middle Class Wakes Up.

Schenectady Labor Hits Taxes.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Feb. 18.—The Schenectady Trades Assembly has gone on record in favor of the reduction of the income tax on small incomes and as opposed to the bills now before congress which would reduce the tax on huge incomes.

THE ROSE-BUSH

By HERMINIA ZUR MUHLEN

(Synopsis: A beautiful rose bush, owned by a rich lady, in a big, white house, had talked with her friend, the Wind. The Wind had told her how the rich people own everything and never work. The rose bush had decided to go on strike and not look beautiful for the benefit of the rich lady.)

Then followed bad days for the Rose-bush, for she had decided not to drink any water, that she might cease blooming. When her friend came with the water-pot she drew her little roots close to herself, that no drops might touch them. Ah, how she suffered; she thought she would faint. In the day-time the sun shone, and she became more thirsty every hour, alwrys longing more for water. And, at last, at evening came the longed-for drink, but she dared not sip the full draught, she had to turn away from the cool pervious liquid, to thirst again. After a while she thought she could not endure it. But the Wind came flying, fanning her, comforting her, singing softly and gently, "Be brave, be brave! You will conquer!"

Day after day the Rose-bush gazed at the gleaming white house in which lived people who had everything they wanted, and then looked at the street, where others passed by with thin, pale faces that were tired and sad, and this brought new strength to her heart.

She became constantly more sick and more weak; her arms hung down feebly, her blossoms dropped their petals, her leaves became wrinkled and yellow. The man who tended her watched her sadly and asked, "What is wrong, my poor Rose-bush?" and he tried every remedy he knew of to help her. But all in vain. One morning, instead of a handsome, blooming Rose-bush, he found a miserable, withered, dead bush.

That could not remain there, the withered branches and flowers spoiled the handsome garden. The gracious lady commanded that the Rose-bush be thrown out. As the man dug her up, the Rose-bush gathered her remaining strength and whispered beseechingly, "Take me home, please, please take me home!"

The man fulfilled her wish. He planted the Rose-bush in a flower pot and took her to the poor, small room where he lived. His sick wife sat up in bed and said, "Ah, the poor Rose-bush, she is as sick as I am, but you will nurse us both back to health."

The withered leaves and twigs moaned, "water! water!" And the man understood them and brought in a jar of water. The Rose-bush drank. Oh! what delight it was! Eagerly her roots sucked up the water, the delicious moisture passing thru all her branches gave her new life. The next morning she could lift up her branches; the sick woman was as happy as a child and cried, "She will get well."

And the Rose-bush really got well. In a short while she again became so beautiful that the poor little room was as fragrant as a garden. The pale cheeks of the woman became rosier every day, her strength was returning. "The Rose-bush has made me well," said she, and all the flowers on the Rose-bush glowed deep red with joy when she heard these words.

The man and his wife were kind people. They gladly shared the little they had, and carefully broke off some roses to bring joy to tired people in other lonely rooms.

The roses had other magic powers; the rose-bush, in her days of struggle and suffering, had learned the songs of the wind. Now her flowers sang them very softly for their friends, "Keep together! Fight! You will conquer" Then the people said, "How strange! The perfume of the flowers brings us new strength. We will fight together for a better world."

But to the little children the roses sang in a tender, loving voice: "Little comrades, little children, when you are grown up, you will no longer stand sadly before the gate. The whole world will belong to those who work, the whole world!"

SAXONY TOILERS VOTE HEAVILY FOR COMMUNISM

Treachery of Socialists Defeats Workers

DRESDEN, Feb. 18.—In the municipal elections which took place in Saxony last month the Communist Party doubled, and in some cases tripled, its votes of the last elections, and it made these tremendous gains under the sabre of General Seeckt's dictatorship, for the Communist Party has been officially "dissolved" by the military dictatorship now ruling Germany, and is an outlaw party.

The social-democratic party suffered a disastrous defeat in the elections, losing in many places as much as 50 per cent of its vote of the last elections. The capitalist parties won the elections with a combined vote that was greater than the total number of votes received by the Communists, the social-democrats and the independent socialists.

Socialists Lose.

In one sense these elections mean a reversal of the last elections, in that the capitalist parties have come out ahead. The treachery of the social-democrats in sabotaging the revolution, in playing into the hands of the capitalists, has discouraged many workers and especially the lower middle class elements and has thrown them into the arms of the capitalist parties. But on the other hand tens of thousands of workers have flocked to the Communists, they have given a clear answer to the provocative measures of the white dictatorship. The bayonets of the Reichswehr did not deter the workers of Saxony from piling up votes for the "dissolved" Communist Party.

In Dresden the Communists received 39,500 votes as against 27,000 in the year 1922. The social-democrats received 81,000 votes as against 93,000 in 1922. The gains for the Communists and the losses for the social-democrats are not so marked in Dresden as in other cities, such as Leipzig or Chemnitz which are more industrial. In Chemnitz, for instance, the votes of the Communists were almost equal to those received by the social-democrats, as the Communist Party received 31,000 votes and the social-democratic party, 35,000 votes. In Leipzig, the Communists received 69,000 votes, the social-democrats, 91,000. Of those elected, 24 are of the capitalist parties, 7 are democrats, 7 are of the German people's party, 19 social-democrats, 14 Communists and 2 independent socialists. In Zwickau, 8 Communists were elected, as against 3 in the last elections.

Last Capitalist Bulwark.

The social-democratic traitors have felt the wrath of the masses, for the masses realize that the social-democratic party is largely to blame for the military dictatorship now in Germany. The masses feel that the social-democratic party is the last bulwark of the capitalist class, blocking the proletarian revolution which will end the present misery in Germany. The social-democratic party has suffered a crushing defeat, and it is now well on the road to complete dissolution. The masses are leaving the once mighty social-democratic party and are flocking to the Communist party, tho many are still deluded and have thrown their support to the capitalists. However, there are signs that even the lower middle class elements are realizing that the only salvation is for all non-capitalist elements to accept the leadership of the Communists in the fight against capitalist rule, which is keeping Germany in the abyss of suffering. It is becoming clear to them that there is no middle ground.

Workers Gain Hope.

The situation in Germany is very discouraging when the Reichswehr entered Saxony and drove out the labor government. On top of that the Communist Party was officially "dissolved" all over Germany by the military dictatorship. The Communist Party was outlawed by the order of General von Seeckt. The German working class suffered a defeat in Germany. But the elections in Saxony bring back hope, give back courage to the Communists to lead the fight against the rule of the bayonet. The workers have shown that they have not lost confidence in the Communist Party, and that they are ready to give more than votes, that they are ready to give their blood in the proletarian revolution which is inevitable in Germany. The German workers are not crushed. The municipal elections in Saxony are an indication that the German working class still has the undying will for revolution.

PITTSBURG, Kans., Feb. 18.—The Pittsburg United Trades and Labor Council passed a resolution at a recent meeting calling for a united labor front in the political field. The resolution favored immediate recognition of Russia.

The resolution said in part: "Be it resolved that this body go on record as favoring action on the part of labor toward forming a plan for a solid front on the political field. And that such action be extended to take in all parties and factions of farmers and labor organizations opposed to turning our government over to corporate interests."

By FREDERICK KUH

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—The international loan to Japan, the bulk of which will be floated by Wall Street, as reported in The Federated Press, will be placed on the market this week and will probably total about $250,000,000. The deal is stated to be the largest venture in financing ever undertaken, beyond internal government loans.

The share of American banking houses will be divided between J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City bank, the First National bank, and lesser monopolists of credits. An agent of the Morgan group has been engaged in conversations with London financiers, with the result that seven British banking corporations have been enlisted in the enterprise. Kengo Mori, a financial delegate of the Tokio government, has been in New York, concluding the transaction which will recast international relations and transform the foreign policy of the United States government.

Informed observers here assert that this colossal investment of American private capital in Japan will cause a precautionary speeding up of construction in United States naval yards. It is thought likely, moreover, that America's naval and military contingents in China will be reinforced, as a hint of the government's determination to safeguard these augmented American investments in the far east.

It may be expected, then, that the ordinary American taxpayer will soon feel the effect of this loan in increased expenditures for the naval and military establishments. To this effect must be added the implication that the government at Washington is prepared to defend by armed force if the emergency arises, the privileges of Wall Street abroad.

It is generally believed that chances of a German loan here are diminished, now that the American market is to be saturated with the issue of Japanese bonds.

Kink in Judge's Brain Shown in Beanery Decision

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Federal Judge Faris has just handed down an injunction against the local waitresses' union which follows a peculiar line of reasoning. In granting the writ the court held that altho there was no evidence to show that unlawful acts had been committed the union had no right to "disturb" the business of the petitioner, as no strike was in progress. The petitioner was the Benish Restaurant Co., Inc.

The company operates a notoriously non-union cafe downtown and recently opened another establishment in the west end, and the union girls have been picketing the latter place to advise the public that it is an open shop. The injunction restrains further picketing. Said the judge: "An injunction cannot be issued when a strike is in progress, but in this case the evidence shows there was no dispute between the employers and the employes."

UNEMPLOYMENT MOUNTING IN ILLINOIS STATE

Only Half Applicants Are Placed

By LELANDS OLDS

(Fed. Press Industrial Editor)

The extent to which irresponsible employers move tens of thousands of workers like pawns from one part of the world to another and then leave them stranded to look for jobs in an overstocked labor market, is revealed in the January employment report of the Illinois department of labor.

The labor surplus which has been developing in the state since last June jumped in January to the highest point since March, 1922. During the month more than 20,000 persons applied to the free employment offices for jobs while places could be found for less than 10,000. Officially the state as a whole showed 166 persons registered for each 100 jobs reported vacant. In December 146 persons applied for each 100 jobs.

Laid Off Workers.

At the same time the number of factory employes in the state fell 1½% below the level of the previous year. Reports from 1,192 employers with more than 40 per cent of the total factory workers of the state on their pay rolls show a decrease of 1.8 per cent in the total number of employes. Since the peak of employment in June these concerns have laid off 6½ per cent of their workers. If they are typical of Illinois industry as a whole this indicates that over 51,000 factory workers in the state have lost their jobs since the middle of 1923.

Probably the most important change during the 30-day period, says the report, has been the collapse of car building. On top of the break in December in this industry the decline of January left only about three-quarters of the workers on the pay rolls of 14 reporting employers.

Seasonal Employment.

Employment changes of a seasonal character include decreases of 4.3 per cent in the number employed by brick concerns and of 5 per cent in the furniture factories. Also increases of 4.2 per cent in the number of employes of millinery establishments and of 34.8 per cent in the women's coats, suit and skirt industry. In the men's clothing trades there was a slight increase following the 7.6 per cent increase during December.

Other important changes include reductions in force amounting to 3.4 per cent in the steel industry and 4.5 per cent in the slaughtering and meat packing industry contrasting with a 7 per cent increase in the number employed by automobile and accessory concerns.

Farmers Can't Compete.

The report warns against attributing too much importance to an employment decline and a glutted labor market in January. It points out that the overstocked labor market at a time when employment is still fairly high is due to an expanded supply coming from the following four sources: (1) Farmers have been financially unable to bid against industry for labor and as a result former farm hands have joined the ranks of unskilled labor in the cities; (2) coal mines in Illinois and adjacent states have shut down throwing hundreds out of work. Many miners have been driven to the extremity of seeking work in the large cities; (3) Negroes attracted north by improving industrial conditions are thronging free employment agencies in Chicago and East St. Louis which are the terminals of southern and southwestern railroads; (4) Mexican laborers have come in large numbers to Chicago and the vicinity where they are being used to do the unskilled labor in Chicago plants.

The migration during the year from these four sources, says the report, has so swelled the supply of labor that when industry contracted the visible extent of unemployment in some of the larger cities approached the condition that exists during a depression.

Teachers in High Schools Fight the Two-Shift System

The high school teachers are opposed to the shift system in the schools and the long day because both are detrimental to scholarship, Carl A. Hoffman, representing the high school teachers told the school plan commission.

He said the high school teachers are in favor of smaller high school classes where the pupils can get better attention from the teachers.

William McAndrews, new superintendent of schools, said he favored large high schools of from 2,500 to 3,000. His chief reason for favoring large schools seemed to be that he thought them cheaper to build.

Brockton Cases Coming Up.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18. — The cases of 170 strikers arrested and "convicted" of the crime of picketing in Brockton, Mass., are to come up on appeal the latter part of this month. If they will be good and plead guilty they have been assured that their fines and their imprisonment sentences will be halved. But they will not so plead because to do so would be in effect to admit that picketing is a crime.

Well! Well! Senate Will Probe Price of Bread! Oil Can

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18. — The Senate has instructed the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the price of bread and activities of the Bread Trust.

A resolution of Senator LaFollette, calling for a full inquiry, was adopted without a record vote.

In a preamble to the resolution LaFollette charged that "a huge merger of baking companies" had made a national monopoly of bread production.

"Prices are artifically maintained at excessive prices in many cities," the resolution said.

Senator Wadsworth (N. Y.) objected to the statements in the preamble and LaFollette agreed to strike them out so that the body of the resolution could go thru.

The resolution as passed authorizes the commission to go into the sale, production and distribution of bread and report fully its findings to the Senate. It also authorizes investigation of efforts at price fixing.

The resolution sets forth these charges:

The price of bread is being maintained at substantially the level of war prices, while wheat has declined to pre-war levels.

Bread made of American flour is seling in England at an average, retail price of 4 cents a pound, as compared with an average of 8.7 cents in the United States.

Excessive prices have caused a decrease in consumption of bread in the United States amounting to 44 loaves per capita annually.

Bill Haywood in Moscow Lectures on I. W. W. History

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER.

Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press

MOSCOW, Feb. 18.—With the object of drawing into Russian life the foreigners living in Russia, keeping them informed about events in Russia (few foreigners here can read the newspapers), and acquainting them with the revolutionary progress in their own countries, the Central Immigrants' club has been formed in Moscow. There are separate sections for the various languages.

The Anglo-Saxon section has been active for about three months conducting lectures and classes. The 70 English speaking immigrants at the Amo automobile factory in Moscow have had the opportunity of studying Russia under the auspices of the section. It is intended to hold classes in Marxian economics as soon as classrooms can be found.

Every Sunday night the Anglo-Saxon section holds a meeting which is addressed by a speaker in English. These lectures are open to the public and admittance is free. For instance, there are lectures on Russian industry and the crisis by the acting editor of Izvestia; by Stewart, delegate to the Third International from Great Britain; by Bill Haywood on the history of the I. W. W.; by Peluso on fascism in Italy.

Pension Scheme on Montreal Tramways to Start July 1st

(By The Federated Press)

MONTREAL, Feb. 18.—July first is the provisional date set for initiation of the pension scheme which has been under negotiation between the Montreal Tramways Co. and local officers of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes. The pension is to be based, not on the wage of the individual, but on the average wage paid to all employes.

On this average each pensioned employe will get 2 per cent for each year of his service. For example, if he has worked for 25 years and the average wage is $1,500, his pension will be $750 per annum. The age at which the pension begins has not been fixed; the company has proposed 60 years of age; while the men suggest any age after 20 years' service. The plan provides for half pay during sickness. If an employe dies, the widow is to get $500 if he has served three months, plus $100 for each year's employment up to a maximum of $2,500.

STEEL TRUST MAY BE POINCARE'S FRENCH TEAPOT

Radical Gives Reason for Sickly Franc

PARIS, Feb. 18.—A miniature Teapot Dome squirted its political poison on Premier Poincare when a radical orator mounted the tribune in the chamber of deputies and waving a letter in his hand, revealed the reason for the tottering franc which is now giving Marxian shivers to French financiers.

The incriminating letter was from one of the branches of the Comite des Forges, the French steel trust, to its customers demanding payment in pounds sterling for orders.

Humbert de Wendel, the head of the trust that controls two-thirds of the steel production of Europe and is considered mainly responsible for the occupation of the Ruhr, rose to reply to the radical deputy. He explained that he did not keep the pounds sterling acquired by export, but sold them for francs with which to pay his workmen.

This statement infuriated the left side of the chamber and a rough house took place. It was pointed out that the French millionaires were following in the footsteps of the German magnates, Herren, Stinnes, Wolff and Thysen, in selling abroad at dollar and pound sterling prices.

As Poincare is as closely connected with Wendel as Calvin Coolidge is with Fall, Denby and Daugherty, this scandal will, it is believed, hasten the French premier's downfall. This is the first time a scandal of this kind occurred in French industry. It is not surprising that the franc should totter if those who own France show no confidence in the stability of their own currency.

If the premier succeeds in putting thru his taxation bill he may last until the elections in the spring, but it is the general opinion that as soon as the French workers and peasants get a chance to vote on his government they will hand him his hat.

Industrial Democracy

We are indebted to the well-known organ of New York and New England financiers, Barron's Weekly, for telling us the whole truth and nothing but the truth about the sundry schemes of employe ownership and profit-sharing so vigorously advocated by the cultured and unlettered apologists of the capitalist system.

In a rather frank editorial discussing the fact that 65 per cent of the employes of the Columbia Gas & Electric Company own $36,-500 shares, Barron's Weekly points out a few of the incalcuable advantages to the employing class thru this clever arrangement.

The editor lets the cat out of the bag in this fashion. First of all these employes do not own "any such percentage (65%) of the capital stock." Translated into every day English this means that the majority of the employes are not permitted to own the majority of the stock. The advantage sought for by the capitalists in this deal is disclosed by Barron's Weekly in the frank confession that "the incentive to good service is obvious." This is a concise way of telling us that this fake stock ownership scheme pays the capitalists because it ties the workers more hopelessly to plants they do not own.

Especially illuminating is the statement: "it is clear that the remaining 35 per cent of employes represent the corporation's casual and unskilled labor." No doubt this is at least as true as the other evidence submitted by this financial expert. No one would expect the machine laborers, the least skilled workers who are invariably the lowest paid employes, to be able to put aside any money for investing in the stock of their bosses. These workers have the time of their life making both ends meet. It is plain that one of the outstanding advantages of "employe ownership" is the further intensification of the differences and conflicts arising between skilled and unskilled workers. In this respect all schemes of industrial democracy and profit-sharing tend to divide the workers and to increase dissension in their ranks.

Perhaps the best revelation yet of the fraudulent character of all industrial democracy schemes under capitalism is given by the editor in his statement that the workers investing in this stock "are connoisseurs of the product and would be the last people in the world to subscribe to a policy of counting noses. There is no better democracy than this, because it secures its true rights and recognizes its own limitations."

Barron's Weekly hails this adventure as the best solution for industrial conflicts and describes it as full proof so far as the demogogue is concerned. We welcome this conclusion. We are especially thankful to this oracle of high finance for unmasking this oft repeated attempt to blind the workers and condemn them to the present system of exploitation and degradation.

A Morgan Library

J. P. Morgan has made the announcement that he has turned over his father's library estimated at $7,000,000 to a board of trustees composed of his family and two others who are to maintain it for the use of scholars from all parts of the world. With the library goes an endowment of $1,500,000.

Use of the library will be limited to "scholars." The public cannot be trusted with the manuscripts on which the late financial agent of the British government and the Vatican and the overlord of American business spent part of the fortune wrung out of the sweat and blood of the American working class. Perhaps the workers might learn something detrimental to the system which enabled Mr. Morgan to accumulate priceless treasures while the millions starved mentally as well as physically.

Morgan will be extolled by the fuglemen of big business for his "public spirit" and "civic consciousness." But this gesture of generosity is only a sop to divert the attention of the workers in those days of glaring corruption from the big robbers in Wall Street to their errand boys in Washington.

Washington is not the safest place in the world today for a man without a coat of mail or a clean conscience. He is liable to run head foremost into a squirt of corrupt oil as in the case of Senator Greene, of Vermont, into a stray bullet from a bootlegger's gun. The accident may result in another investigation that will eclipse the Teapot Dome and send a few presidential aspirants into the discard.

Capitalism and the Home

Writing in the Berlin Mittagzeitung, one Fraulein Bittner points out that "matrimony in Germany has degenerated into a mere exchange of financial references and an inspection of the home the woman can offer." "The marrying game in Germany," the writer continues, "has become a parody on love, but it is a tragic parody after all. It is a pity to see the young man flee from his natural companion in life and rush into the arms of a woman with a furnished flat."

In England, with an estimated surplus of 2,000,000 women since the war thinned the ranks of the men, marriage is now undertaken by the male, as a rule, only when the bride-to-be can bring relief from the struggle for a livelihood.

In France marriages for convenience have been an established custom for a long time and the war has increased the predilection for these alliances.

The scarcity of eligible males and the severity of the economic struggle in the three countries mentioned is paralelled in every central and western European nation.

The one sure-fire method of arousing enmity towards the movement for the abolition of capitalism has been to picture capitalism as the founder and upholder of monogamous marriage based on love, as the defender of the sanctity of the home against the supporters of revolutionary programs, who have proved that marriage, like other institutions, adapts itself to the prevailing form of production and that monogamous marriage is private property's particular arrangement for the marital relationship.

No one will question the statement that in Europe—the birthplace of capitalism—the love motive as the basis of marriage has been almost eliminated.

Actual marriage—compliance with the religious or legal forms—is probably the exception rather than the rule in industrial centers unless one of the parties is economically independent. Home as a corollary of marriage has lost its meaning for millions and millions of workers.

In the examples cited above the males marry, not the females with whom they agree to live, but the property that the females possess.

In well-to-do circles this has long been the custom; a custom more or less ignored thru a conspiracy of the press and pulpit. The acknowledgement that it has now been recognized as a fact in the lives of masses, is causing widespread alarm among the self-appointed guardians of the morals of the poor, adds weighty proof to the contention of the Communists that capitalism, bankrupt economically and politically, is also bankrupt in all avenues of activity—legal, social, and ethical.

Black Shirt Democracy

Now and then the ruling class and its agents slip up and allow the mask to fall off their vain pretensions to democracy. Whenever the class conflicts become acute the employers frankly and openly throw overboard all their hypocritical prayers and paeans for rule by majority.

It appears that the rise of the British Labor Party, despite its program of caution and moderation, is causing some far-sighted English capitalists quite a bit of concern. Already we are face to face with plans for an organization of the British capitalists along the lines of Italian Fascism.

It is natural, of course, for the privileged classes of all countries to organize and fight for the defense of their vested interests and the perpetuation of their privileges. But what is especially important about the new maneuvers of the English Fascisti is their open, avowed intentions to crush the labor movement once any working class political party should win a majority of the working population to its program.

The English Fascisti are boasting that they do not worry about the present situation because the Labor Party is not yet a majority Party. At the same time they are blazoning on high that they will put the Labor Party in its place once the day arrives "when socialism may possess a working majority in parliament."

Anglo-Saxon democracy? What of the great inherent love for constitutional methods with which the English people are supposed to be born? What of the almost biological revulsion to violence that we have so often been told the Anglo-Saxons are blessed with by the heavenly powers above?

The threat of the English Fascisti to ride rough-shod over the working class once it becomes conscious of its being the majority and proceeds to act as such politically, reveals the whole truth about capitalist democracy. As long as the workers are blind to their role in society and millions of their class help support the capitalist control of government and industry, they will be let alone and the rule of such democracy will be holy. But once the workers become aware of their class interests and attempt to rid themselves of their exploiters, then rule by majority is no longer democratic, then all the empty pretences at peaceful methods are discarded, and the signal is given for an open assault on the workingmen along the whole front.

The program of the English capitalists is the program of the capitalist class the world over. Our own democracy-worshipping employers will pursue exactly the same policy that the English privileged class is resorting to.

THE THEATRE

By D'FERRIER

THE most disappointing thing about "We Moderns" is that there are no moderns in the play. While the young intellectuals, represented in the play, affect to despise even Bernard Shaw as being old-fashioned, in times of stress they are proved to be only parrots of radical thoughts which they have heard others voice and for which they are themselves unwilling to make any sacrifices. For letting these youngsters, who at first repudiate with scornful contempt the old moral, political and sociological conventions of their parents' generation, be illogically made, by artificial stage devices, to see the justification of the older beliefs, it is hard to forgive the playwright, Israel Zangwill. The ideas of a man, who believes to a certain extent that the great war was waged by the people to preserve the world for democracy, are made to triumph over those of his son, who, until his unexplicable change of heart, has laughed at the decadent creeds of the other. The ending is, of course, a sop to the smug, middle class audiences, to which a play must appeal in order to be a financial success. But, the aims and ideals of the youngsters, while in this case proven to be not sincere, are so brave and tender that it fills one with unholy rage to see them frustrated in so cheap a manner.

Zangwill has manufactured a villainous seducer, necessary to the outcome of the plot, put a few pseudo-intelligent phrases into his mouth, and then called him a modern. This is so obviously a dishonest stage trick to make the play popular, and so unfair, that it rankles.

But, despite the plot, the play is very worth-while. There is much cleverness in the dialogue, epigrammatic and punning, and the cast is most noteworthy, indeed. Helen Hayes, as Mary Sundale, the youthful, babbling daughter of the family, does nothing to destroy the suspicion that she is one of the most talented of the younger generation on the American stage—altho a more felicitous part than this could be found for her. In the scene where she is compelled, against her will, to have harsh words with her mother, whom she believes to have been stricken, she is most convincing, altho the scene itself is rather falsely written in that—played as it is—the mother could hardly have remained oblivious of the tension in the air. For this unreality we can, however, in no way blame Miss Hayes.

O. P. Heggie, Kenneth Mackenna, Isabel Irving, Mary Shaw—in fact everyone in the cast—are most praiseworthy, and the play has lost nothing in the manner in which it is staged. It is being presented at Cohan's Grand Opera House.

Something Dangerous On Broadway.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—United States Attorney Daugherty is paying no attention to "Beggar on Horseback," a Broadway comedy that is turning 'em away. But he ought to.

Audiences of hardboiled eggs love it only because it makes 'em laugh at America and things American. They laugh a dangerous kind of laugh, deep and unreserved. The sound waves must be flowing all over the country from this unseemly laughing, and they must be doing incalculable damage.

"Beggar on Horseback" unmercifully kids the yellow press; it unmercifully satirizes the modern American attitude toward art, towards money, towards respectability. And, Oh Boy! how the tough Broadway eggs and the spectacled highbrows and everybody laugh!

Black Denver Post Pot Shocks the N. Y. Times Kettle

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—The senate committee's exposure of the unsavory affairs of the Denver Post and its editor, Bonfils, connected with the oil scandal, has had a peculiar echo in New York journalism.

At a public meeting of the Foreign Policy Association here last week, the editor of the New York Times, Adolph Ochs, spoke effusively of the high moral standards maintained by the American, as contrasted with the European press. American newspapers, he declared, are immune to temptations of bribery, to which European journals frequently succumb.

The Denver Post disclosure, following upon the Times' editor's eulogy, placed this dignified New York organ in an uncomfortable position. The Times is now obliged to admit, editorially, that the senate revelations of corruption in a section of the American press, are "both plain and damaging."

It is interesting to observe the moral which the Times draws from this little experience. The great New York daily has nothing to say concerning the cesspool in which a "reputable" American paper is shown to have wallowed. The Times is shocked and pained at this "reflection upon the Denver editor's intelligence," meaning, of course, that Ochsian morality can overlook everything except the unpardonable sin of being caught with the goods.

Advertising THE DAILY WORKER

FOR the first time in America, the English speaking workers have a newspaper which is fulfilling all of the newspaper needs of the working class. During the month which has passed since THE DAILY WORKER was first issued, thousands of letters have come from our readers telling us how much they are enjoying the paper and how enthusiastically workers everywhere are receiving it. THE DAILY WORKER is just the kind of paper which workers have been looking for, and wherever there are intelligent workers who have an understanding of their own interests, THE DAILY WORKER is meeting with a hearty reception.

Making THE DAILY WORKER Known, Greatest Problem.

Because THE DAILY WORKER has merited the name of the greatest labor paper in America and because it is just the kind of newspaper which the workers need and desire, there ought to be at the very least a quarter of a million readers, getting THE DAILY WORKER every day. Of course THE DAILY WORKER is a long way from having such a circulation, but the only reason why THE DAILY WORKER hasn't a circulation running into the hundreds of thousands is that most of the workers in America don't know about it. Advertising our paper is the most important task which DAILY WORKER boosters and readers can perform. If that task is performed there is nothing in the world that can stop THE DAILY WORKER from increasing at an enormous rate and within a very short period, taking its place as the determining influence in the life of the American working class.

If THE DAILY WORKER had a million dollars to spend for advertising, that amount of money could be profitably spent in bringing it before the American workers. But of course THE DAILY WORKER has no such sum; in fact it can afford scarcely any expense for advertising at all. However, THE DAILY WORKER has an advertising asset which is potentially worth many times a million dollars; that is the advertising which THE DAILY WORKER readers and boosters can give if they understand the importance of the matter. To drive home this point, is the purpose of today's Power Column.

Talk it Up.

From time to time, we have carried an ad in our paper headed "Talk it Up". We hope every DAILY WORKER reader has carried out the requests which that advertisement made: to talk about THE DAILY WORKER everywhere, to neighbors and friends, shopmates and fellow unionists. Of tremendous importance is this "word of mouth" advertising. Thousands of workers can be reached by this method who can be reached in no other way. Those who are regular readers of THE DAILY WORKER, who find the paper a benefit to the working class have a duty to perform in informing others less fortunate than themselves about the daily newspaper which carries with it so much of the welfare of American workers. This form of advertising has more value than any other kind. Manufacturers and merchants would pay thousands of dollars to be able to secure it. We readers and boosters of THE DAILY WORKER need do nothing but make up our minds, need go to no trouble or expense, we have only to carry out an obvious and easy task and we have that which is of immeasurable value to any capitalist business undertaking. Talk up THE DAILY WORKER.

News Stands and Dealers.

Of course there are thousands of workers who seldom if ever come into contact with the militants. In the course of our activity in behalf of THE DAILY WORKER we must not forget these; they can be reached even if it is more difficult to get to them. One of the best methods in which this "untouched-by-radicalism" section of the working class can be reached is by placing THE DAILY WORKER on the news stands and in stores where newspapers are sold. To do this requires a little time and effort and in the larger cities some little organization. But it can be done as the results achieved by some of THE DAILY WORKER boosters in various sections of the country have shown. Those who would like to render a great service to THE DAILY WORKER and the working class are asked to write to the business office for details regarding this matter.

Y. W. L. and Junior Groups.

Another method which can be successfully used in bringing THE DAILY WORKER to the attention of the large masses of workers is by having the paper sold on the streets by newsboys. One boy calling out THE DAILY WORKER on the streets is worth a dozen news stands carrying the paper. Particularly the Young Workers League and its junior groups can co-operate most effectively with THE DAILY WORKER in this respect. One or two or three live young comrades in every city, selling THE DAILY WORKER on the streets can render a tremendous service to the labor movement and at the same time those who carry out the work can earn good money doing it. Militants who have sons in school can make them into splendid young rebels by encouraging such activity, to say nothing of the service they will be rendering THE DAILY WORKER and the movement. We particularly recommend this matter to the consideration of branches of the Workers Party, the Young Workers League, and City Central Committees. THE DAILY WORKER will be more than glad to render full co-operation and assistance to those who wish to carry on this kind of activity. A post card or letter requesting full details concerning this matter addressed to THE DAILY WORKER will bring an immediate response from us.

Bundle Orders.

During the time of the Weekly Worker, many of its readers were in the habit of ordering regular bundles for sale at union meetings, mass meetings etc. We want to encourage the continuance of this practice. Naturally most workers cannot take a daily bundle and dispose of the papers. But almost every worker, especially those who did take bundle orders of the Weekly can and should take a bundle of THE DAILY once a week. Selling these papers at union meetings and other places where workers meet is wonderful advertising for THE DAILY WORKER. We will be glad to accept orders for regular shipment every Saturday to all those who wish to handle them, to charge at the regular wholesale rate of 3½ cents per copy and to give credit to bundle order agents for all unsold copies.

Get Them to Read; Then to Subscribe.

We have set forth some of what we believe to be the best methods to use in giving publicity and advertising to THE DAILY WORKER. Of course such is not their only purpose. To get new readers for THE DAILY WORKER is in itself giving our paper the best opportunity to fulfill its mission. From the financial point of view however, as well as from the viewpoint of propaganda and education to have these new readers get THE DAILY WORKER only occasionally is not satisfactory. We want the workers to read the paper every day, to become themselves one of the army of DAILY WORKER boosters. First get workers interested in THE DAILY WORKER, then get them to read it, then get them to subscribe.

What methods do you think will best help make THE DAILY WORKER grow? What methods have you tried successfully? Write to the Power Column so that others can profit by your experiences.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

There are so many scandals emerging from the Washington cess pool these days that it takes all one's time to keep track of them. A public robbery that in odinary times would draw a streamer headline is liable to find itself tucked away among the death notices. The looting of a million or so is considered small stuff. Such is the fate of the discovery of a nation-wide counterfeit plot involving officers of a large federal reserve bank allied with leaders of the Chicago and New York underworld. It was buried in an obscure corner of the Sunday papers. Only a few million dollars were involved. There is surely some incentive to make good under capitalism. Perhaps this is what the capitalist propagandists have in mind when they say Communism would take away our incentive.

There are others who profess to believe in Communism but dread its coming. William Reynolds, of Detroit, member of the Workers Party, approached one Frank Seidel, a member of the Proletarian Party, for a subscription to the DAILY WORKER. Mr. Seidel declined, saying he got all the news of Russia he wanted from the capitalist press; he declared that he knew what to believe and what not to believe. He further stated that workers who become too interested in Communism were unhappy. Not wishing to lay himself open to an attack of revolutionary enthusiasm he refused to subscribe to the DAILY WORKER.

If the war veterans demanded honors instead of a bonus, things would be so much easier for Calvin Coolidge and for the ex-soldiers. The easiest decoration to secure is a cross of some kind, from the Iron Cross to the Double Cross. If Sergeant Jake Ellex does not engage in the junk and pig iron to set himself up in business and supply the needs of a respectable trade for the first six months. Hardly a nation in Europe big or little but has kissed and decorated Jake. The following nations have added to his junk pile; France, Italy, Serbia, Montenegro, England and the United States. When this hero takes to the street with his jewelry on, he rattles like a two year old Ford on the way to a Hobo picnic.

The official organ of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, also a socialist (yellow) paper, has a lengthy editoral on the Indianapolis convention, in which it competes with the slimy Oneal in heaping abuse on the radicals but regrets that the convention did not show the same spirit of toleration to Howat that Gompers showed William F. Dunne at the Portland convention. One of the biggest things, says this renegade socialist, ever done by the American Federation of Labor was to allow Dunne the floor at the convention in order to reply to charges that he was a rebel. Comment on the rantings of such a political pervert would be an insult to the intelligence of our readers and a waste of time.

Louise Lawson, another "Broadway Butterfly," met her death under mysterious circumstances. The papers talk of "wealthy men" being involved. Millionaires perhaps! Some time ago another woman of easy virtue met her death in New York. It was learned that a man of millions, son-in-law of Plute Stotesbury of Pennsylvana fame, financial associate of J. P. Morgan, was in the habit of paying "Dot" King, the murdered girl, one thousand dollars a visit. The millionaire was not arrested. He was invited to walk into the office of the district attorney. The case is now forgotten. The millionaire is still at large. Other millionaires are spending the millions produced by the millions of workers in sweat and blood, on the White Ways of the great cities. Capitalist morality! The whole social system stinks in the nostrils of civilization and its hypocrisy is by no means the least obnoxious part of it. Detectives with the brain development of infants go around arresting young children who happen to become interested in the radical movement and the papers squawk about "the red menace" while murder, rape and vice flourish unpunished beneath their very noses.

225,000 Workers Defy McDonald Regime

DOCK STRIKE SHUTS EVERY BRITISH PORT

225,000 Workers Quit Jobs, Want 50 Cent Raise

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Premier Ramsay MacDonald's reply to a question concerning the attitude of the government to the dockers' strike that has closed the ports of Great Britain is taken here to mean that the Labor Party government is no more sympathetic towards the strike weapon than governments that have preceded it.

Amid hearty cheers from the opposition benches the premier stated:

"The government will not fail to take such steps as are required to secure the transport necessary, and has already set up the nucleus of an organization. May I add an expression of hope that nothing be said or asked here to make difficult the only thing that really matters—a settlement of the dispute."

The skyrocket ascent of food prices has also brought action from the government in the form of an official cabinet communication which says:

"The cabinet has had information from various parts of the country that meat and other prices are being raised from 33 1-3 to 50 per cent. There is no reason for this increase except the power of profiteers to extract from the public unjust prices. The cabinet hopes this notice will have the effect of stopping these increases, but in the meantime it has asked that law officers consider the powers of the government in this matter and draft such emergency measures as may be necessary to prevent exploitation of the consumers owing to the present strike."

Despite this threat prices continue to rise and the Meat Traders Association has announced that "the retailers are compelled to charge the public more owing to the increase in wholesale prices.

Full force of the strike began to be felt today. Hundreds of ships from all quarters of the earth docked and lay idle, facing the prospects of seeing cargoes rot in their holds, unless the strike is settled. Outbound ships were unable to load cargoes and take on coal.

Labor Minister Shaw and his committee were to meet again today to consider the situation.

The stevedoring companies are recruiting blacklegs for the docks which the strikers are picketing. It is an almost foregone conclusion that the attempt to move cargo will result in violence as the population of the seaport cities is overwhelmingly in favor of the strike.

The government, nevertheless, is completing its preparations for cooperation with the stevedoring companies.

The tieup of shipping is complete and only about fifty per cent of the warehousemen's union reported for work yesterday. Their officers stated that a strike will be called Wednesday.

Reports from many ports are to the effect that the strike is growing and that workers in all trades are quitting in large numbers in support of the dockers. In Liverpool the tugboat men have struck.

It is estimated that more than 225,000 men are already on strike.

The dockworkers in Belfast are still at work but have refused to handle any freight for Great Britain and shippers in the other Irish ports have been compelled to refuse to accept consignments for British destinations.

Strike Extends to Ulster.

BELFAST, Feb. 19.—The Ulster dock workers received orders today not to handle any more cargoes arriving from Great Britain, where the dockers are on strike.

MEXICAN TEXTILE WORKERS DECIDE TO TAKE INDUSTRY

Give Bosses 20 Days to Yield Demands

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 19.—Mexican textile workers have resolved to seize the textile industry of this country within 20 days if their demands are not met by the present owners.

This revolutionary program was decided upon by representatives of the textile workers in convention here, when the owners continued to refuse to obey the Mexican labor statute requiring three months' notice before the discharge of an employe.

Committee Works Out Plans.

Plans for occupation and management of the factories are being worked out by a committee appointed by the union.

Complaint is made by the union men and women that the Mexican government fails to enforce the labor law. Other unions having headquarters here are considering action similar to that of the textile workers. Labor has supported Obregon against de la Huerta and demands that its just demands be supported by the government.

Mayas Win Battle.

GUADALAJARA, Mexico, Feb. 19.—Maya Indians, fighting on Obregon's side, are responsible for President Obregon's victory over the Fascisti forces in western Mexico. The Mayas braved heavy machine gun fire in laying a pontoon bridge across the Lerma River, which enabled the troops to make a triumphant attack.

Obregon's entrance into Guadalajara was greeted with cheers by the people, who have found the de la Huerta forces particularly tyrannical.

Ladies' Garment Workers Renting Halls for Strike

The strike committee of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is busy renting halls and making final arrangements to call the strike of 10,000 dress makers and cloak makers which has been decided on. The strike committee has not made the date of the strike public yet, but from the preparations being made it will probably be called some time this week.

While awaiting the strike order the rank and file members of the union are demanding that the union take back the members who were expelled for opposing the official bureaucrats of the union. They demand that the expelled members be brought back before any strike order is issued because the expelled workers were in the past the hardest fighters for the union and can be depended on to put spirit into the rank and file.

The strike committee is meeting every night at the union headquarters. So far there has been no statement from the union officials on the question of asking the expelled members of the union to return.

Plan to Use Radio to Establish Contact of Schools with Public

NEW YORK, Feb. 19—Radio to establish contact between the public and the public school system was introduced for the first time yesterday by William L. Ettinger, superintendent of schools. A broadcasting program included intimate bits of school policy and the work and aims of the pupils themselves.

"It is the woman in the house and the man in the street," said Ettinger, "who determine our fundamental educational policies. We believe that these radio lectures and entertainments will communicate immeasurably more to the parents of the actual school situation than any method devised in the past."

BELGRADE, Feb. 19.—Parliament today ratified the Italo-Jugo Slav treaties, re-establishing an accord on disputed points between the two countries and settling the long drawn out problem of the status of Fiume.

Nice Long List for Coolidge's Consideration

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19th.—If President Coolidge takes the advice of "insiders" in the navy department, he will appoint an "iron man" to succeed Edwin Denby as Secretary of the Navy.

A man who will brutally wield a big stick inside the department and take effective measures to check a waning morale is the crying need of the navy today, these well-informed persons declare.

A enormous number of deserters, steady resignation of officers and an unprecedented run of disasters—at La Honda, Cal., where seven destroyers were lost; at Vera Cruz, where the Tacoma was wrecked and minor accidents elsewhere—are the fruits of conditions within the navy that require harsh measures for a cure, navy men say.

Discussion today of a successor to Denby brought out several names.

President Coolidge has blasted the hopes of some with an unofficial announcement from the White House that no naval officer will be named and nobody from Michigan.

This apparently eliminated Charles B. Warren of Detroit, who was at first believed to have the "inside track" for the position. Warren is now mentioned for Attorney General Daugherty's job should Daugherty quit.

HONGKONG, Feb. 19.—The whole Chinese press today emphasised reports that Sun Yat Sen, South China dictator, has decided to adopt a Soviet form of government for Kwang-Tung province, nationalizing lands and big business.

OILY SECRETS IN BOOK OF N. Y. BROKERS

On the Trail of Big Game, the Experts Claim

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Seeking evidence involving a cabinet member and a senator, the Teapot Dome Committee today opened the books of New York brokers.

Information which caused this step is a written report of "a responsible New York special investigator," a member of the committee said.

This information has already been partially told to President Coolidge and is expected to be placed fully before the cabinet today. The cabinet member himself has been apprised of some of the evidence.

Whitney Is Called.

Those involved in this new trend of the case are supposed to have dealt extensively in stocks since they took office.

If the books of the Benkard brokerage firm, which were subpoenaed for secret inspection at an executive meeting of the senate oil committee, do not corroborate the investigators' report, the inquirers will start upon a new task.

Those subpoenaed were Harry P. Whitney, closely associated with Harry F. Sinclair and officials of J. P. Benkard & Co., New York brokerage firm.

Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, is under subpoena but was not expected to attend.

Impeachment Proceedings Halted.

Senator Lenroot, chairman of the committee, declared he would make no attempt to conduct a hearing behind closed doors today. He said the committee desires only to devise ways and means of getting at the evidence.

The reaction in congress to his resignation was one of satisfaction and now that he has removed himself from the situation, nothing is to be gained by seeking impeachment, leaders of the fight against him said.

Upholsterers on Trial Today Before a Non-Union Jury

The state will begin the presentation of evidence this morning before Judge Wells in the case of the five union men who are on trial, charged with conspiracy to boycott, for their part in the strike of upholstery workers.

After two days of examination of talesmen a jury satisfactory to both sides was completed yesterday and because the prosecutor was not willing to begin at once Judge Wells adjourned court till 10 o'clock this morning when the prosecution will open.

The state refused to accept as a juror any man who is now or ever was a union member. There is not a single union man on the jury. They are mostly clerical workers and small business men.

Bar Firearms, Too.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19.—President Coolidge will insist on stricter enforcement of District of Columbia regulations regarding use of firearms, as a result of the wounding of Senator Greene, of Vermont, by a stray bullet fired in a battle between officers and bootleggers, a White House spokesman said today.

Know a worker who needs a working class education? Get him to read THE DAILY WORKER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19.—Resignation of Theodore Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, was demanded in the Senate by Senator Harrison, Mississippi, during a bitter debate on the oil scandals.

"Roosevelt is just as guilty as Secretary Deby," declared Harrison. "Yet he aspires to be governor of New York. He has let his friends believe that he is now the Secretary of the Navy in fact.

"If Denby gets out, Roosevelt should get out, too. Everyone connected with this damnable episode should be driven from the public service."

Harrison said he had read a statement in the newspapers yesterday quoting Roosevelt as saying "I am not resigning," as he left the White House following a conference with the President.

Public Demand, President's Hint, No Avail

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—In the face of an open demand that he resign and what was regarded here as a broad hint from President Coolidge to the same effect, Attorney-General Daugherty today was clinging to his post in the cabinet.

A three hour conference last night, a cabinet discussion today and a brief conference with President Coolidge resulted in Daugherty deciding not to quit until he had been given a hearing and a chance to reply to his critics.

Daugherty remained with President Coolidge after the cabinet meeting broke up. When he came out again he refused to say anything.

"The only thing you can quote me on," said Daugherty, "is that I have nothing to say."

Other members of the cabinet were equally reticent, but indicated in a roundabout manner that they did not expect any development today in Daugherty's case.

It was stated on Daugherty's behalf that when he had anything to say, he would say it in a general public statement. No intimation was given as to when such a statement might be expected.

Sore at Borah.

Daugherty regards the demand of Senator Borah, Idaho, that he resign because he has lost the public confidence as unwarranted.

Borah, summoned to the White House by President Coolidge, made his demand to Daugherty's face and the president, who knew Borah would make it and summoned Daugherty to hear it, said nothing.

This was taken here to mean that Mr. Coolidge hoped Daugherty would accept the White House conference as a hint that his withdrawal would

DAUGHERTY MUST QUIT SAY SOLONS

Borah Demands Coolidge Bounce Harry M.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The resignation of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty from President Coolidge's cabinet is expected.

Daugherty, "the man who made Harding president," it was freely forecast here, will follow Secretary of the Navy Denby as the second cabinet officer to leave public life as the result of the scandal over the investigation of the naval oil leases.

The attorney general is understood already to have virtually decided in his mind the action he will take, following a conference of several hours with friends in the senate. Those at the conference in Daugherty's suite at the Wardman Park hotel here included Senators Pepper and Reed, of Pennsylvania, Willis, of Ohio, and Moses, of New Hampshire.

Borah Demands Resignation.

Daugherty himself, however, today refused to answer questions. It was indicated by C. Bascom Slemp, secretary of President Coolidge, that the attorney general's resignation had not yet been actually received. The question is expected to come to a head at the meeting of Mr. Coolidge and his cabinet at the White House this morning.

The big factor in the expected resignation of Daugherty is a strong demand made by Senator Borah of Idaho, in a Sunday night conference at the White House that the attorney General retire immediately from public life.

While both Mr. Coolidge and Daugherty sat and listened, Borah dramatically urged that the attorney general resign. He gave as his reasons that the president had found it necessary to go outside the Department of Justice in arranging for the

"America Due For House Cleaning," Says London Press

LONDON, Feb. 19—The resignation of Edwin Denby as secretary of the navy was treated by English newspapers as the biggest story of the day.

Giving most of the front page to the story, the London Daily Express in an editorial, said "if only half of the charges against the Republican administration are proved to be true, the repercussion on the candidacy of President Coolidge in the approaching presidential election will be serious enough to defeat him.

"The Democrats are in no better shape.

"Every one who had hopes has seen them dashed to the ground and his chances of election drowned in oil.

"America is out for a house cleaning and the innocent as well as the guilty may be swept in the dust bin."

FRANC DROPS; M. POINCARE MAY RESIGN

Brokers a Yelling Mob as Paris Bourse Opens

PARIS, Feb. 19.—The French Franc suffered a fresh collapse today, crashing from 23.80 to the dollar at the opening to 24.30 at 11:10 A. M.

Conditions in the money market were described as "panicky."

The Chamber of Deputies was in stormy session all night, until 5:30 in the morning, in frantic discussion of the situation.

Tax Increase Adopted.

The Chamber adopted Premier Poincare's proposal for a 20 per cent increase in taxes, chief measure in his financial reform program, at 3 a. m., after an uproarious debate.

This was followed by a vote of confidence in the premier.

Poincare, worn out physically and harried continually by the opposition, faced another trial today when the senate reconvened to discuss electoral reform.

Premier May Resign.

Political wiseacres believed the situation in the senate might be dangerous, as Poincare already has said he intends to make the electoral reform project involve confidence in his cabinet and will resign if the proposal is adopted.

President Millerand also opposes the bill, declaring he will refuse to sign it if it is sent to him and will resign if it is passed over his veto.

The session of the Chamber ending in adoption of part of the government's financial program began yesterday afternoon and debate brought unrestrained verbal exchanges and even blows before it ended.

Deputy Bokanowski's announcement that quotations on the pound sterling had passed 100 francs, precipitated an uproar.

Communists Lead Opposition.

Bokanowski declared the crash of the franc was the fault of obstructionists in the Chamber, hindering the voting on the premier's financial projects.

At 7:30 p. m. it was evident Poincare was determined to have a showdown. He demanded the Chamber sit thruout the night, if necessary, to put over his proposal for the tax increase and the Chamber agreed.

The session dragged along, with Communists continually obstructing a vote on each amendment.

Brokers Act Like Maniacs.

There was intense excitement when the bourse opened at noon. The interior of the stock market was jammed with a yelling mass of brokers, swamped with orders for heavy selling of French securities and purchasing of foreign issues.

The rush of orders was so great that departments were swamped and no quotations were listed for several minutes after the opening.

Financial circles were in a near panic because of the sharp break in prices, as it had been expected the quick action of the Chamber of Deputies in voting the 20 per cent tax increase would exercise a stabilizing effect on the market.

The government was reported considering new measures to halt the slump.

Tax Increase Is Failure.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Despite action of the Chamber of Deputies in adopting Premier Poincare's proposal for a 20 per cent increase in taxes, the franc declined steadily after the opening of the money market here.

Shortly after 10 a. m., quotations were 102.2 francs to the pound sterling, falling to 105.5 at 1:20 p. m.

Italian lire opened weak in sympathy with the franc. Quotations at the opening were 100 1-8 lire to the pound.

Will Stay On the Stage.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 19.—Because his wife refused to leave the state, Charles Anderson of Chicago, committed suicide in her presence.

Mrs. Kay Anderson is an actress with a burlesque company playing here and stated that her husband had threatened to take his life several times before if she did not quit.

Mrs. Anderson said she would keep on with her stage career. She has a child one year old.

Confesses To Murder.

After his arrest today on a charge of burglary, Harry B. Thomas, Chicago, confessed murdering William B. Krauter, Chicago business man, four years ago, police said.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) —"A WEEK" is a thrilling narrative of war between the Russian Communist Party and counter-revolutionists in a frontier city. Earlier installments tell how the party decided to send the Red Army far away after fuel so that the trains can run and bring in seed grain for the peasants. Klimin, the president for the local branch of the Communist Party meets his sweetheart, a woman party worker who has just come from Moscow. A counter-revolutionary leader arrives on the same train.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER THREE.

IT was still frosty in the streets as it is early morning in early Spring. The cool red sun hung low on the horizon; in western rooms, in dark corners, were lingering the remains of the night's darkness when the Secretary of the Politdep (Political Department) had already come to work and was writing down his name on the paper that lay before the sleepy man who was on duty . . . his name, "Matusenko." . . . Each letter of his signature was round, clear, finished, and only to the last Matusenko added a little thin, timorous tail.

Taking off his coat and hanging it up, Matusenko smoothed his hair with a comb and went into the office of the Chief; there stood his tidy little table, covered with pink blotting paper. Matusenko looked into the Chief's inkpot—was there plenty of ink? He tried the Chief's pen—a bad pen—Matusenko changed it, sorted the papers on the Chief's table, and looked at the minute shorthand of Martuinov, the assistant chief of the Politdep.

Matusenko was short, in bell trousers, carefully pressed, with fresh-complexioned face, on which a smile was always fading away, a smile like the little flourish that Matusenko added to his signature, artificial and timorous. On his clean tunic, of military pattern, was an enamelled Communist star. Today was Sunday, and the typists and shorthand-writers, a merry noisy lot of people, would come to the Politdep only at eleven. But Matusenko always held himself aloof from them, or rather, simply did not notice them, did not consider their existence, just as he did not consider the existence of objects and animals that did not concern him, or that of all the people whom he considered below him in rank, like the Red Army soldiers and the school-teachers who came to the Politdep.

But to make up for that, Matusenko thought a great deal about those who stood above him in the service, beginning with Golovlev, the Chief of the Politdep, and ending with Lenin and Trotsky. Chiefs also he estimated variously: some pleased him, others did not; some he feared and did not understand, others he understood and did not fear; but in general he thought a lot about his chiefs and followed them with his little eyes.

Matusenko did not like Golovlev, who was noisy, rough, with unshaven chin and untidy dress. On one occasion Matusenko was going to help Golovlev on with his coat, but he broke away from that affectionate embrace, looked round with amused surprise and spoke words in the highest degree offensive, unpleasant, and, worst of all, incomprehensible:

"Comrade Matusenko! Why are you doing this? Aren't you a Communist? Who asked you to be a lacquey?"

"Obviously," decided Matusenko, "Golovlev is a low fellow, a workman, makes grammatical mistakes in writing, and, when he gets angry, swears indelicately."

But, tho Matusenko disliked and feared Golovlev, Golovlev was the Chief, and that meant that one had to submit and with a smile listen to his coarse reproofs. . . . . Often Matusenko mused over this strange order of things as a result of which he, a well-brought-up educated man, having the title of military clerk, had to obey the uneducated hooligan, Golovlev.

It was true that the Republic was named "Workers' and Peasants'," and Golovlev was a worker, but in the bottom of his soul Matusenko thought that all these names, "Socialist Federated Republic," all these signs and watchwords, were the same sort of official things as the title of the Emperor, which Matusenko knew by heart.

The coming of Martuinov broke Matusenko's reveries, and he replied to Martuinov's polite greeting with a bow and sweet smile.

Martuinov was altogether different from Golovlev, gracious, neat, always shaved, badly dressed, it was true, but at that Matusenko was always surprised.

He never shouted, and indeed blushed when he had to give an order.

"Gentlemanly education, studied in the Gymnasium," thought Matusenko with respect. But Martuinov always felt uncomfortable when the officious Matusenko took it into his head to get his rations for him and to carry them himself to his lodgings.

But Martuinov was too much occupied in thinking about the revolution, Communism, his own life and that of mankind, and did not observe at all that of the officious and humble Matusenko had long ago studied Martuinov's whole, rings on his fingers, and a broad, being, had studied it and understood it after his fashion.

And behold Matusenko in a quiet, gentle voice, asking Martuinov "Why do people believe in God?" or "What is Imperialism?" or "When will there be a world-wide Communist Revolution?" And Martuinov would grow animated and begin to answer the questions, and thought of Matusenko, "a knowledge-seeking fellow . . . only without enough self-respect or self-confidence." He did not know that Matusenko had the utmost self-confidence, knew his own road thru life, and was watching everything attentively, like a wild animal, and did not listen at all to Martuinov's long explanations.

For Martuinov the days followed each other in a swift procession, and the long Winter of the Urals had passed without his knowing it.

In Autumn, on the threshold of the Winter, it had seemed to him that he would not live thru it and here it was, gone already and Martuinov was once more on the edge of existence. Spring had come, and with extraordinary joy he had felt, suddenly, that she was soothing him affectionately with tender hand, like an elder sister, and kissing him with a warm kiss.

Today as usual the military Commissars came to the Politdep (many had incorrectly understood that last circular letter) and the Commander of the battalion of the Cheka, a handsome young fellow, in red breeches and elegant tunic, who as his custom was, cavilled suspiciously over every detail, seeing in everything the bureaucratism of the Politdep, said with a good-humored laugh as he went off, "All right, Comrade Martuinov, yours to command—ours to obey, . . . but it's bureaucratism all the same." The officious Matusenko flashed across his eyes with papers for his signature; there was some schoolteacher standing there making a report and saying that he would not go to work—no boots—pointing to his wet snowboots.

But all this, once upon a time interesting even in its details, lit up by the revolution, today was dull and tedious. And Martiunov often went out on the stone steps, from which the snow was melting, and blinked blissfully in the sunlight.

After dinner in the noisy Soviet refectory came some free time, rare for Martuinov; there was no lecture or meeting. He walked slowly to his lodging thru the dirty, cheerful streets, and did not notice that he was getting his feet wet and that by his slow steps he was interfering with the boys who were playing at knucklebones on the drying pavements.

He walked and, as usual, thought. The houses he had known from his childhood, the tedious nameboards, and the grey railings of his native town waked memories of his past life, of his family who had fled to Siberia, of his schoolfellows, for the most part White Guards, and of the strange fate that had brought him, a "gentleman's son," brought up in the comfort of a bourgeois family, into the ranks of the Communist Party, whose outlook on the world had become his, and to whose great cause he was so warmly devoted, in spite of which it was as if glass walls separated him from the rest of the Party, and made him lonely and gave him much bitter suffering.

And he thought of her who lived here in the town, by the old town, by the old church, of her whom he loved and still passionately desired, tho she was far, far away, separated from him by the revolution.

European Money Falling After German Mark

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 19.—General Dawes and the other members of the committee of reparations experts, are the Saviors that optimistic French brokers hope will lead France out of its economic wilderness. The hope is that France will be given a five to ten year moratorium on her war debts and that Germany must be forced to pay reparations in kind—coal and other products—if she should be granted a cash moratorium.

Big Loan—or Disaster.

French financiers are also looking forward to an international loan of half a billion dollars. They declare it is inconceivable that America and Great Britain will let the franc sink further.

Fears of the financial collapse of all Europe are voiced by the most bearish elements on the bourse. They point to the most alarming news from Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Poland and other countries closely allied financially with France.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Feb. 19.—The Hungarian crown has fallen to 90,000 to the dollar, or 20 per cent below the Austrian crown. Unless the loan comes in haste the crown will hit the trail of the German mark.

And Oil Continues to Flow

HUTCHINSON, Kans., Feb. 18.—Wild excitement prevailed here today following the bringing in of an oil well on the Welch farm, 14 miles northeast of this city, marking the opening of a new field. Roads leading to the well were jammed with autos. Representatives of oil companies were working frantically to obtain leases on adjoining property.

Oil shot over the derrick when the well came in and it was believed to be a gusher but the spouting soon subsided and is now flowing about 360 barrels a day.

Geologists declare the well marks the opening of the largest pool in the state as drainage from both the eastern and western fields is declared to center near here.

prosecution in the oil lease cases, that the public had lost confidence in the administration of the Department of Justice, while Mr. Daugherty's department is the only branch of the government that the public can look to in the administration of justice.

24 Hour Reprieve.

Belief that Daugherty would get out was strengthened when it was learned today that Senator Wheeler, Montana, author of a resoluton proposing a senate investigation of Daugherty's administration, was asked by Senator Willis, a close friend of Daugherty, and one of those at last nights' conference, to "hold off for 24 hours."

Daugherty was expected to decide in that time what to do.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt has stated that he would not resign, but it has been freely predicted that he would take this step before long. It is expected that Roosevelt will remain at least until a new Secretary of the Navy is appointed.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior E. C. Finney also is believed to be in a difficult position, following his testimony before the senate committee of how he shielded the action of former Secretary Fall in leasing the oil reserves.

President Coolidge and his cabinet today met to consider the resignation of Attorney General Daugherty, under fire in connection with the oil leasing scandal and other matters.

As the cabinet met, Daugherty indicated thru his friends that he was disposed to fight efforts to get him out of the cabinet until he has had a chance to defend himself before a senatorial investigating committee.

Wants Resolution Amended.

Daugherty today urged friends in the senate to call up at once and have passed the Wheeler resolution for an investigation of his administration of the department of justice. Daugherty wants the resolution amended to eliminate a statement in the preamble that he has lost the confidence of the country.

At a conference with Senator Willis, Ohio; Pepper and Reed, Pennsylvania, and Moses, New Hampshire, Daugherty discussed in detail the handling of the resolution and requested the amendment be made.

At the conference, senators said, he gave the impression that he did not intend to resign unless asked to do so by President Cooldge, until he had been given an opportunity to reply to his critics. His resignation was discussed "only incidentally" at the conference, senators said.

Looks as Tho Daugherty Fears to Go

not be displeasing to the administration.

Refusing to say anything publicly, Daugherty today created the impression that the harder his critics pound him, the tighter he will stick to his post, unless Mr. Coolidge directly asks him to resign.

At the White House today it was stated on behalf of President Coolidge that Daugherty had not resigned and that there had been no discussion of his case there. This was stated in the face of statements by cabinet members that Daugherty's case was discussed in the cabinet meeting, informally at least, and that Daugherty remained with Mr. Coolidge after the cabinet meeting ended.

It was apparent that Mr. Coolidge does not intend at this time to ask the attorney-general to step out.

Will Quiz Daugherty.

Agreement was reached this afternoon whereby the Senate will adopt a resolution to investigate Daugherty.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, democrat, and author of the first investigation resolution, conferred with Senator Willis, Ohio, republican, and friend of Daugherty.

Willis told Wheeler that his original resolution would be fought by republicans. Willis wanted the preamble modified so that it would not contain the allegation that the department of justice had lost the confidence of the people.

Wheeler agreed. The agreement assures adoption of the resolution.

The only point remaining to be decided is whether a special committee or the regular judiciary committee shall make the investigation.

Leland Divorce Suit Naming Clergyman Is Denied by Court

Superior Judge Foell this afternoon denied the suit for divorce by Albert C. Leland against Mrs. Charlotte Leland, who implicated Rev. Carl D. Case, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Oak Park, in her alleged indiscretions.

The court refused to make any comment on Rev. Case on the grounds that the "evidence had been too widely circulated already."

WAR WRECK IS BLAMED FOR N. Y. TENEMENT FIRE

Two Families Nearly Wiped Out by Flames

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 19—A gibbering epileptic, an ex-soldier, is believed to be the firebug who set a crowded east side tenement in flames early today, snuffing out at least 13 lives.

The man was arrested as he was shuffling hurriedly from the building by a passing policeman. He was unable to give coherent answers to questions.

Flames were sweeping into the lower levels of the building when discovered by a policeman. Almost immediately afterward he saw the strange looking man emerging from the structure and placed him under arrest. The suspect gave his name as Lewis Schoenfeld, a news butcher, and his address in a street several blocks from where the fire occurred. He had army discharge papers and a small vial of white powder in his pockets.

"I haven't any matches; you can search me if you want," he said when seized by the policeman.

The policeman whistled for assistance and held his man until a detective arrived.

The policeman then dashed thru flames which already were roaring thru the lower hallways of the tenement and made his way to the upper floors, beating on doors to arouse the sleeping families.

The dead were suffocated in their beds as the flames mushroomed on the two upper floors, filling them with thick acrid smoke. Scores of the tenants saved their lives by jumping onto adjacent roofs.

Police believed the fire undoubtedly was incendiary and that the firebug started it by throwing lighted newspapers in a lower hallway. They believe the man who started it may be the same pyromaniac who started several fires on the lower east side last year. Schoenfeld, was held for investigation.

Two families were almost entirely wiped out. Bernard Barrett, a laborer, his wife and two children all perished, the only surviving member being a daughter, Margaret, who is in a hospital badly burned.

Alex Holqui lost his entire family —a wife and three sons—and he is in a hospital suffering from severe burns. Benjamin Berger, his wife and a young son and daughter all perished. A Mrs. Bessie Schmidt, 40, also is among the known dead.

COOLIDGE MUFFLER PUT ON NEWSPAPER WRITERS IN CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19th.—President Coolidge today announced a policy of silence regarding the oil leasing scandal, effective at once.

It was stated on his behalf that the oil leasing cases would not in future be discussed at the White House conference with newspaper men on Tuesday and Friday.

The cases are now in the hands of counsel for presentation to the courts and for that reason the President believes, it was stated, that he must refrain from talking about them.

This was notice to the correspondents not to submit any more questions about the case.

2 Killed, 31 Injured in Rail and Trolley Chicago Accidents

Two railroad workers were killed and a third is expected to die as the result of two railroad accidents and thirty persons were injured in a street car crash in Chicago yesterday.

E. J. Eptinne, a fireman on the Pennsylvania railroad, was instantly killed when he stepped from the cab of his engine and was hit by another train at 103rd St. and the P. R. R. tracks. He leaves a widow and two children. James Flood, a track worker, was struck and killed, and Patrick McQuinn had his skull fractured by a south bound elevated train at 31st St.

More than thirty persons were injured when two overcrowded street cars carrying work-bound people crashed at Ashland and Chicago Aves. The failure of the street car company to clear the rails of ice was given as the cause of the accident. Three of the injured persons are in a serious condition.

Say He is Just as Guilty as Chief

"If the president refused to acce Roosevelt's resignation why did h accept Denby's?" demanded Harrison "Why make fish of one and fowl o the other?"

Harrison's attack on Roosevelt precipitated by an editorial in a cent issue in the National Republic a weekly newspaper published b George L. Lockwood, secretary of th Republican National committee, i which it was intimated that officials of the Wilson administration were responsible for the inception of the Teapot Dome leases.

Senator Moses, New Hampshire, asked Harrison why W. G. McAdoo resigned—as attorney for E. L. Doheny if "his employment was legitimate?" He further demanded to know "what a lawyer could do for a client that would warrant a fee of $25,000 a year."

Witnesses Ask Immunity.

Overtures of immunity have been made by the senate Teapot Dome committee, it was disclosed today, to induce reluctant witnesses to tell the facts about reported corruption of government officials in connection with the oil scandal.

The committee has been given new evidence but it cannot be disclosed unless certain witnesses will agree to testify, a committee member said. Negotiations are under way to bring this about.

S. D. Bowers, New York, of the law firm of Laughlin, Girard, Bowers & Halpin, personal attorneys for H. H. Benkard, appeared before the committee in executive session today. Later he made this statement:

"We were subpoenaed to produce records of certain stock transactions and these records were produced. We have no knowledge or information that these records in any way affect any one connected with the matter under investigation."

Benkard and H. A. Cook, office manager for the Benkard brokerage office, and Lewis H. Bond, investigator for the federal trade commission, were also before the committee.

Experts on Books.

Senator Lenroot, chairman of the committee, said no effort had been made this morning to make any complete scrutiny of the books. Accountants employed by the committee will do that in New York and report back to the committee.

The only statement Lenroot would make about the executive session of the committee was:

"We have consulted officials from the Benkard and Company stock brokerage firm of New York. They have produced certain books and expressed entire willingness to produce all that we desire. The records, however, are somewhat voluminous so we have appointed accountants to examine them."

Harry Payne Whitney, millionaire sportsman of New York, and Elmer E. Smathers, brokers, who were also subpoenaed, failed to appear. Smathers was said to be in Europe. All that Lenroot would say about Whitney was that "we have a subpoena out for him."

The matter of immunity was the first question brought up before the committee.

Later Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts, special counsel, were called in and a decision was reached to leave the question of immunity to them. The point was brought up that the commitee itself really had no power to grant anyone immunity and only the private word of the attorneys could be given.

The session adjourned subject to the call of the chairman and none of the members would indicate whether there would be any need for a call before the regular meeting of the committee, scheduled for next Monday.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 19.—Governor Len Small was within his rights when he vetoed the $5,000 appropriation to pay the salary of Leroy Millner, assistant attorney general in charge of inheritance tax cases in Cook County, the supreme court ruled today.

Borah Told Daugherty To Quit As Coolidge Listened

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19th.—The dramatic scene was staged at the White House Sunday night when Senator Borah, in the presence of President Coolidge, demanded that Attorney General Daugherty resign.

On Thursday or Friday last week, Senator Borah saw C. Bascom Slemp, Mr. Coolidge's secretary. To Slemp, Borah expressed the view that Daugherty ought to resign, because he had lost the confidence of the country, and that this loss of confidence had seriously affected the standing of the Department of Justice.

Slemp told Mr. Coolidge, on Sunday night, the President telephoned Senator Borah to come to the White House. He received Borah in his study, and told him that he desired him to state frankly his views about Daugherty. This, Borah did. Fifteen minutes later, Daugherty arrived and joined the conference.

"Now, Senator, I wish you would state your position again," the President suggested.

Borah thereupon told Daugherty he ought to resign. He stated the people did not believe in Daugherty, and that no man who had lost public confidence should remain at the head of a department on which the public depends for justice.

A hot discussion ensued between Daugherty and Borah. Daugherty resented Borah's attitude, and appeared to regard the suggestion, coming from Borah, as unwarranted meddling.

Thru it all, the President sat without saying a word. He let Borah and Daugherty talk it out.

The discussion lasted more than half an hour. Finally Daugherty said the matter of his resignation was one for the Cabinet, and not for the Senate or any senator to discuss.

BANKERS WORTH BILLIONS LOAN FARMER MILLIONS

"Generosity" Excites Praise of Plute Press

By NORMAN SMYTH
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Mr. McHugh, representing various local banks, carried with him to Chicago five million dollars in subscriptions to the proposed loan of ten millions for the "relief of Northwestern farmers."

The banks participating in this "generous" act were Mechanics & Metals National, Chase National, Chemical National, Hanover National, the National Bank of Commerce and the Guaranty Trust Co. In addition to these banks several large industrial corporations are said to have subscribed.

Oil Magnate In It.

The metropolitan press praises this "generous" act of the Eastern financiers. How generous is it? The directors of the Mechanics & Metals National include among their number Colonel Rogers, whose daughter married Count Salm. He is worth over $75,000,000. In addition, he holds 16,200 shares in the Standard Oil worth around $45,000,000. John D. Ryan is also a director. The late William Rockefeller was a director. These "philanthropists" are worth over $220,000,000. On the directorate of the Chase National we have such men as George F. Baker, who is worth, according to government returns, $150,000,000.

Generous Jimmie Stillman.

Among the remaining bankers we find the name of James Stillman, who belongs to the "Love-birds' union." Poor Jimmie! He has a mere trifling $100,000,000 to get along with. There is also Robert Goelet with his trifling $200,000,000, and A. F. Vanderbilt, who has a share in a half billion dollars of the Vanderbilt estate.

Last, but not least, we have the Guaranty Trust Co. Noble and generous souls! Controlling this financial institution are Morgan, Ryan, Guggenheim, Duke, Berwind, Bedford, Harriman, the Morton estate, and Whitney. Their combined fortunes amount to over $3,750,000,000.

All of the above kind, noble and generous gentlemen agree to lend (emphasize that lend, printer) to the farmers. It looks as if there was a day's wage campaign among millionaires. Contrast the five millions lent to the farmers with the money given to Soviet Russia by American workers during the famine campaign!

5,000 "SHOPS" MAY OPEN AS BEER SALOONS

Court in Big Blow at Dry Campaign

Opening of the floodgates of beer was feared today as the courts knocked out the props from Mayor Dever's campaign against "soft drink parlors."

By a decision handed down in Municipal court, more than 5,000 coffee shops, saloons, and "soft drink" parlors, closed up in Dever's dry fight are allowed to reopen with no danger of city action against them.

Judge Harry M. Walker in his decision ruled that municipal soft drink parlor licenses—which were revoked by Mayor Dever, were themselves invalid, thus opening the way to operation of these shops.

In the wake of a "beer war" between rival beer running "syndicates," which claimed several lives in shootings, Mayor Dever revoked more than 2,000 municipal licenses for soft drink parlors. Other hundreds of places closed their doors in fear of court action.

Almost simultaneously, soft drink parlors, saloons, and roadhouses were given a new lease on existence when Chief Justice John R. Caverly in Criminal court ruled that issuance of "John Doe" warrants was illegal and unconstitutional.

In the face of the two court decisions, Chief of Police Morgan A. Collins announced a renewed drive on bootleggers and rum runners, declaring federal courts "are certain to aid in prosecution of law violators."

Miss Mac Swieney Says Ireland Is Mac Donald's Test

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Mary MacSwieney, Irish Republican, has written to Ramsay MacDonald, saying the Irish Republicans have watched the British labor party with great interest. She said that she doubts if the idealists in the Labor Party will stick to their ideals any stronger than did President Wilson.

Ireland will be the first test of the sincerity of the Labor government, she said. She wants to know if the prime minister will force the Free State to war on the Irish Republicans as did other English governments. Miss MacSwieney asks MacDonald to make an Irish peace on the basis of a free and independent Ireland.

McAdoo--The Workers and Farmers Reject the Verdict of Your Handpicked Jury

MR. WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO.—Your conference of select lieutenants has decided that you are to stay in the Democratic Party race for the Presidency. To the workers and farmers, whose support you are seeking, it was a foregone conclusion that a gathering of those who are expecting to be rewarded with political jobs by you, as Chief Executive, could make no other decision.

Mr. McAdoo, for years you have paraded about the country as a friend of the men who work in the mills and mines and who toil on the land.

For years you have posed as the friend of the working masses and sought their support.

In preparation for the coming presidential elections you have thrown your hat into the ring and announced your plans to become the candidate of the Democratic party and the president of the United States.

You have been making a lot of noise about the purity of your Democratic party and yourself in particular in so far as its and your relations with the big business interests, with the capitalists, with the open-shoppers, with the enemies of labor of this country go.

For some time you succeeded in fooling some of the people. Then came the infamous Teapot Dome scandal. Your own Democratic colleague the international oil king Edward I. Doheny, who was among those nominated for the vice-presidency of the United States at the 1920 Convention of your pure Democratic party then let the cat out of the bag. Mr. Doheny, who was one of your own California delegation to this convention, struck the first damaging blow at you and your presidential aspirations.

You now stand before the masses of this country as a corporation tool of the most dangerous sort.. Long before the country was let in on the secret that your pockets were heavily lined with oil, you were in the service of some of the most gigantic corporations.. Long before you were exposed by your own friend Doheny as being on his payroll at the admitted sum of $50,000 a year and having cleaned up a quarter of a million dollars thru services rendered his oil interests in Mexico, you were pursuing the vicious, corrupt capitalist practice of selling your services to the highest bidder who sought your legal help because of your influential connections with the Government as a former member of the Cabinet.

You started off as a broker, became a contractor for the Hudson tunnel in New York, and then entered national politics. Since then every step you have taken has been a step in the interests of the big capitalists and against the workers and farmers of this country.

• • • • •

A FRIEND OF THE KLAN.

The workers and farmers haven't forgotten your letter of congratulation to Earl B. Mayfield, the Ku Klux Klan candidate, upon his being declared elected United States Senator from Texas.. Everybody knows that this open support you have tendered to Mayfield knocks the bottom out of all your democratic pretensions, for it has already been established beyond refutation that this Klan candidate was awarded the election in Texas only thru his having violated every principle of honesty in the campaign and after having outraged the very foundations of the constitution of the country to which you would have us believe you are so unswervingly dedicated.

Mr. McAdoo, today you are the only one of the outstanding Democratic presidential aspirants who has not dared to declare himself on the Klan issue. You have not the courage to tell the workers and farmers where you stand on the hooded order of American hooligans and strikebreakers because you are trying to fool these workers and farmers into voting you into the Presidency of this country.

• • • •

HELPED BLEED SOVIET RUSSIA.

Mr. McAdoo, your hands are not only spattered with the oil of Doheny, but they are stained with the blood of hundreds of thousands of poor Russian workers and farmers, whose only crime was that they rose in revolt against their barbaric, imperialist Czarist oppressors.

While you were Secretary of the Treasury, about two hundred million dollars of our workers' and farmers' money in the possession of the Government were given away to Kerensky, the agent of the Russian capitalists, in order to help him crush the suffering, struggling Russian workers and peasants. After the Russian masses got rid of Kerenky, despite your generous support to him, you continued to allow his agent in this country, Bakhmetieff, to squander millions of our money, as the represenTive of the bloody, gangster-governments and the counter-revolutionary armies of Kolchak and Wrangel, who slaughtered thousands of poor, helpless Russian men, women and children.

• • • •

WILLING TOOL OF BIG BUSINESS INTERESTS.

Mr. McAdoo, you have time and again boasted of your being the father of the Federal Reserve system. Under this system the biggest capitalist financiers have amassed fabulous profits at the expense of the poor farmers and workers.

Your effort to make the working people believe that your relations with the capitalists are pure and holy because you resigned from Doheny's payroll one day after the Senate Teapot Oil Committee uncovered you, will fool no one.

You have been rendering inestimable services to many other big corporations of this country besides the Doheny oil interests while your democratic Wilson administration was still in power.

• • • •

ENEMY OF WORKERS AND FARMERS.

Mr. McAdoo, the workers and farmers of this country know you. Your hollow, noisy pretensions at purity in politics will not mislead them. Your cries of innocence in the present oil scandal will not fool the working masses. Your whole record to date is one of unfailing loyalty to the capitalists, of uninterrupted services to the employing class at the expense of the working and farming classes. You are only a corporation lawyer of the most objectionable type.

The conference which you have called in Chicago to revive your punctured presidential boom was a fraud. It was only a desperate attempt on your part to be tried by a grand jury of your own picking, and secure much needed favorable publicity to offset the $250,000 Doheny retainer.

The workers and farmers will not accept the verdict rendered on you by this handpicked jury of democratic henchmen. The workers and farmers, judging you by your deeds and not by your blatant boasts and empty words, have already rendered their verdict.

You are guilty of being the most dangerous enemy of the working masses and a consistent, loyal friend and servant of the most powerful employing class interests.

COAL MINERS AND OPERATORS AGREE ON 3 YEAR PACT

Agreement Will Go to Union Referendum

(Special to The Daily Worker)

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 19—Unless unforseen circumstances intervene there will be peace between the coal barons and the miners who dig bituminous coal for the next three years, as a result of the agreement entered into between the representatives of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the coal barons.

Of course progressive miners say this only means that the coal operators will have plenty of opportunities to violate the agreement in spirit, if not in the letter and woe unto the rebel miners who resent such violation. Mr. Lewis will make short work of them.

It is no secret that one of the strongest arguments brought to bear on the operators by Lewis for a long term agreement was the threat that unless he was given such a pact with no reduction in wages that the union would fall into the hands of the radical elements who would throw down the gauntlet to the coal operators and fight it out on the industrial field rather than over a mahogany table in the pleasant climate of Palm Beach or a sumptous New York hotel.

The wage scale of the miners for the next three years will be $7.50 for datal men and corresponding rates for tonnage men. This agreement is expected to affect non-union mines. It is a well-known fact, however, that the non-union mines in Kentucky and elsewhere are operated by the same gentlemen who operate the union mines in other states. It is even hinted that there is a gentleman's agreement existing between Lewis and the coal barons whereby the former lays off organizing work in the non-union territory in return for boss support in his fight on the radicals in the union.

While a strike on a national scale is virtually out of the question, the settlement by no means guarantees against sporadic local and district strikes. Agreements are generally more honored by the bosses in the breach than the observance.

UNION TRAINMEN WESTERN ROADS WANT INCREASE

Trainmen, Conductors, in Session with Bosses

Representatives of the railroads west of Chicago and the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen met in Chicago yesterday to discuss the proposal of the union that a general committee of the railroads meet a committee of the unions to discuss a wage settlement.

So far the union representatives and the railroad representatives have not got down to considering the actual demands of the unions.

The demands of the men as formulated by the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen are substantially as follows: Conductors, $7 a day; assistant conductors, $5.80 a day; expressmen, $5.50 a day; baggagemen, $5.16 a day; brakemen, $5 a day.

In submitting their demands the unions asked for swift action. So far the attitude of the railroads has been indicated as willing to concede something but not all the demands of the unions.

It is believed that a fight will center around certain working rules which the unions now have in effect. Eastern railroads recently refused to negotiate with railroad unions thru a general committee representing more than one road, but the action of the New York Central in granting an increase is taken by the men as indicating that all the other roads will do the same.

Birth Control Ban to Continue in N. Y., State Senate Rules

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 19.—The ban on birth control instruction will continue in New York state. The codes committee of the state senate, by a seven to one vote, refused today to introduce a bill that would make such instruction legal. This bill was proposed by the Birth Control League thru Mrs. Noah H. Slee, formerly Mrs. Margaret Sanger.

Advocates of birth control instruction point to the decision of a Chicago judge permitting a clinic to operate there. They declare that the present laws prevent working class women from getting such instruction while wealthy women get all the information they wish from their doctors.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Chas. B. Warren, of Detroit, former ambassador to Japan, and Patrick H. Kelley, of Lansing, Mich., former representative, today were most prominently mentioned to succeed Edwin Denby as secretary of the navy.

William Gibbs McAdoo, son-in-law of the late Woodrow Wilson, once favorite son of Edwin Doheny, is now the "political hero" of three hundred Wilson democrats, who gathered in the Crystal room of the Great Northern Hotel in this city to give his candidacy another push forward on its oily path to the White House.

If McAdoo does not win, his fault will not lie in not carrying enough arrows in his quiver. Declaring himself the distinguished and unextinguished friend of the four main elements in the community, women, farmers, railroad workers and war veterans, he appealed for assistance to rid Washington of the political rogues, who have stolen the nation's virtue, using the White House as an assignation rendezvous.

The women were there—a few dozen. They spoke for the several millions who could not pay their fares.

One farmer—minus dirt—spoke for himself. He is Benjamin Marsh. He declared the farmers want a third party but he will try to convince them that they need McAdoo.

The war veterans were there by proxy. Nearly every politician shed tears over the wounds suffered by his sons. It appears they all fought in the Argonne. It sounds good at the end of a phrase.

Labor was there—misrepresented by officials of the sixteen standard railroad organizations. They found him eminently available. McAdoo was given a clean bill of health.

Protected Oil Interests.

His enemies were denounced but his character remained unsullied. The Doheny dollars fell off his shoulders like water off a duck's back. In speech after speech his attempt to change the constitution of the Mexican republic thru the liberal use of American dollars, in behalf of American oil interests was characterized by his boosters as "a great service to the American people in protecting American interests from a government that was violating the sacred rights of private property."

Senator Reed Denounced.

McAdoo was referred to as "America's political hero" by Mrs. Anna D. Olson of Minnesota, but no epithet was too bitter for James Reed, senator from Missouri, who was cursed and denounced as a renegade, a viper and a traitor by the apostles of Wilsonism. Charles Hay of St. Louis brought the audience to its feet when he said "James Reed has the impudence to call himself the favorite son of Misouri but there are thousands of Missourians who look on him as Missouri's favorite son of—." The rest of the sentence was drowned in a volley of cheers in which men and women joined.

Tom Arthur of Montana boosted Senator T. J. Walsh and McAdoo. Mrs. Antonette Funk told intimate stories of her associations—in a business way—with Mr. McAdoo during the war. Boasts of his ability to float liberty loans which have since found their way out of the pockets of the workers who were compelled to purchase them and into the pockets of Wall Street were made. One orator delivered a eulogy of Woodrow Wilson, "the man who made the world safe for democracy and gave us peace." This bunk was applauded. Only the newspapermen smiled cynically.

Ward Heelers Catered To.

Every ward heeler who could swing a few votes was called upon to speak. The women were catered to. Most of the speakers were of inferior calibre. An old general from Tennessee who boasted of the spiritual pabulum that could be secured in that part of the country—and apparently he had good reasons to be just as proud of Chicago—cracked several jokes and qualified as a comedian and also as an entry for the vice presidency on the Democrat ticket.

There was no discussion at any time during the session. They were all McAdoo boosters and they came there for a single purpose. One state was conspicuous by its absence. The Empire State sent no delegates.

A big play was made to the farmer vote. Of the railroad labor vote they were assured so far as it was in the power of the labor fakers to deliver it. The farmers, however, were not yet in the grip of a bureaucracy and could not be so easily led around by the nose. Wall Street was denounced. Independent millionaires were all right—those who did not have the Wall Street taint.

The Gary "Labor" Vote.

Emmet White of Gary, Ind., claimed to have the labor vote of that section lined up for McAdoo. In a rambling and incoherent speech he declared that labor leaders in Gary had on more than one occasion cleaned out corruption. Well, they have never organized the workers in the steel mills. A labor faker from Oregon, by the name of Rhodes, a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, told a story in which he compared socialists to "howling dogs."

A photograph was taken of the conference at the end of the morning session. The managers instructed the delegates to wave their hats and hold up their hands "so that enthusiasm would get into the picture."

Interest in the "progressive champion" was nourished while he was preparing his speech in the Blackstone Hotel. When he reached the crystal room of the Great Northern at 4 p. m. the paid campaign workers succeeded in making a lot of noise. The candidate smiled as he stepped to the platform. He is rather slight physically and does not seem to be what is called a "strong" man. He is Wilson's political heir. That was enough.

"Doheny Owes Me Nothing."

Chairman W. W. Howe of North Dakota, looking him straight in the eye, informed McAdoo that this conference commanded him to serve. McAdoo accepted the command. He read his speech which was a justification of his conduct in accepting $250,000 from Doheny. He did not mention the million received from Morse, the notorious crook, and from the motion picture interests. "Doheny owes me nothing," he shouted.

He declared for "economic and social justice" and said that his first act after his inauguration on March 4, 1925, would be to call a new international conference for promotion of peace and if an agreement was reached at that conference it would be referred to a national referendum for ratification.

This was his trick to satisfy the Wilsonian League of Nations' advocates and at the same time enable those politicians whose constituents are opposed to it to pose as regular democrats, who believe in the will of the people.

Long on Promises.

He promised to take the grip of Wall Street off the Treasury. He promised railroad reform, low freight and passenger rates and "justice" for railroad labor. The rest of the working class were not of any consequence! It was votes that counted. He promised to do "something besides talk" for the farmers. He did not say how. The prohibition law would be enforced and of course our old friend "corruption" cleaned out. The Veteran's Bureau would feel the effects of his broom and he would see that the war veterans had "a reasonable adjustment of compensation."

Taxi Strike Won by Milwaukee Men in Twenty-four Hours

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 19.—It took just one day of strike activity for 80 taxi drivers here to bring the Boynton Cab Co. to terms. The men have won every demand and are now behind the wheels again.

Under the new agreement drivers are to work under much the same arrangement in force before the Yellow Cab line was consolidated with the Red Top and Green some time ago. The agreement, which is being given a 60-day trial, provides that the drivers will receive 25 per cent of all meter receipts, and 50 per cent of all extras charged for extra passengers, waiting and baggage. The company is to pay for all gasoline.

When the consolidation went into effect meter rates to taxicab patrons were cut from 30 to 25 cents a mile. At the same time drivers' wages were cut from 25 per cent to 20 per cent of meter receipts, no commission on extras, and drivers to pay for all gas.

Wife Aids the Police Arrest Husband on Abduction Charge

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 19—Jack McEvers was arrested here on charges of abducting 14-year-old Margaret Keller of Ottawa, Ill., when his wife disclosed his whereabouts.

Mrs. McEvers received a letter from her husband in Chicago saying he was returning to Kansas City to make a new home for her and their two children. Shortly afterward she read of how the Keller girl had been induced to go to Chicago by McEvers and was then abandoned.

When the woman received a telephone call from her husband saying he had arrived here and wanted her to come right out and meet him, Mrs. McEvers called the police and accompanied them to the fugitive's hiding place. He is held here for Ottawa authorities.

Socialist Alias in St. Louis Stops in No Man's Land

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 19—The American Labor Party of St. Louis will continue to exist as an independent political organization, it was decided at a recent meeting where the report of the delegate to the Conference for Progressive Political Action was made. They called on the C. P. P. A. to form a national political organization at the coming Cleveland convention.

The meeting of the American Labor Party was attended by 23 delegates nearly half of whom were from the Socialist Party and the Labor Publishing Company.

The meeting decided to ask the executive committee of the state C. P. P. A. to call a state conference. This will probably be done and the conference held at the same time as the convention of the state federation of labor which is scheduld for Hannibal, Mo., in May.

CALIFORNIA PAPER HAS COLUMN TALK ON DAILY WORKER

Finds It Hates Liberal Capitalism

There never was a paper started in America that attracted as much attention from as many different kinds of people as has the DAILY WORKER.

Here is what the San Jose, California, News has to say about us in a column editorial.

"A Communist Daily.

"A daily newspaper which is avowedly devoted to Communist principles was established in Chicago on January 13 of this year. It is called the DAILY WORKER, and it is edited by J. Louis Engdahl, one of the American Communists who has survived various prosecutions.

"The newspaper is financed by the Workers Party, which is the name of the Communist organization in America. This party has adopted tactics far different from those which have prevailed in radical organizations of the past in America.

"The Workers Party, the organization of the American Communists, has adopted a new method which is really a combination of all the other methods. This group goes in for that education of working people in the principles of "strict Marxian Socialism" which is the characteristic of the Socialist Labor party; for that political realism and dickering which is characteristic of the Socialist party; and for that strong emphasis on economic action thru industrial labor unions which is characteristic of the I. W. W. This determination to use any method that is convenient at the moment, this ability to "bore from within" any sort of organization, causes the members of this group to be active in labor unions, farmers' organizations, and radical political parties of all sorts. It also brings down on these men the charge that they are sneaks and traitors and so on. But the leaders of this party seem to be as hardheadedly realistic as oil magnates or Wall Street stock manipulators, and 'bringing home the bacon' is their one object.

"These tactics have obviously been learned from Russia, where the Communist party has long followed such methods, and where the actual control of government has taught them much practical shrewdness which they can pass on to their American fellow believers.

"Their new daily paper will, of course, have a hard time of it, but Communists seem to enjoy hard times.

Offers Liberalism as Remedy.

"Assuming, as most Californians do, that Communism is a wrong-headed political doctrine, or at the very least that it is a desperate remedy, what is the best way to head it off? Most newspapers and organizations in California seem to think that bitter denunciation and jailing of its leaders is the best way. We do not believe this. We believe that intelligent study of basic industrial and financial problems, coupled with a determined effort to improve the evil conditions to which the Communists noisily call attention, is the only sure way of meeting their propaganda. Liberal Capitalism, or Progressivism, is the only political doctrine which has any hope of meeting Communistic propaganda successfully. Pigheaded conservatism, standpatism, simply will not do the work. The Communists themselves realize this, and an examination of the DAILY WORKER shows that it hates and fears the Progressives more than it does the old-line standpatters."

Ever see any labor paper in any part of the country drive the capitalist press to devote a column to discussing it? There's a reason.

Silk Workers Get $8 a Week.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Feb. 19. — Girls employed in the silk mills in this 100 percent American town are getting as low as $7 and $8 a week. Mayor Hart and his friends, who attempted to suppress a Lenin memorial meeting, view without alarm American industrial conditions that afford a maximum of $13 a week to girl silk workers except for forewomen. Most of the girls get the $7-$8 weekly rate. The hours are long. Toilet facilities are in many cases too filthy for description except in a health inspector's report.

School Board Seeks To Sabotage Fire Bureau's Probe Into Firetraps

The board of education, after having whitewashed itself in the recent investigation it conducted into the fire hazards of the public schools, is now making every effort to stop the bureau of fire prevention from completing its independent report on firetrap schools.

As was told in the DAILY WORKER last Monday, the special investigation, under the direction of the business manager of the board of education, was announced as completed. It is now announced that the inspection will continue until all the schools in the city are visited.

In inspecting the schools, the board of education will use three men. One man will be from the bureau of buildings and one man from the bureau of fire prevention and one from the engineering department of the board of education.

The bureau of fire prevention is short handed and when one man is assigned to special duty such as school inspection there are not enough left to do the work of the regular work of the bureau. Frank McAuliffe who has been assigned to work for the board of education was in charge of all school inspection work for the bureau of fire prevention.

Recently the chief of the bureau in a letter to the mayor, said that his office was at work on a report of the fire trap schools in Chicago and as soon as it was completed he would make public the report and a list of the unsafe schools, together with recommendations. McAuliffe was in charge of this work.

The School Board's Trick.

Before this list was completed and made public the board of education had McAuliffe assigned to work with them on their white washing investigation of the schools. This effectively prevented the bureau of fire prevention from immediately completing its report on fire trap schools.

When the white washing investigation was announced as completed and McAuliffe went back to work on the independent report of the bureau of fire prevention, the board of education had him reassigned to work with them on this latest inspection. They are again preventing an official impartial report on fire trap schools being made public.

There are more than 375 buildings used as public schools in the city and if each of them is to be thoroly inspected it will be possible to keep the bureau of fire prevention from making its independant report for a long time.

31 Men to 450,000 Buildings.

The bureau of fire prevention has 450,000 buildings in Chicago to inspect with a force of 31 men. It is plain that with that force of men to do that amount of work, the desire of the board of education to delay their report on the schools can be accomplished by keeping the man who is their school expert busy at another job.

The inspection of the thirty schools that was completed shows plainly that the board has the ability to whitewash itself by that sort of an inspection and that they will do the same thing in this latest attempt.

Plainly it is the hope of the board of education to drag this latest inspection out over a long period of time and let the protests that have been piling up against fire trap conditions in the schools be forgotten.

In the meanwhile thousands of children in Chicago are daily attending schools where their lives are menaced and all efforts to get an impartial official report of the condition are being stopped by the board of education.

P. O. Department Sabotaging Wage Query of Congress

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19. — For more than a month the postoffice department has failed to comply with requests from the committees of congress for data on which to judge whether the postoffice wage scale is adequate. No explanation of a convincing kind has been given for this delay.

The administration is silently blocking every attempt to give the postal employes a wage scale in keeping with the advanced cost of living.

THE THEATRE

By D'FERRIER

IV.

Lenore Ulric, as "Kiki," is ideal in a role, which at first appears to be actress-proof, but which effect, upon examination, is discovered to have been produced fully as much by the ability of the actress as by the good qualities of the part written for her by the playwright.

She is a disturbing and perplexing creature, the gamin who makes her living as a member of the chorus in the music halls; but, at the end, despite her excited career of unrestrained insurgency, we are inclined to believe that she is, as she tells us, "a good girl." She is, in a way, universal and not limited to one nation of city. She is the prototype of thousands of shop girls, chorus girls and other members of her sex, who have had to fight for their jobs, that they might be clothed and fed; their few tawdry pleasures, and even their characters. It is therefore perfectly logical that Kiki, used to making her own way, is willing to dare everything to win the mate of her choice—which is in brief the subject of the play in which she is presented.

"Kiki" is reported as having helped make theatrical history in France, from which country it was imported by David Belasco, one of the most sagacious of our own theatrical entrepeneurs, and it seems that its reputation is well deserved. True, fidelity to character delineation is sometimes sacrificed to produce humorous effects, but this tendency to burlesque is not overdone, and it remains a most live and moving story.

The pathetic little figure of Kiki, gaudily dressed, dishonest, undernourished and compelled to be continually wary of the rest of the world, is most human and appealing when, with nose and eyes red with bitter tears and clad unbecomingly in pink underclothing, she sobs desperately to the stage-doorkeeper her adoration of the unattainable theatre manager.

The staging of the play, which is presented at the Powers theatre is very well done, and the members of the cast, while none of great reputation, do well enough by their present parts to forestall adverse criticism.

Kropotkin Museum Opened in Moscow with Many Exhibits

MOSCOW, Feb. 19—A museum of Peter Kropotkin has been opened here. The founders have contrived to give a complete picture of the famous Anarchist and writer's life. They have been greatly handicapped by the fact that most of the exhibits are still in London, where Kropotkin lived in exile, until the Russian Revolution enabled him to return home.

Translations of Kropotkin's works in all languages, including the Chinese and the Japanese are included in the Moscow exhibits. Besides numerous political works, there are also exhibited his geological and geographical works, which are well known in scientific circles thruout the world.

Plan Supply Co-operative.

When building material men try to boycott employers of union labor hereafter they are going to be met by a monster building supply cooperative controlled by the building unions and ready to supply fair employers with anything they need. That is the program launched by the Portland convention of the American Federation of Labor and now being developed by committee of international building unions.

Election in Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 19—Louisiana voters went to the polls today to nominate a governor and other state officials who failed to secure a sufficiently large majority in the first primary held Jan. 15.

The governorship contest is between Henry L. Fuqua of Baton Rouge and Hewitt Bouanchaud, of Point Coupee, who has served as lieutenant governor during the John M. Parker administration.

Oil Has Right of Way.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Standpatters and progressives are each trying to take comfort from the fact that the senate is doing almost nothing but investigate the oil lands scandal and deal with the disclosures. Measures for emergency relief of bankrupt farmers have had long discussion in committee, but are not near passage. Debate on taxation has not seriously begun. Railroad hearings are still in the future.

Against Labor for Young.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19.—Senator Shortridge, of California, proposed an amendment to the constitution that would prohibit persons under 18 years of age from laboring and to regulate the conditions of such labor.

COMMUNIST·CHILDREN'S·COLUMN

Why and How I Became a Member of the Junior Section

By LEO GRANOFF, Age 11

I have a friend who works in a fur factory. He has to comb the camphored fur and gets sick from the smell. He has very little air and works under an electric light, slaving for $5 a week. This friend of mine is in my class in public school, and the teacher always tells us that this is a free country and that every man and woman has an opportunity to become rich and even become president of the United States.

I heard of a group called the Young Workers of America and I found out that the group was organizing the youth of the working class, to fight for better conditions for the workers, the abolishment of child labor, and of capitalism. I was in Pennsylvania for about four months, and I saw children from the ages of 10 to 12 years slaving in the mines as breaker boys for the simple reason that they had to help to keep up the family, because their parents did not make a living wage.

I tried to join this organization, but found out that I was too young. They informed me that I could join the Junior Group, but I found out that there was no such group in Harlem, the district in which I lived. So I made up my mind that I would form a branch. I got about eight members and I went down to the city office, Local New York, and gave in their names and addresses and they sent a comrade as director.

So a branch was formed.

RUSSIAN EXPORTS DOUBLED IN YEAR, KRASSIN REPORTS

Demand Elimination of Commission Agents

MOSCOW, Feb. 19.—Much interest was attached to Mr. Krassin's report on Russian foreign trade in 1922-1923, delivered at the All-Union Conference of Russian Trade Representatives, now being held at Moscow. The People's Commisary of Foreign Trade accompanied his report with a statement of Russian foreign trade policy.

Exports from the Union of Soviet Republics reached 210,608,000 gold roubles in 1922-23, which is more than twice the value of the exports in the preceding year. As for the current season, there is ample ground to expect that Russian exports will amount to at least a half billion gold roubles. The scheme of exporting 220,000,000 poods of grain will be carried out in full.

Credit In Corn Exports.

The system of crediting operations in Soviet corn exports is being successfully developed: thus three contracts to this effect have been concluded with Russo-British Mixed Company for grain exports from Russia, as well as contracts with a large French concern, an Austrian and a Dutch firm—all of which have agreed to advance credits on security of breakstuffs in Russian ports. Considerable progress has likewise been achieved in the export of timber, flax, oil and fur.

While imports into Russia have decreased in quantity, they have gained in quality. The former circumstance —remarks Mr. Krassin—contributes to the trade balance being a favorable one, and this feature will further develop during the current year, while the latter circumstance, namely, the higher specification of goods imported, is occasioned by a substantial decrease of the imports of foodstuffs.

The main tasks facing the union in the field of its trade relations with foreign countries are: a broader attraction of foreign capital; the intensification and large variety of exports; the elimination of all intermediary and commission agents; the promoting of the organization of mixed companies.

Bar "Cheap Foreign Goods."

The Soviet Government, further declares the People's Commissary, will not allow "commercial intervention," nor can it, having in view the very interests of the peasantry, supply them with cheap foreign goods, in detriment to the resuscitation of Russia's own industries.

Concluding his speech by remarking that "the economic construction of all great countries had always been carried along the lines of the participation therein of foreign capital," Mr. Krassin states his belief, that "the day is not far off when we shall receive a loan by foreign capital. It is most probable that in this working year the Union of Soviet Republics will, on some conditions or other, receive necessary foreign credits."

Women March, No Queues Seen, at Chinese Funeral

NEW YORK, Feb. 19—When Chinatown was Chinatown they used to come to Chin Tong Way and ask his service according to the wisdom of their forefathers. That was before west clutched east and taught it to jazz and typewrite.

Chin Tong Way sat outside his general merchandise store puffing a mystically engraved pipe and sadly watched the passing of old Chinese customs.

They chided Chin Tong Way about keeping his queue but he would say "it has never been the custom for the fox to cut his own tail."

Now Chin Tong Way at 74 years of wisdom has passed to the land of gold poppies. Chinatown sent him to his ancestors with the most splendid funeral ever seen in oriental New York.

Eight hundred mourners marched in the procession with 100 automobiles. Cymbals, tom toms and stringed instruments played the "dragon's mourning song."

Contrary to custom, Chinese women were in the procession and there was not a queue to be seen.

Russia Will Spend 5,000,000 Roubles on Farm Machinery

MOSCOW, Feb. 19.—According to the program of the Government Plan Committee five million rubles will be spent for building tractors and harvest machinery.

The money, which was assigned for the purpose of buying tractors abroad, will be spent in building up the production of tractors in Russia. Most of the money will be spent in organizing the building of tractors at the Charkoff Locomotive Works.

Experts Meet in Paris.

PARIS, Feb. 19.—Committee of experts number one, under chairmanship of General Charles G. Dawes, met today and discussed general principles upon which their forthcoming plan for settlement of the reparations impasse is to be based.

A thousand new members wanted for the "I-want-to-make-THE DAILY WORKER-grow" club. Write for DAILY WORKER grow" club.

ENSLAVING GERMANY

LITTLE by little we are being let in on the recommendations of "Hell-and-Maria" Dawes and the other American expert saviors of Germany.

What we expected to happen is about to be announced as the accepted road to salvation that is to be forced upon Germany by the big international business interests. It appears that the Dawes program will have two outstanding features. The first is, the payment of German reparations not thru the medium of direct gold marks but thru the medium of German goods put on the world market. In the everyday parlance of the factory workers this means that the Allied imperialists are to have the German workingmen pay the reparations by working overtime and turning out sufficient commodities which, when placed on the world market, will exchange for the gold that the French and Belgian imperialists have been seeking so covetously.

This plan will not only save German capitalism but will strengthen it. At the same time the Dawes scheme will satisfy the big interests of the victorious Allied countries. Should this program be put over, the German workingmen will be turned into coolies and capitalism will have a longer lease on the life of the vanquished and victors alike.

The other basic feature of the Dawes proposal is the establishment of a gigantic bank in Germany. This bank is to have foreign control, immediately issue gold currency to the amount of $750,000,000, and operate on an actual gold guarantee of 50%. Thru this arrangement Dawes hopes to have the Allied bankers be the dictators of German industry and control the very life-blood of the country, for under modern capitalist production the control of exchange and credit unavoidably means the control of the whole circulatory system of economic relationships. In view of the huge sum of money needed for the establishment of the bank, it is clear that American financiers will have to step in and be the real receivers of Germany. This banking plan ties the German workers hopelessly to the chariots of the international capitalist imperialists.

Every American worker and farmer and the working masses of every country in the world are menaced by this outrageous proposal to turn the great German working class into coolies. The enslavement of the German workers will tend to lower the living standards of the workers of every other country. Such a sweeping victory for the capitalist imperialists over Germany's toiling masses will make the employers of every country more arrogant in their dealings with the workers and will encourage the exploiters to force new harsh terms on their own laboring classes.

RUBBER AND OIL PREVENT FREEING OF PHILIPPINES

Financial Expert Frank About U. S. Game

By SCOTT NEARING

(Federated Press Staff Writer)

Under the assumption that "government should be the partner of capital," Charles Hodges, assistant director, division of Oriental Commerce and politics, New York university, writes of The Business Background of the Philippine Question, in the Annalist for Jan. 28, 1924.

The continued occupation of the Philippines is, Hodges declares "in dollar-and-cents terms a matter of investment." On the one hand, the islands occupy a strategic position in the east. On the other hand, there are very large American investments in all of the leading business activities of the archipelago.

Islands Worth $5,500,000,000.

The Philippines lie "at the crossroads of the greatest trade routes of the future." Consequently, they are exposed to "aggression from every corner of the earth." As yet, the land is largely uncultivated; forests reserves of 64,880 square miles belong, 99%, to the Philippine people; the total wealth of the islands, despite their underdevelopment, stands at $5,500,000,000.

"The crux of the situation," Hodges writes, "is the titanic struggle for raw material now being waged by the great industrial powers of the world. In it, the tropics have assumed a new significance. From the standpoint of the Americans on the firing line of this bitter competition in the orient for the essential products and strategic raw materials, the Philippines seem to mean much to the future of the United States.

"They see America virtually lacking tropical possessions—but 40% of the tropics are independent; the European powers have extended their tropical dominion to roundly 59% of the earth's 'heat belt,' and the United States has under its flag not even 1%. Rubber, cocoanut oil, hemp, sugar, petroleum, become investments in patriotism."

Or, would it be more correct to say that patriots invest in sugar, petroleum and rubber?

Why Independence Is Denied.

But, whatever the wording, the facts remain the same. The people of the Philippines demand the independence which has been promised them by the responsible officials of the United States during more than 20 years—promised them verbally and thru the legislative enactment of the Jones law.

The answer is simple and direct: the islands contain certain essential resources upon which the business prosperity of some of the most powerful economic interests in the United States must depend during the next 25 years.

Since these same interests are in control of the machinery of government and the decision of essential matters of public policy, it does not take any great imagination to predict that the Philippines will never get any important measure of self-government so long as rubber, oil and sugar continue to dominate American public life.

Bryan On Stump Again.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 19.—William Jennings Bryan went on the stump again today, campaigning for election as delegate at large to the National Democratic Convention.

SAXONY IN THROES OF HUNGER AND "LAW AND ORDER"

Misery and Militarism Rule Together

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

DRESDEN, Germany, Feb. 19.—While the military commander of Saxony, General Mueller, prides himself on the fact that "law and order have been re-established in Saxony," 40% of the population of this industrial state are dependent upon public charity, either governmental or private, for their sustenance.

Saxony is, next to the Ruhr valley, the most closely crowded area of Germany. Almost five million persons are crowded into an area of not quite 6000 square miles. One million are industrial workers, normally employed in 38,800 factories. Some 650,000 Saxon workers are employed in the smaller towns (when there is employment), and only 380,000 in the big centers like Dresden, Leipsic and Chemnitz.

Of the million or more Saxon workers, 308,685 are jobless and dependent upon meager government doles, added to which is the charity of organizations like the American Quakers. Some 295,368 are working only part time and must receive partial aid from the government; and 582,425 are part time workers who receive no doles.

I was told by the millitary commander that 157,000 families were looking for homes. Over 4000 families are confined to one room each; 36,423 families have had to take up quarters with relatives who themselves have but one bedroom.

The examining physicians for the public schools all sing the same tune: the children are badly undernourished. In Dresden 90% of the school children are undernourished.

When one considers this background of misery and of poverty, the handbills distributed by the League of Saxon Industrials strike one almost grotesque:

"Law, order and security have returned to Saxony. Acts of terrorization, plundering, forcible demands for higher wages, maltreatment of employers have fortunately stopped since the federal government has intervened."

Scientist Finds Active Intellectual Life at Moscow

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Feb. 19—Sven Hedin, Swedish explorer and scientist, announces that he will do all he can to get the Swedish nation to recognize Russia as soon as he reaches Stockholm.

"We are neighbors"—he declared—"and we must live in good friendship. Besides, both our countries are in need of trade and other mutual relations established on a sound basis. Each of them is in a position to provide much of what the other needs."

The famous Swedish explorer said an indelible impression was made upon him by his weekly stay in Moscow. Life beats at a wonderful pulse in the Red Capital, he said, and as he inspected the city and visited various scientific institutions, museums, picture galleries, he deeply appreciated the fact that scientific life has not been discontinued in Moscow since the Revolution.

Greene's Condition Critical.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The condition of Senator Frank L. Greene, of Vermont, seriously wounded Friday night by a stray bullet in a battle between prohibition agents and bootleggers, was "extremely critical" today, his physician, Dr. Daniel L. Borden, announced.

Get unity thru the Labor Party!

TRAITOR VARNEY'S PAL JOINS HIM IN ATTACKING LABOR

Minneapolis Workers Party Denounces Author

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 19—Following the publication of a pamphlet here by one John Gabriel Soltis containing an attack on all progressive and radical elements, including the Communists, in the labor movement, the District Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America has issued the following statement:

The attention of the Executive Committee of District No. 9 of the Workers Party of America has been called to a recent literary abortion of J. G. Soltis, in which he launches an attack against many of the most active and influential labor men of Minneapolis. It is not our desire in this statement to pass on the statements made in the pamphlet; the individuals concerned are well able to do that. But in as much as the name of our organization is used thruout the book, and in as much as he assumed to speak as a communist, we wish to emphatically deny that he has any connection with our movement.

We might also say that judging from his writings and speeches he has shown no understanding of the principles of tactics of communism.

The Workers Party of America is a constructive force adapting its tactics to the realities of the struggle for freedom from capitalist exploitation. We are working to amalgamate the trade unions into great industrial unions and to unite the workers into a class Farmer-Labor party.

We have worked in the past and will continue to work with all elements who will support this program in the interest of the working farmers and industrial workers of America.

(Signed)

District Executive Committee,
Workers Party of America,
District No. 9.

Soltis is an ex-member of the I. W. W., an ex-member of the Socialist Party, an ex-employe of the Nonpartisan League and was a close friend of Harold Lord Varney, the pseudo-intellectual member of the Industrial Workers of the World who became tired of contact with the workingclass and hired out as an employee of the department of justice some two years ago after launching attacks in the capitalist press on his former associates.

Amalgamation means strength!

NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER ACCUSED AS BRIBE TAKER

Steel Company Named as Paymaster

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland, Feb. 19.—A Teapot Dome scandal in miniature is exposed here in the biggest legal case Newfoundland ever had, now up before the legislative council.

Sir Richard Squire, former premier of Newfoundland, is accused of taking money from various industrial corporations, in return of which he misused his official position in favor of those firms. Outstanding among the enterprises concerned is the British Empire Steel Corporation, or "Besco," well known all over the North American continent since last year's miners' and steel workers' strike in Nova Scotia and the railroading of their fighting leader, J. B. McLachlan.

The evidence was that the defendant, while in office, on various occasions had asked for and had received sums, all of which amount approximately to a quarter of a million dollars.

On one occasion, in December, 1921, Squire had sent a middleman to Montreal to obtain "campaign funds," to which the president of the British Empire Steel Corporation was invited to contribute the mere trifle of $100,000, in addition to $51,000 already paid to Squire on previous occasions. For those sums Squire pledged himself to bring about modifications of a contract of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company with the Newfoundland government, this firm being a subsidiary of Besco. The said contract called for the expenditure of $3,500,000 in Newfoundland in a specified period.

The same middleman testified that he was commissioned to negotiate with the Commercial Cable Company of New York "on matters affecting the company's cable system in Newfoundland," and that his "instructions included a request for a $15,000 fund which was to be used in connection with the Newfoundland election in 1923."

Books of the St. John's branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia and other bank records show evidently that large sums from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and from other still unknown sources were advanced to the credit of Squire during the last three years.

Attack on Workers Party Blow at the Steel Workers' Union

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Charging that the raid on Workers Party headquarters by the police of Farrell, Pa., on Lincoln's birthday is part of the attempt to "stop organization among the steel workers," the American Civil Liberties Union has announced its intention of backing the fight to recover the property confiscated by the police. The confiscated property included $176 worth of literature.

"This raid," Prof. Harry F. Ward, chairman of the Civil Liberties Union declared, in a statement issued at the union offices, "is further evidence of the pressure brought to bear on local officials by the federal department of justice at the dictation of employers and other interests in West Pennsylvania to stop organization among the steel workers."

Expose Fall-Denby Plot to Give Alaska to Guggenheims

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—John E. Ballaine, of Seward, Alaska, and Seattle, has laid before President Coolidge his proofs that Secretaries Fall and Denby stopped the development of the great coal deposits in Alaska—the coal involved in the Ballinger scandal and other coal held for the use of the navy—since Denby turned these coal lands over to Fall at the time of the transfer of the naval oil reserves.

Ballaine has the support of the railroad brotherhoods in this matter, since he has convinced them that the Fall-Denby policy has been one of deliberate sabotage of the government's railroad in Alaska and the discrediting of government ownership and operation of railroads. He has shown that the administration has cut Alaska off from the rest of the United States by refusing to furnish steamship connections between Seattle and San Francisco and the terminus of the railroad at Seward. The Guggenheims control the only shipping, and they charge freight rates several times as high as formerly were paid. The Guggenheims are slowly strangling Alaska. They hope to get hold of its best mineral deposits.

Ballaine says the records will show that as early as July, 1921, Fall began negotiations for the transfer of the Matanuska coal field to his control, and for a lease of this coal to private parties for 50 years. The lease never was made, but during the negotiations and since that time "misleading announcements, contrary to the official facts" as to the quality of the Matanuska coal have been given out by the offices controlled by Admiral Robinson and by Director Bain of the Bureau of Mines.

Crusader Service Praises Reporting of Race Congress

Says the Crusader Service, Negro Press Service, of the DAILY WORKER'S reporting of the Sanhedrin:

"In contrast with the attitude of the bourgeois press in almost totally ignoring this important race conference, the attitude of the great labor daily of this city, the 'DAILY WORKER', is most encouraging. This powerful daily is reporting regularly and with the utmost fairness the sessions of the Conference. It has also given editorial welcome to the Sanhedrin, saying among other things:

"The DAILY WORKER, as the official organ of the Workers Party of America, extends its greetings to the great conference of American Negroes—the All-Race Assembly—that meets today in Chicago.

"'The overwhelming majority of of the American Negroes are workers and no section of the American working class has so many urgent reasons for unity, so many grievances to protest, is so bitterly persecuted and exploited.

"'All over the world, since the Russian Revolution with its working class interpretation of the policy of self-determination of races and nationalities brought new hope to the subject peoples, their voices have been heard with increasing clearness.'"

The Tragedy of Woodrow Wilson

One would like to remember Woodrow Wilson only as the author of "The New Freedom." Had his career ended immediately after the publication of that stirring book, his place in the hearts of generations to come would be more certain. Had Wilson, the president, been guided by the sentiments of Wilson, the political campaigner, the world would be vastly better off today and would think vastly more of Wilson.

No man ever said more beautiful things about democracy than Woodrow Wilson. Liberals, even Socialists, hailed him as a deliverer. When the war-lords began their carefully planned campaign for preparedness and shouted for vengeance on Germany, Wilson still declared that there is such a thing as being "too proud to fight." Apostles of the "strenuous life," like Theodore Roosevelt, snorted at this doctrine of "mollycoddles." But Wilson held his ground and beat Hughes for the presidency on the slogan, "he kept us out of war."

Then the pressure from Wall Street and other sources became too strong. It was not long before Wilson kept us out of peace, and the great madness was on. But Wilson, the idealist, was still in evidence. He formulated the famous fourteen points to guarantee that the "world may be made safe for democracy." The world was thrilled with this inspiring program for a clean peace, and the Russian people, just freed of the yoke of Czardom, acclaimed the American president as the new hope of oppressed peoples.

Then came Versailles—and the crash. The fourteen points came out of the peace conference unrecognized. Self-determination of peoples, open covenants openly arrived at, no indemnities, no annexations—all this was bartered away for the League of Damnations—another name for the closed alliance of imperialistic powers originally responsible for the World War. Wilson, it is said in his defense, could make little impression on these cynical old-world diplomats with his irridescent idealism. But Wilson could flatly have refused to take part in a conference that meant the utter annihilation of every one of the fourteen points. Had he taken this position, historians would have judged him one of the world's greatest statesmen.

Wilson, the liberal, refused to pardon the political prisoners. Wilson, the liberal, permitted his attorney-general to hound thousands of innocent workingmen into prison during a wave of red hysteria. Verily, Woodrow Wilson could talk more liberally than any of our presidents.

We bear no ill-will toward the late ex-president. We feel that his life was one of the most poignant of tragedies—a record of frustrated idealism. We prefer to remember him only as the brilliant author of "The New Freedom."

LENINGRAD, Feb. 19.—A considerable number of books, edited by the State Editorial Office, Leningrad Branch, have been purchased by the representatives of the New York Public Library, during their stay here. These books are intended for the Slavonic section of the New York Library. Moreover, negotiations are under way for the purchase of second copies of scientific editions, kept in the Academy of Science and the Public Library, in Leningrad.

Just An Accident.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., Feb. 19.—A verdict of accidental death was returned by the coroner's jury here today over the body of Frank V. Correa, prominent stock man and manager for the Morgan County Shippers' Association. Correa was killed instantly when the truck which he was driving was struck by a Chicago and Alton passenger train.

Russ-Persian Ship Line.

Petrograd, Feb. 19.—Thru water transport service between Petrograd and Persia, via Rybinsk and other Volga ports, has been established by the Russo-German mixed company, "Russ-transit." For this purpose, the company has built two steamers—the Ispahan and the Hamadan, specially adapted for navigation in river and sea.

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

"The Humming Bird" Is a Hummer.

Gloria Swanson at last has a part in which she can play to advantage despite the exaggerated contortions with which our movie directors invest all denizens of the Parisian underworld. She is a wild and woolly Apache, a daring and clever thief, who, in boy's clothing, is known to the police as "The Humming Bird." Gloriously immoral, she steals under the very nose of the Police Inspector, throws herself at the head of the handsome American reporter, and boasts of her booty to the Virgin Mary in the church which provides her favorite "get-away."

Along comes the "Great" War. It does not interest the "Humming Bird" very much until she finds that her reporter has enlisted in the Foreign Legion. Right then and there she gets a bad case of belated patriotism. She turns recruiting sergeant and lines up all the skulking "Wolves of Montmarte" to become dead heroes in defense of a land in which even this picture's titles admit them to be outcasts. The war scenes are not merely realistic, most of them are real. They are obviously duped from actual battle scenes but the audience is glad to forgive faulty film in exchange for a chance to see attacks with liquid fire, houses crumbling under real shell fire, artillery, cavalry and the whole works going into action. The staged scenes are equally good, especially when young Zi-Zi has his face blown into a pulp of mud and blood as he saves his whole trench from a bomb explosion.

Morality serves the Humming Bird very poorly. She wants to turn her loot over to the Virgin Mary for the relief of the soldiers and is arrested in the church, caught red-handed. She gets ten years but is liberated by a Zeppelin bomb just in time to save her dying wounded American lover and to get a pardon to the accompaniment of Zi-Zi's war medal. He was the last of the Wolves she had sent to death so she got the bounty.

A goodly part of this picture is plain, unadulterated, flag-waving hokum, French and American. There is much hands-across-the-sea stuff, and attention while the flag goes by. But it no longer registers—not with big town audiences at any rate. The boys who see themselves marching in uniform either in New York or Paree are too busy figuring how the bonus will help them get out of debt. So the house remained cold as almost every variety of sure-fire stuff was paraded. Three years ago it would have raised the roof.

But the other half of the picture is well worth sitting thru the bunk—especially when we know that many of our patriots feel that French payment of war loans would surely bring the bonus. So a worker's verdict on the Humming Bird would be fifty-fifty—and that's pretty good for a modern movie.

Soviet Exhibits Make Impression at Persian Fair

MOSCOW, Feb. 19.—The Russian Plenipotentiary Mission in Persia, has received a large number of favorable comments on the Soviet exhibits at the Teheran natonal exhibition, according to an official message from the Persian capital.

Among others, the Afghan and Turkish Envoys have voiced their admiration for the order reigning in the Soviet pavilions, the excelent quality and, generally, the conspicuous progress achieved by the Soviet industries. Similar references have been received on the part of a great many leading Persian merchants.

The general conviction is being expressed by the fore-mentioned persons and circles, that Soviet Russia, recovered economically, will be a source of profitable commercial exchange for her Oriental neighbors.

A Million A Day.

A Million Francs A Day! That's the tune which the great French Co-operative Wholesale Society is playing these days.

The Magasin de Gros—which is the French name for this gigantic organization—has more than 1,400 affiliated societies, including a number of factories, which it serves as a central purchasing and distributing agent. Five years ago its annual turnover totalled only about 150 million francs a year; at the present rate of growth its annual turnover will be close to 400 million francs.

Gompers Boosts McCormick.

Senator Medill McCormick, Republician candidate for re-election from Illinois got a boost from Samuel Gompers yesterday. Enemies of McCormick, who is one of the chief stockholders in the Chicago Tribune, were accused of not supporting the efforts of the American Federation of Labor to have a child labor amendment to the constitution passed. Sammy wired McCormick's supporters that McCormick had supported such efforts and had introduced a proposed amendment.

Reorganize Fire Department.

Mayor Dever's plan to reorganize the fire department, putting the business end of the department in the hands of the fire commissioner and putting the fire marshal out on the street, in charge of fire fighting, is not popular with the men who will be subordinated. The plan also calls for the reorganization of the bureau of fire prevention under the direction of an engineer. The plan does not affect the ordinary fire fighters.

LABOR DEFENSE COUNCIL PUTTING R. U. R. ON IN APRIL

Robot Play Will Be Brilliant Success

Fears that the Labor Defense Council would not carry thru its plans for producing the extraordinary play, R. U. R. (Rossum's Universal Robots), in Chicago, are groundless. The council announces definitely that a series of performances will be given during the month of April, in labor halls on the north, west and south sides.

Rehearsals have begun. The principal parts are being taken by actors and actresses of wide experience, who can be depended upon to put into the production all the force and fire and sarcasm and majesty that its Communist authors intended.

Woodson Is Director.

Guy Woodson, of the Studio Players, is directing the rehearsals. Prominent in the cast are Geraldine Udell, Mary Swett, Harry Pieres, Frank Lathrop and Jack Praither.

The Labor Defense Council considers R. U. R. not only as a great drama but as an extraordinary piece of propaganda, one which cannot fail to burn its lesson deep into the mind of every proletarian. Thousands of workers are expected to witness the performances. The whole enterprise will be on a larger scale than anything of its kind ever attempted. All available resources will be mobilized to make it something which will be long remembered in the Chicago labor movement.

Six Robots Wanted.

To complete the cast, the Labor Defense Council is on the lookout for six sturdy Robots, to personify the product turned out in Rossum's Universal Robot" factory. There is little or no speaking required of these "robots." A good robot—like a good wage slave—is one who does what he is told and says little. But in spite of the humbleness of their roles, the robots are as necessary to the cast of R. U. R. as the workers are to industry. The parts must be filled at once. Volunteers should get in touch with the office of the Labor Defense Council, 166 W. Washington St.

In the midst of the preparations for the staging of R. U. R., the Studio Players, who will be the backbone of the production, are continuing their own performances of out-of-the-ordinary plays in their little theatre back of the Radical Book Shop. Their next production will be Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman."

Paterson, N. J., Is Busy in Drive for Relief in Germany

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PATERSON, N. J., Feb. 19.—A conference to organize relief for the starving German workers has been called by the International Workers Aid, to take place Wednesday, Feb. 27, at 8 P. M., at 3 Governors St., Paterson, N. J. All workers organizations of Paterson are invited to send at least two delegates.

The call sent out by the Paterson Committee for International Workers Aid, points out the distressful conditions of the German proletariat. Already the International Workers Aid is feeding more than 20,000 workers daily. This, however, by no means reaches the great number who are in need of assistance.

The International Workers Aid has been supporting the striking metal workers and also looking after the women and children of workers who fell in the street battles during the November food riots.

The workers of all cities in this country are organizing conferences and collecting funds. It is the duty of the Paterson workers as well to share in this campaign.

Food Workers Active.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—At the second business meeting of the Bakers' Union of the Amalgamated Food Workers Local 164, again discussed acting upon the report of the conference of the International Workers Aid for German relief, unanimously voted another $1,000. At their first meeting they voted $200.

The members of the organization are still working for German relief and at the next meeting there will be further discussion of the starving German workers. This example of International solidarity of the Bakers Union should be followed by like action by other bakers' locals.

Independent Butchers Union, 174, has also been hard at work for German aid. It contributed $200 at their last meeting and also sent out 50 subscription lists to the shops with the instructions that they be returned quickly. The Executive Committee was informed that these lists are coming in, and that they hope to raise more than $1,000 in this way.

Ohio Farmers For Cooperatives.

Ohio farmers are planning big things for 1924 and they all revolve around one little word—Co-operation. Co-operative marketing organizations of dairy, live stock, wool, grain, poultry, and vegetable products are all on the program for development during the present year, according to the report sent the All-American Co-operative Commission by the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation.

Co-operatives Revive In Italy.

Slowly and painfully the Italian co-operative movement which was all but annihilated six months ago by Fascist plunder, loot and arson, is recovering its strength. The last half year, reports the British Co-operation News to the All American Co-operative Commission, has seen a transformation of the Italian co-operative movement that nobody would have thought possible.

Playing Down Oil

Denby's resignation has plunged the capitalist press into a discussion of the legality of his part in the transfer of public oil lands to private hands.

We submit that this has little to do with the major issue which is that Secretary of the Navy Denby, an important cog in the machinery of American capitalist government, took part in the conspiracy for which all members of the Harding-Coolidge cabinet must be held responsible.

This conspiracy, entered into long before the Harding administration took office, and in which participation in the profits thereof was part of the reward for the support of Harding by various individuals, had as its object the theft of public property—if public property can be said to exist under capitalism.

Perhaps the steal had the sanction of law. Legal authorities appear to be divided on the matter—their opinion depending upon their professional connections. It will be discovered in all probability that the Denbys, Daughertys, Roosevelts and others are not legally guilty—that at the worst they were merely indiscreet. Senator Fall may be prosecuted if he does not save his former friends from embarrassment by dying. He is the scapegoat.

Denby is a 100 per cent American type. Below the average intelligence, even for an American business man, his career in the cabinet was the culmination of a life of publicity-seeking. Over fifty years of age when this country entered the war, with one eye on future political developments, he enlisted as a private and bravely aided in keeping the German army out of Detroit, Ypsilanti, Kalamazoo and other Michigan cities.

His appointment by Harding was in line with a policy which filled the cabinet with vicious mediocrities like Davis, Daugherty and himself combined with hardheaded financiers of the Mellon type and skillful corporation lawyers like Hughes. Considered from the standpoint of capitalist morality alone the Harding cabinet was little above the average of a convention of oil stock salesmen.

The 7,000,000 majority polled by the republicans made their capitalist backers a little careless. Neither did they take into account the discontent that has been growing thruout the nation since the war and which has been aggravated immensely by the bankruptcy of the farmers and middle class elements, living on the farmers, to whom the democrats make an appeal.

The theft of the Teapot Dome oil reserves was a little too raw; the masses had been waiting for some opportunity to express a hatred of capitalist normalcy that had been nurtured until it was lusty and vociferous.

The exposures of the robberies let loose a storm that has all but wrecked the republican party and that has involved the democrat opposition. The resignation of Denby, probably followed by Daugherty, is the first attempt to clean house. The feeling in Washington is that the exposures have gone too far and that in the interests of both capitalist parties a truce should be arranged.

The next few days will tell whether popular resentment is strong enough to prevent the playing down of the oil scandal investigations.

The endorsement of McAdoo by Senator Walsh of Montana shows that for a cabinet official to sell his influence to an oil corporation is not regarded as culpable, but in line with the best capitalist traditions. As chairman of the senate investigation committee, Walsh now is hardly in a position to demand the prosecution of republicans like Denby and Daugherty.

This will doubtless be a source of great relief, not only to the culprits, but to many of the babbittry, who were afraid that in the heat of a presidential year the rules of the game had been forgotten.

Liberal Lying

Norman Thomas, in an editorial service issued by the league for industrial democracy, writing on the miners' convention, repeats the canard that the radical opposition to Lewis combined with the klan elements in the convention.

We love our liberal friends, but when they descend to the same depths as the capitalist press we are forced to chide them and in this particular instance there is some evidence of conscious falsification. In support of this statement Norman Thomas quotes a female, whom he describes as "our own correspondent."

On one issue and on one issue alone did the radical and klan elements in the miners' convention find themselves voting alike. This was on the question of the basis of representation from unions to the convention and no one not consciously desiring to slander the radicals would attempt to make of this accidental but easily understandable incident an alliance between the klan and the radicals against Lewis.

The radicals wanted a larger representation from the local unions and so did the klan—but for obviously different reasons.

The klansmen in the convention supported the Lewis machine on every issue except this; seemingly this should be enough to convince the fair-minded liberal critics of the labor and radical movements that no alliance was possible between the two.

May we say here that the small but heroic band, who are striving to usher in industrial democracy without even knowing of what it consists, constantly furnishes incidents, such as the one cited, tending to show that they find it much easier to get along with reactionaries of the Lewis type than they do with the left wing elements like the communists, for instance.

We communists, of course, are uncharitable. We refuse to be fair to the enemies of the working class and that is an unpardonable sin in the eyes of liberals. They themselves are so fair that they never lie about the employers and their tools in the labor movement, but only about the radicals, who, as everyone knows, expect this kind of treatment from the liberals—and are seldom disappointed.

A New Capitalist Crisis

The French franc is again on the toboggan and dispatches yesterday tell of wild scenes on the bourse with brokers swamped by orders for the sale of French securities.

The stock exchange reflects the crisis in the French government. The scenes in the stock market are duplicated in the Chamber of Deputies where, with the Communists playing a leading role, an assault is being made on the Poincare policies that will lead to his resignation.

It had been believed that the action of the Chamber in voting, tho by a reduced majority, the Poincare 20 per cent tax measure, would tend to stabilize the franc; the debate, however, developed such strong opposition to the government that, altho the measure passed, the franc dropped to 24.30 to the dollar.

It is believed that Poincare will fall when he attempts to jam thru his electoral reform bill to which even President Millerand is opposed.

The cabinet and financial crisis in France is part of a general European crisis—one of a series that we predicted over a month ago; Hungarian, Austrian and Belgian currencies are also dropping and pioneering the path that the French currency will follow.

The British dock strike, the strike of thousands of French workers in many industries, renewed revolutionary activity in Germany, the cabinet crisis here and the near-panic in Wall Street last Friday, all bear witness to the fact that a tremendous new upheaval is taking place in the capitalist world.

The Poincare government is the leader of continental reaction and counter-revolution; even tho Poincare be succeeded by Clemenceau the unity of purpose of the French imperialists will have been broken and their hold upon the masses weakened.

A new wave of revolution is beating against that breakwater of capitalist society— the capitalist state.

Worried Wall Street

Says the New York Times, explaining the near-panic on the stock exchange last Friday, when the bears struck some fell blows that resulted in the Wall Street barometer of prosperity dropping to "stormy:"

> It became evident, even before the beginning of last week, that something akin to hysteria was beginning to seize the public mind. The incident of Mr. Vanderlip was only one illustration of the way in which rumor, inference, prediction and insinuation, applied to all kinds of individuals and industries, were affecting excited imaginations.

The Times goes on to say that the decline of the list under bear pressure was the result of a "tip," given by a professional operator, but this hardly accounts for the loss of from three to twelve points by well-known issues.

The truth of the matter is that confidence in government has been shaken to such an extent by the Teapot Dome exposures and the promise of further revelations, preceded by the widespread economic breakdown in the agricultural regions, engendering such a growing distrust in the stability of American capitalism, that it is forced to operate in what may be described as a chronic condition of nationwide skepticism.

It is not surprising that the stock exchange should reflect this national frame of mind. It is the most unstable part of the financial system and, while predictions in a period of rapid change are doubly dangerous, we venture the prophecy that from now on the stock market will be presented with one crisis after another.

We may witness a real "Black Friday" in Wall Street before the presidential elections in November despite the frantic efforts of the financiers to send out rescue expeditions into the stricken provinces.

"Stool" Reports Lenin Meeting To Patriots

By J. O. BENTALL

THE morning papers advertised that the monster Lenin memorial meeting held in the Madison Square Garden was to be reported to the Allied Patriotic Societies at a session in the Army ond Navy Club and that it was "open to the public."

Only a sensation like that could possibly have jerked me off my chair in my den where I was fighting with the heroine and the villain in a plot that I was just trying to finish.

Now since I was to ruin the afternoon I figured that I wanted to see the Wilson funeral service that was held where the Lenin meeting had taken place, in the Madison Square Garden, so I got an early start, vividly remembering that I had the time of my life to get into that huge place when the Bolsheviks stormed it on the previous Monday night to honor the memory of Lenin, tho I was there before seven o'clock. With all the screaming headlines of the entire metropolitan press calling frantically upon all the patriotic American citizens to gather in tribute to Wilson, the great war president, I had slight hopes of being able to get within a block or two of the place. But there was plenty of room. Big flanks of seats stood yawning for occupants and only few were in the galleries. It was fortunate, indeed, that the government had a lot of soldiers who could be drafted into the hall, and a bunch of preachers who wanted to see what a crowd looks like.

The whole meeting showed that Wilson is dead. So is all that Wilson stood for. He stood only for dead things. No workers were there to mourn him. Only a labor faker was there to say that Wilson stood for labor. Fosdick, the preacher said he stood for peace. Both lied, and they semed to know it. What a contrast to the Lenin meeting. It seemed a pity that the place should be allowed to be desecrated so soon after the soul of the working class had made it sacred at the Lenin meeting.

Then I hustled off to the Army and Navy Club. Preliminary reports were made. Among them one on illiteracy. "20,000,000 people in this country can neither read nor write," came the facts that seemed to astonish the two dozen ladies and gentlemen present. These are the "Allied Patriotic Societies," and they looked it.

It was a hard pill to swallow—this illiteracy report. An old man came to the rescue. He showed that "all these illiterates of the South had responded to the draft and had killed millions of Germans. The illiterates are loyal, and that's what counts." Applause. Then: "The question is not if they are illiterate, but are they loyal?"

Next came the question of "that song they sing, that 'International'." Could they get a translation of it? Could they find out if it had anything seditious in it? Would the committee try to report on it at the next meeting? Such singing they had never heard. The people all sing it, and they sing it as if they meant it. It must be red and seditious. Get a copy of it—in any language. The Allied Patriotic Societies must know about this song. Maybe it can be suppressed. The red flag was and this song should come before the legislature and Congress. If it is seditious.

The stool who had been at the Lenin meeting made many motions and showed great indignation. It was hard for him to speak, he said. It was an awful meeting. They charged 30 and 55 cents and, think of it, one dollar! And he could hardly get in at that. He had no ticket, and bluffed the cops and made them believe he belonged to the press, and got in free, he bragged. But how to get a seat. There was none, and he was there before seven. The crowd was just horrid. There was a bigger crowd on the outside, and he understood that the Central Opera House was also filled and thousands had to be turned away. No such meeting had he ever seen, and he was no newcomer.

He had gathered a lot of leaflets and programs, a copy of the Liberator, of the Daily Worker, of the Young Comrade. He slapped the package on the desk and sighed. "The editor of the Liberator, he is an American-born, Robert Minor, not a foreigner, no, a real American. Imagine."

See who spoke. Ruthenberg, he has been in jail. He was caught with barrels and barrels of red literature in "Brickman, Minnesota." He thot that was the place, was sure it was. He had been convicted and yet he was not in the pen. Our courts are no good, he felt. The lawyers try to get justice for these fellows—when they should get the rope for them. "There is too much of this justice talk," he meant, and an old lady with fur-trimmed cape and lip applauded.

The Chairman, that was a man by the name of Gitlow, a lawyer, and could not the bar association get his license away from him. It should try, it should. Such a voice he had. Everybody could hear him. He was "astute." Ruthenberg also was "astute." They are all "astute" fellows. "They have brains and play upon the foreigners—and upon [illegible] sent. Act at once! radicals, like Poyntz and other men of means." Gitlow, who was this Gitlow? He had been in the pen also. Smith had pardoned him. He has not repented, this man Gitlow. Now he was chairman of this horrible meeting, which shows how much good it does to put some men in jail. Put them in the chair next. He would, this stool who made the report.

And they took up a collection, too—after the people had paid to get in. They had the whole thing so well organized that they could do the job in no time. They had a lot of young people, girls in red waists, and fellows with red bands around their arms. Most of them from eighteen to twenty-two years of age. Husky young ones, maybe some of them are clerks and stenographers in respectable business houses. And they don't appreciate it. They talked to the police, too. He saw pretty young girls argue with the police, and the police took it all in and bowed and smiled, and he had heard one woman say to a policeman that he was also a member of the working class, and the fellow had agreed. It is hard to tell what influence meetings like this might have on our loyal police, and is it not a wise hint to look after that, too?

Lore, he was a German, but it is queer how these foreigners learn English. There he stood as if he had born right here in our own city and talked English like the rest, and the people applauded this German, an editor, he thought, of a German paper, oh yes, the Volkzeitung. And Olgin, he must be a prominent man. He also got an ovation. He is a writer and a lecturer, it seemed, and he spoke in Jewish. He must be watched.

Then there was that man Foster, William Z. Foster, who was also arrested in "Brickman." They had tried him and convicted him, too, almost. He had a very bad record, but is still at large. It was up to the Allied Patriotic Societies to get this man put where he cannot put over red propaganda like his. He told the people what a great strategist Lenin was and said the Workers Party is continuing the work of Lenin. And you should have seen how the crowd rose and yelled in response to this man. It was terrible. He and Ruthenberg are "astute men." They as much as said that we had to have a revolution in this country, but they were very "astute" and did not say it would be by force. They were shrewd. They would establish a soviet government here in America, but they used such guarded language that you could not catch them.

The big thing now before the Allied Patriotic Societies was to write Congress that it pass the fingerprint immigration law, or a law that will prohibit immigration entirely for at least five years, and also to get a translation of the "International." After which a motion was made to adjourn in honor of Woodrow Wilson, readily seconded by the old lady with fur-lined cape and lip.

Yes, Capitalists Have No Brains

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

The hereditary owners of the country's productive resources are in a pretty tough fix. They need brains to run the enormously complicated industries which have come into their possession during the last half century and they just haven't got them. Lack of brains is the most serious problem facing industry today, according to President C. Philip Coleman of the Worthington Pump & Machinery corporation, one of the leaders in the open shop campaign. There is plenty of capital but a scarcity of persons to work with hands and brains.

"American industry," he says, "is faced today with a new problem, the magnitude and gravity of which is not nearly as widely recognized as it should be. It is not a problem of working capital, for the capital reserves of this country are now so well organized that few conservative and well managed enterprises have difficulty in finding investors. Neither is it a problem of labor supply, serious as that problem has become in recent years. The problem is simply one of brains. The industrial army like our military forces in 1917 is seriously short of officer material."

From this pea of an outstanding representative of the absentee owner class it apears that the captains of industry don't captain any more. The sons and grandsons of the business men who by hook or crook managed to squeeze out competitors and establish mighty corporations aren't fit to carry on the leadership. Or it may be that a hereditary genius for gambling and sharp practice, which enabled certain men to emerge victorious from the cut-throat competition of the latter part of the 19th century, is not the kind of ability needed for the efficient management of the great productive enterprises which resulted. Henceforth the wealthy owners will become more and more a leisure class without any function to perform and the actual captaincy of industry will pass to paid or mercenary officers, men technically trained for industrial leadership.

Coleman is talking to the wealthy classes whose future control of industry depends upon their ability to buy the administrative brains which they lack. He is asking them to contribute $4,000,000 to be added to the endowment of Lehigh university which is a technician factory in eastern Pennsylvania. He estimates that the wealthy leisure class must employ "at least 150,000 engineers in industry even without taking into account those whose work would be simply administrative."

Turning to the inadequacy of the present supply to meet this demand he says: "The progress of industry has . . . outstripped the progress of technical education and to meet the situation the technical schools must prepare to provide a better all-around training to a greater number of more carefully selected students."

Such remarks means that a revolution is in progress. Ownership will become more and more divorced from any active part in the business of society. The owners will cease to be necessary. They will be nothing but consumers who live in idleness and luxury on the basis of a vested right to the productive work of others. The business of producing and distributing the goods which people require will be carried on by the workers with hand and brain from the unskilled laborer up to the professional director. The absentee owners will have to justify their continuing to be a burden on the productive work of others by reference to some vague ability of an ancestor many generations back.

Even Diogenes would take T Arthur from Montana for an hone man. After one look at this chu of protoplasm the old Greek wou drop his lantern and declare h quest ended. Tom Arthur is hones He admits it. He has not accept a couple of millions from Dohen Furthermore he is a "progressiv democrat" and supports McAdoo f the democrat nomination for pres dent. At the McAdoo conference the Crystal Room of the Great No thern Hotel, bluff old Tom shed of tears over the dereliction of th present republican administratio which was turning over the oil r sources of the country in gre squirts to the oil trust.

Now Tom admit that he is an employe of the o company. Ah, but there is a bi difference between being an employ and being a "pal" of an oil trus head. McAdoo, for instance, accepte $250,000 from Doheny for helping t purchase the salable part of th Mexican government. Fall took paltry $100,000 for leasing a Dom Fall lost his head. McAdoo may b our next president. McAdoo got hi by check. Fall took his compensa tion in a satchel. That is the bi difference.

East Meets West--Orient's Message to the Occident

Written Especially for The Daily Worker by Jack Armitage, Hongkong.

Capitalism's Hunt for Cheap Labor.

WITH Southern Europe and Great Britain rapidly approaching a state of economic chaos, coupled with a growing discontent among the workers; Germany fast heading towards Communism and the Soviet government insisting on a distinct limitation of profits by those capitalistic concerns which are allowed even the most precarious foothold in Russia, financiers and big industrialists are turning their attention to other and what they hope may prove more servile sources of labor.

What then more natural than that they should look to Asia? In this vast field of cheap labor, the European and American capitalist sees visions of amassing further wealth with, at the same time, an opportunity to apply sufficient economic pressure to smash Occidental Trades Unionism and every working class organization which dares to present a bold front in opposition to the depredations of "Fat."

The East Helps the West.

Two factors have been responsible for the partial disillusionment of foreign capitalists in China.

The first of these is the innate aversion on the part of China to foreign intervention in any shape or form. The second is the rapid growth of a virile labor movement.

That the feeling of opposition as regards exploitation of China's vast resources has been used by the Labor movement as a powerful weapon in their fight with foreign financiers has to be admitted, but this has never become the purely racial question which foreign capitalistic commentators would have the Western wage slave believe.

A Deliberate Lie.

Another deliberate and sinister lie which has been consistently circulated among Occidental workers thru the capitalistic press, is the assertion that there is practically no Labor movement in the East.

Only too well do foreign financial magnates realize that both China and Japan possess strong Labor parties which are rapidly winning to themselves not only the great mass of workers, but the intelligentsia also. Capitalism has already had one or two sharp lessons in this matter, but just so long as workers in other countries can be persuaded that the activities of a "weak" Labor movement in Asia are confined to anti-European propaganda, will the position remain dangerous and foreign exploiters manage to maintain a foothold in Asia, meanwhile praying to Mars and Mammon for an opportunity to finally enslave the proletariat of the whole world.

The Lie Refuted.

Both the contention that the Labor movement in Asia is weak and that its activities are confined to anti-foreign propaganda, have been discredited by the repeated actions of Chinese and Japanese labor organizations. Among these may be mentioned the message from the Chinese Seamen's Union to the workers of Australia, published in the Queensland "Worker"; but never has the lie received a more direct and incontrovertible refutation than by the following letter, sent by the Chinese Seamen's Union to Governor Richardson, Sacramento, California:

CHINESE SEAMEN'S UNION
88 Ching Hoi Road (Third Floor)
CANTON

Canton, December 15, 1923.

Hon. Governor Richardson,
State House,
Sacramento, California.

The members of the Chinese Seamen's Union have learned with no little astonishment and dismay that nearly one hundred American workingmen are in prison on account of the California Criminal Syndicalist Law and that the only evidence presented against them was membership in the organization known as the "Industrial Workers of the World." We of the Chinese Seamen's Union have always looked upon the United States as a free and desirable country, and we are very sorry to hear it alleged that our fellow workingmen are being subjected to such persecution, unparalleled even in the history of China.

If there is reason or justice for this state of affairs, please let us know so that we can present the case to our members. Unless a reply is received from you in a reasonable length of time the members of the Chinese Seamen's Union will understand that American workingmen are the subjects of a brutal and unjust persecution, and it is certain that our members will then demand that some economic action be taken which will bring your attention and also the attention of all American capitalists, to the fact that the working class of the world will no longer permit without protest the persecution and imprisonment of workingmen anywhere.

Yours for a better world,
CHINESE SEAMEN'S UNION.

It is quite possible that Governor Richardson will see fit to "overlook" such an "unimportant" document unless his memory is jogged. Herewith the necessary jog.

The Great Working Class Slogan.

In conclusion, let it be clearly understood that this great Labor movement, which ere long will be one of the principal factors in shaping the destinies of Asia, makes no appeal for financial aid. What is desired by those who walk daily under the assassin's knife and the headsman's sword in their fight for working class emancipation, is that Occidental workers should grasp the hand of fellowship which is being extended by the Orient, in the belief that Labor should know no race, no creed, other than the great working class slogan "Liberty and Equality."

POINCARE AND BANKERS ARE FACING RUIN

Loans To Fascisti Nations Blamed For Franc's Fall

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 20.—The franc opened today at 24.20 to the dollar—only a fraction more than four cents each, or one-fifth the pre-war rate—as the Poincare government reached frantically for some method of halting the monetary disaster that is overwhelming his cabinet.

A secret meeting of cabinet members and banking experts was called in the premier's home in the hope that a way might be found of arresting the slump which is leading to financial bankruptcy and which will destroy the Poinçare government's chances in the coming elections.

Look to Reparations Experts.

No official information was given out after the conference, but it was understood the premier demanded speedy action by the reparations experts now trying to solve the German reparations question, and immediate adoption by the Chamber of Deputies of the entire government financial program.

These measures, the premier believes, are the only ones that will prevent continuation of the monetary confusion and resultant fall of his cabinet.

Newspapers today admitted the fall of the franc is due primarily to selling by French interests in Paris, but generally said the collapse has been hastened by government blunders.

The textile industry, it was said, has been upset by the government's prohibition of wool exports and sellers of foodstuffs have been affected by the closing of the produce exchange.

Foreign Loans Blamed.

Pertinax, widely known political writer, blamed the extensive credits granted to foreign nations for the slump.

"The franc is falling because of loans launched outside of our budget necessities," he said in the Echo de Paris.

"Let France define clearly her budget balance for the coming year and the franc will rise again. Unless that is done financial resuscitation is a dream."

He referred to the huge loans to Poland and other Fascisti nations for military use against Russia.

POINCARE YIELDS TO DEMAND FOR GERMAN CASH MORATORIUM

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 20.—Premier Poincare has approved in principle the main suggestions of experts committee number one for rehabilitation of Germany so that she can pay reparations, the Petit Journal declares today.

These suggestions show a remarkable series of backdowns. They include:

1.—A cash moratorium for Germany.

2.—Creation of a German gold bank.

3.—Suppression of Franco-Belgian control of the Rhineland railways in order to permit an international society to take up the administration of all German railroads.

4.—Suppression of the Rhine custom barriers.

5.—An interior German loan in gold for the purpose of repatriating German capital.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Feb. 20.—Parole officers went to Canadaigua, N. Y., today to take custody of Edward Thomas, 22, who escaped from a state reformatory parole officer last week and fled with his wife in a rented car.

All Union Action Against Boss is Called 'Conspiracy' by Prosecutor in Chicago Upholsterers' Trial

The question whether it is possible for a labor union to carry on strike activities without running foul of the employers' laws is raised in the important trial, which began yesterday in Judge Wells' court room in Chicago, of the five union men, held on boycott charges as the result of the upholsterers' strike.

The right of a union man to refuse to work with scabs is also at issue. Fred Jurish, a member of the painters' union, is one of the five, held on boycott counts charging him with conspiracy to wreck the business of the firms against which the strike was being conducted.

May Bosses Usurp Government?

Another question which is raised is the right of employers' agents to take over the state attorneys' office for strike-breaking plots as Dudley Taylor, attorney for the Illinois Employers' Association was permitted to do in questioning the five men now held for conspiracy.

The first day of the trial in the circuit courtroom was featured by the statements to the jury of the state and defence attorneys.

Assistant States Attorney Romano, outlined the prosecution line of argument in bare faced fashion to the non-union jury.

Romano's Scab Philosophy.

Romano declared that the laws relating to "conspiracy" must be interpreted in the broadest possible fashion. He asserted that mere concerted action on the part of the defendants must be held as sufficient proof of "conspiracy" to ruin the business of the employers. Romano added that it would not be necessary to show that the defendants had ever met together to plan this concerted action. This, he said, because the

Jackass Leader Visits Mule State on His Way West

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 20.—Three hundred persons gathered at the union station here today and greeted William G. McAdoo, candidate for the democratic presidential nomination, when he passed thru enroute to Los Angeles.

"There can be no more serious menace to our country then when cabinet officers prostitute their trusts," he said.

"The oil investigation is a question of the life of the American nation itself."

Easy Money.

Authorities today sought two men, who, with the aid of a small stick and a wad of chewing gum, stole $50,000 worth of government bonds from the Peoples Trust and Savings Bank here yesterday. The bonds disappeared from a cashier's cage during the absence of a clerk.

It's Cruel World To Millionaire Kid With Doggie's Board So High

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—The seventeen-year-old son of the late J. Arthur Hinckley, millionaire, has been getting $15,000 annually for his living expenses. He finds this inadequate, and asked the courts to help him get $5,000 more out of the estate.

His mama testified that some of his living expenses were as follows: Clothes and tailoring, $3,300; automobile, $3,500; chauffeur, $2,000; dog's board, $420; pocket money, $500; amusement and gifts, $1,000.

The poor kid pointed out that this represented sheer poverty.

RUSSIA ONLY LAND IN EUROPE WITH STABLE FINANCES

Soviets Now Calling in All Paper Money

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Two cables from Moscow received in New York tell of the great strides toward economic stability made by Russia in the past year.

The first received byb the Russian American Industrial Corp., from its representative in Moscow, states that the Russian Commercial and Industrial bank, which finances most of the state industries, including the textile syndicate, made a profit last year of two million gold rubles, the equivalent of about $1,060,000. A dividend of 8 per cent has been declared and the capital has been increased from 20 to 40 million gold rubles.

It is thru this bank that the Russian American Industrial Corp. has sent over $5,000,000 into Russia since January of last year. The bank's deposit operations have increased 50 times in the past year, and it now has a total of 36 branches.

The second cable came from George Wishniak, Moscow correspondent of the Freiheit, Jewish daily. Beginning Feb. 16, he cabled, Russia ceased to print paper money. The government plans to call in all its paper currency. This is not as difficult as it might sound as the total value is no more than $30,000,000, altho its face value could not be written with less than a half dozen lines of ciphers.

Russia has already gotten into circulation $150,000,000 worth of the chervonetz—10-ruble gold notes. These notes are already worth more than the English pound—which has the same face value. Gold and silver coins are also being poured into circulation.

This news of the stability of the finance system in the Workers Republic comes while the French franc is beginning to chase the German mark downhill and the currency system of other capitalist nations is depreciating.

ONE DROP OF OIL SETTLES DAUGHERTY

Fate Hangs In Balance As Probe Starts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Attorney-General Daugherty will be asked to resign from the cabinet if he is connected by one specific fact with the Teapot Dome oil scandal.

This was the information from reliably informed quarters today. At the same time it was indicated Daugherty was preparing a statement, replying to the sensational charges yesterday by Senator Wheeler, Montana, author of a resolution for a senate investigation of Daugherty's administration.

Wheeler charged that the department was protecting crooks; that Jesse Smith, a close friend of Daugherty who committed suicide here a few months ago, accepted money in connection with cases before the department of justice; that Daugherty was a friend of E. L. Doheny and Harry F. Sinclair, lessees of the naval oil reserves; that Daugherty and E. B. McLean, owner of the Washington Post, conferred here Sunday and before that at Palm Beach.

McLean has figured in the senate investigation and is now under subpoena to appear again.

Harry Payne Whitney, millionaire New York sportsman, who was associated with Harry F. Sinclair, testified before the committee in executive session this morning. He was accompanied by his lawyer.

Whitney was questioned by members of the committee as to his purchases and sales of mammoth oil stock. Whitney told the committee that he now owns more than 100,000 shares which he accumulated from various sources. He was before the committee half an hour.

Harding Secretary Quits Under Fire, For Federal Post

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—George B. Christian's nomination to be a member of the federal trade commission was withdrawn from the senate today by President Coolidge, C. Bascom Slemp, the president's secretary, announced.

Christian requested Mr. Coolidge to withdraw his name. His request for withdrawal followed testimony by Huston Thompson, chairman of the commission, that Christian tried to influence him with respect to a complaint against the Famous Players-Lasky moving picture concern. Christian was to have appeared late this week before the senate interstate commerce committee in connection with Thompson's testimony.

Christian was secretary to the late President Harding.

Dry Fight Continues.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Arthur J. Davis, new superintendent of the New York State Anti-Saloon League, moved into the League's little office here today—and prepared to take up the fight to "dry up the greatest city in the world."

DAUGHERTY'S HEAD IS DEMANDED BY LODGE AND PEPPER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Senator Lodge told President Coolidge today in a hurried White House conference that Attorney-General Daugherty must resign.

Following Daugherty's public statement that he had no intention of quitting, Senators Lodge and Pepper rushed to the White House and went into all details of the matter with the president.

Lodge was extremely frank in informing the president of the decision of several republican caucuses that have been held in the last few hours which is that the president should get rid of all cabinet officials involved in the oil scandal.

White House officials would make no announcement, following the departure of the senators, as to what action President Coolidge would take or how soon his position would be made known.

DOHENY SAYS HIS FRIENDS "BARKED WITH WOLVES"

Is Bitter Against His Former Pals

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—E. L. Doheny, in an interview here with C. W. Barron of the Dow-Jones financial news service, voiced bitter enmity toward the former friends who had run to cover when their connection with his enterprises was disclosed.

Speaking of his final impression of the investigation, Doheny said:

It reminded me of old times in the middle west when one of our dogs at the mating season joined the wolves. The wolves would surround our camp at night and I could hear my own dog barking among those wolves as they howled around us.

It seemed to me when I was on the stand in Washington that I could hear the bark of my own friends in the pack of political wolves.

Much significance is attached to the comparison of the dogs and wolves made by Doheny by close students of politics who have been estimating the effect of Doheny's attitude on the McAdoo candidacy. It is recalled in this connection that it was the custom of prospectors to make every effort to shoot the dogs who deserted them and joined the wolf packs.

"A lot of people in this country are trying to run the American people off their feet," said Doheny, referring to the investigation of the oil lease scandal.

Defends Lease.

He defended the lease he holds on naval oil reserves in California and explained his statement that his companies ought to make a profit of $100,000,000 from the reserve.

"Naval Reserve Number One consists of approximately 32,000 acres of land. Under the most advantageous conditions that could exist—if it were all loose sand, high gas pressure and light oil—it would take at least one well for every ten acres, that is 3200 wells for the 32,000 acres.

"Under conditions which have thus far existed and now exist, those wells will cost $30,000 to $40,000 to the well. Wells at Santa Fe, Signal Hill and Huntington Beach cost an average of over $100,000 to the well.

"Thirty two hundred wells at $35,000 to the well would represent an investment of more than $100,000,000 for the cost of the wells alone."

100 per cent profit is considered high even in the oil industry.

Warrior For Democracy Steals To Save Wife and Kids From Starving

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 20.—George Blanford, a war veteran, was placed under arrest on a charge of stealing $7 in cash from the home of Miss Marie Lampke. He told the police he took the money because he had been out of employment two months, unable to find a job, and his wife and two children were hungry.

His story was investigated and found correct. Miss Lampke refused to prosecute. "Give the wife that $7," she told the young man. The district police captain says he will help Blanford find a job.

PLEDGE FULL AID TO BIG DOCK STRIKE

Trades Congress May Call Out Other Unions

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 20.—Shipping companies affiliated with the Federation of British Industries held a secret meeting today, it was learned. No public announcement of the proceedings has been made, but it is understood that great alarm was manifested at the successful efforts of striking dockers, not only in pulling out their own men, but in persuading other trades to quit.

The extremely small quantity of freight that is being handled is moved by the executives and clerical staffs of the shipping companies and the attitude of the strikers toward their admittedly feeble efforts is one of amused contempt.

U. S. Mail Halted.

More than 5,000 bags of American mail is held up at Plymouth and the British postoffice authorities, when interviewed by angry business men, disclaimed all responsibility as the mail was still on the steamship tenders and technically not in the custody of the postoffice.

There is no doubt that any attempt by the government to land the mail would occasion bitter resentment among its supporters.

The executive council of the Trades Union Congress has voted to give the striking dockers all the assistance in its power; it is believed that the assistance will take the form, first of financial aid, but there is little doubt but that the council will call out other unions if it appears necessary

Strikers Strengthened.

The strikers' position has been strengthened by the publication of the government cost of living figures showing that prices are higher now than when the two-shillings, for which the dockers are striking, were deducted from their pay. The admission of the shipping companies that their profits in 1923 averaged 7¼ per cent increased public sympathy for the strikers.

Ben Tillet, head of the Transport and General Workers' Union, has announced that there is "no likelihood of the strike ceasing for several weeks" unless the demands of the union are granted.

Seamen Rebellious.

The liners Doric and Tyrhennia were able to dock today only with the aid of the officers and employes of the purser's department.

The crew of the Orcoma has refused to sign on unless the provisions requiring them to work cargo are eliminated.

Coolidge May Quiz Obregon on Art of Holding Power

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—President Coolidge today took under consideration an invitation to meet President Obregon of Mexico at Albuquerque, N. M., on March 28 at the annual convention of the United States Good Roads association and the Bankhead Highway Association.

The invitation was extended to the president by a delegation which called at the White House. The president said he would neither accept nor refuse it now, but would make every effort to accept it if official business permits.

President Obregon will shortly receive a similar invitation to be present at the convention.

Members of the delegation included Governor Larrazola of New Mexico, Senator Holm Bursum, New Mexico, and Congressmen Morrow, New Mexico; Bankhead and Jeffers, Alabama.

OIL MAGNATE MAY "PEACH" ON HIS PALS

Heads To Fall If Sinclair Squawks

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Harry F. Sinclair will be called to the witness stand Monday in the oil scandal inquiry, Chairman Lenroot of the Teapot Dome Committee announced.

The committee believes Sinclair has "the whole story" and they intend to compel him to tell it.

Lenroot said he saw no reason for issuing an immediate subpoena for Sinclair, who arrives in New York today. The chairman has been informed that Sinclair will communicate immediately with the committee and agree to appear on Monday.

Senator Walsh of Montana, the chief investigator, has asked that Sinclair be met with an immediate subpoena as soon as he steps from the boat. Senator Adams, Colorado democrat, in Walsh's absence, agreed that the subpoena be issued.

Sinclair Still Busy.

"Mr. Sinclair says he is a busy man and I'm afraid he will think he is too busy to appear before the committee," Adams said.

Walsh will return for the resumption of hearings Monday.

Here is the evidence wanted from Sinclair:

1. Whether or not he loaned more than $25,000 to former Secretary of Interior Fall before or after he obtained the lease on Teapot Dome from Fall; whether he used money with any other person or persons for influence in connection with the leases.

2. What he knows about a $1,000,000 slush fund alleged to have been raised in New York thru "big oil interests" to cover stock losses of government officials.

3. Whether or not he was "blackmailed" by any one who has prior information regarding the sudden increase in wealth of Fall about the time the leases were made.

The testimony of Sinclair is regarded as the crux of the government case and may vitally affect the criminal prosecutions in contemplation.

Harry Payne Whitney, millionaire sportsman of New York, has informed Lenroot he will appear before the committee. Whitney owns a large block of shares of the Mammoth Oil company—the corporation under which Sinclair leased Teapot Dome. The committee has demanded production of certain of his books.

Elkins Uncovered.

Thru "leaks" from the committee room the name of Senator Elkins of West Virginia, alleged to have been found on the books of the Benkard brokerage concern in New York was disclosed. The senator himself remains in seclusion.

It is considered likely that he will soon ask permission to appear before the investigating committee and explain his speculations.

Activities of the committee today were again behind closed doors.

M. Poincare Again Threatens to Quit Post as Premier

PARIS, Feb. 20.—The position of the Poincare cabinet, already weakened by the collapse of the franc became more precarious this afternoon when the senate began debate on the electoral reform bill.

The premier appeared in person to oppose the measure and announced his government will resign if the senate refused to accede to his demands for rejection of objectionable features.

"I cannot accept the report of the senate commission on the law," Poincare said, "for it would be equal to restoration of the despisable 'scrutin d'arrondissement' (vote by mail districts)."

Senator Francois Albert led debate supporting the measure and attacked bitterly the general policies of the government. His remarks got considerable applause.

Meanwhile the collapse of the franc continued to absorb popular interest, altho there was a slight improvement in quotations during the day.

Quiz Over Solon's Shooting.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Investigation of the circumstances surrounding the shooting of Senator Greene, Vermont, last Friday night was called for in a resolution introduced in the House district committee today by Representative Gibson, Vermont.

Only 13 Senators Fought Pennsy Lawyer as Oil Fraud Investigator

By LAURENCE TODD.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—President Coolidge made a fatal mistake—beside registering once for all his moral stature—when he employed lame-duck senatorial "courtesy" and the dead weight of the administration control, to jam Atlee Pomerene, attorney for the Pennsylvania Railroad, down the lax throat of the Senate as "eminent special counsel" in the oil fraud cases.

The Senate vote on Pomerene showed exactly 13 senators willing to oppose Coolidge in this attempt to throw the cases into obviously incompetent and unsuitable hands.

Henchmen Sound Alarm.

On Sunday, Senator Lenroot and Pomerene were forced to rush to the White House with alarming news disclosures. Senator Wheeler of Montana, who has been trying to get Daugherty kicked out of the cabinet and who has fought Denby and the oil and railroad crowd on every point at issue, had set off a mine under their feet. Coolidge talked with Lenroot until late in the night.

Next morning Coolidge talked over the telephone with Denby, whereupon Denby suddenly announced his resignation, and the White House announced its acceptance. Coolidge had pledged himself against sacrificing Denby, a few days earlier, and Denby had sworn never to resign.

Five Bombshells.

Wheeler spent Monday morning in consultation with senate leaders on the Democratic side. It was soon reported around the capitol that:

1. A stock-broker firm in New York, would be found to have had huge dealings with certain persons in Washington in official life. These deals were in oil securities.

2. Harry Payne Whitney, who put $2,000,000 into the Teapot Dome deal, would be called back to testify again, on stock transactions.

3. Wilton J. Lambert, local attorney for Edw. B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, had given "important information." Lambert was the man who advised McLean to admit, in Palm Beach, that he had lied when he told the senate committee that he had lent $100,000 to Fall.

4. McLean would take the stand, and might create a bigger sensation than when he forced Doheny to confess his loan to Fall.

5. Interest in Wheeler's resolution demanding Daugherty's resignation went up, due to the fact that Daugherty has been a special pal of McLean, and even occupied McLean's "House of Mystery" near the Shoreham Hotel.

Had the selection of Pomerene, the hard-boiled railroad corporation servant, not been insisted upon by Coolidge, the suspicions of the progressives would not have been so keenly aroused, and it is possible that Wheeler's evidence might have secured less prominence. Now the issue is forced. The anti-corporation group led by Wheeler and LaFollette on the senate floor will drive the senate committee to act, even tho Senator Walsh may be too wearied to carry the burden of the work. Senator Dill and Senator Adams will help Walsh.

Daugherty's resignation is now thought to be inescapable.

Thirteen Solons Stick.

The Federated Press here makes permanent record of the names of the 13 senators who voted against Pomerene. All others either voted for his confirmation or were absent when they knew that this vote would be taken. The men who stood out against Pomerene were Ashurst, Adams, Brookhart, Dill, Frazier, Magnus Johnson, LaFollette, Norris, Sheppard, Shipstead, Stanley, Walsh of Montana and Wheeler.

Ladd had voted for Pomerene in committee, and was absent on this roll call. Borah, Capper, Hiram Johnson, Jones of Washington, Norbeck, and such democrats as Caraway, Heflin, Kendrick, Pittman, Reed of Missouri and Walsh of Massachusetts, thought a Pennsylvania railroad attorney was the man to handle the profits of the oil companies.

On the vote taken Monday, confirming Roberts, the other lawyer, Walsh of Montana was absent, while Dill and Norris, Stanley and Adams joined the majority. Norris did so after calling attention to a speech made a year ago by Roberts, attacking the senate's investigation into the profits of the oil companies.

The net result of the confirming of two pro-corporation attorneys to guard public property in this case is to arouse the fighting progressives to compel an answer on the evidence now to be dragged out into the light of day. Denby is only the first to go.

Labor Fights "Conspiracy" Charge

state has no evidence that the painter defendant had ever met with the four members of the upholsterers' union.

Conspiracy between O'Shea and McKenna, the two business agents of the upholsterers' union could be shown, the ingenious states' attorney alleged, by the fact that both of them worked to win the $1.25 an hour demands of their union. This Romano said he regarded as proof of conspiracy in violation of law, to ruin the business of the boss upholsters by threatening to call a strike to enforce the damends for $1.25 an hour the business agents attempted to coerce the bosses and in that way violated the law. The demands of the men, if acceded to by the bosses, would have ruined their business he said.

After this unblushing introduction to his open shop philosophy the state's attorney declared that after the strike was called the union conspired to ruin the business of the bosses, by agreeing to picket, using stickers asking other building trades workers to ask the men laying carpets to show their union cards and in other ways.

He said in effect that all the efforts of the union to make their strike effective were attempts to ruin the business of the boss upholsters.

The state would attempt to prove by testimony that various employing upholsters were prevented from carrying out their contract by the strike activities of the union and, therefore, the union members on trial who took part in the activities of the strike are guilty of conspiracy.

Union Defense Statement.

The defense position was made clear by a brief statement made by Robert W. Daniels. The defense would depend on the testimony of many of the prosecution's own witnesses to prove that the union was engaged in legitimate trade union activities only.

If the employing upholsters were being interfered with in the carrying on of their business they could have hailed the union officials into court for violating an injunction obtained against the union in June. He pointed out that not one member of the union had been brought into court for violating the injunction which was very broad in its provisions.

The injunction was a perfect defense of the bosses against alleged interference with their business by the union. He also pointed out that the prosecutor had been compelled to admit that one of the defendants charged with attempting to wreck the business of the various firms mentioned in the indictment had on one occasion asked building trades workers who objected to working with scab upholsterers to return to work.

Bosses' Secretary Aids State.

As soon as the defense lawyers had finished their statement and before the prosecution began presenting testimony, Robert Bronson, secretary of the employing upholsters association, took a place at the counsel table with the states' attorneys. All during the court sessions he helped Assistant States Attorney Romano bring out the testimony from the state's witnesses.

William J. Dimmer, assistant general manager of Wynefort & Co., an upholstery firm named in the indictment, was the first witness called. He testified briefly that a strike was called by the union on May first and that his firm hired men later under open shop conditions. Under cross examination by Robert W. Daniels, he admitted that his firm had not been prevented from cacrrying out their contracts by the union or the defendants as has been charged in the indictment.

R. C. Haines, William Slater and George Webber, all boss upholsters, testified that on various occasions they had been delayed in the fulfilling of contracts by the refusal of union building trades workers to work with scab carpet layers.

Corbin Dunham, president of the Chicago Carpet Upholstery and Drapers association, testified that the employing upholsters refused to settle with the union, not because of the demand for $1.25 an hour, but because they would not agree to certain working rules the union wanted to put into effect. He said they objected chiefly to the introduction into each shop of a steward or stewardess to represent the workers in disputes between the workers and the bosses.

His statement that the bosses did not object particularly to the demand for $1.25 an hour was in direct contradiction to what Romano said to the jury in his opening statement. He told them that to pay $1.25 an hour would ruin the bosses.

The language of the indictment on which the men are being tried charges that they conspired with "certain persons to the grand jury unknown."

In attempting to get witnesses to testify concerning conversations between witnesses and persons who are not on trial the state's attorney insisted that the person with whom the conversation occurred was one of the "unknown conspirators."

So far there has been no indication when Dudley Taylor, attorney for the Illinois Employers association, who was the chief mover in having the indictments returned will testify.

ELKINS HELD 8,000 SHARES SINCLAIR OIL

Uncover Name on Books of Brokers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Senator Davis Elkins, West Virginia, today told the DAILY WORKER that he had dealt in Sinclair oil stocks thru Benkard and Company, the New York brokers, whose books were examined yesterday by the Senate Teapot Dome committee.

Elkins' name was found on the books, it has been stated.

Elkins said he bought and sold several hundred shares of Sinclair oil stock.

"Certainly I bought and sold Sinclair oil stocks," said Elkins. "I dealt in several hundred shares thru Benkard and company and I don't care who knows it. I buy and sell in any kind of stock I want. There is no law against it and my office does not prevent my dealing in stocks.

"I did not have any tip from any one on Sinclair oil and I did not go into any pool. If I had gone into a pool, I would probably have lost more money than I did.

"I have not the time nor the money to deal extensively in stocks, but I dealt far more extensively in Bethlehem Steel and Reading railroad stock than I did in Sinclair oil.

"If that is a crime, let them go holler their heads off. The public seems to have gone crazy and there is a lot of hot air in the senate about this oil thing, but it will not disturb me because my transactions were absolutely legitimate.

Elkins Is Hardboiled.

"If this hysteria continues the only thing to do is to close the stock exchange and halt all business. The whole thing is silly to me. How are we to have a liquid business unless we buy and sell things?"

Asked if he had dealt thru any other firm but Benkard and Company on Sinclair stock, Elkins said he had, but declined to name the firm or firms.

"That's for the committee to find out," he said, referring to the senate Teapot Dome committee.

Following Elkins' personal statement, the following was issued from his office here by his secretary, W.C. Fenton:

"Senator Elkins has, for the past 15 or 20 years been buying and selling stock thru various brokers in Washington, Philadelphia and New York. In many cases, he purchased on margin and in others bought stock outright, feeling he had a perfect right to do so, the same as if he bought an automobile or real estate and sold it.

"It is true that he purchased from time to time various shares of Sinclair oil stock, just as he did various other listed securities, particularly cotton.

"As soon as the price of oil dropped, like in other stocks, he sold out, but so far as Sinclair oil is concerned he did not make one penny profit.

"Senator Elkins has been confined to his bed for two weeks with grip. He has evaded no one. He is willing to have his stock transactions opened to everyone and he is willing to help prosecute anyone who conspired against the government.

Says It's a Joke.

"Senator Elkins feels that it is a big joke as far as his name is concerned."

It was said Elkins purchased probably between 8,000 and 10,000 shares of the Sinclair stock. His speculation during the year 1922 when the leases were granted, showed a profit.

It is the understanding among Elkins' friends here that he will not seek re-election to the senate next year. Guy D. Goff, now assistant attorney general, will make the race for the Republican senatorial nomination, and this, it is stated by Elkins' friends, is approved by Elkins.

Elkins is the son of former Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia, whom he succeeded in the senate in 1911 for the unexpired portion of a term. He was elected for a full term in 1918 while he was in France serving with the Seventh division.

His home is in Morgantown, W. Va., where on the death of his father he assumed charge of the Elkins coal and other interests, which are extensive. He is 48 years of age.

Chummy With Whitney.

Elkins appeared outside the senate Teapot Dome committee room during the executive session this morning. He sent word in that he would like to appear and the committee members notified him they would hear him later.

While he was waiting, Elkins went to his office for a conference with Harry Payne Whitney, New York sportsman, and Whitney's lawyer, Frank L. Crocker, who had just appeared before the committee.

Local Chicago Accepts Detroit Challenge: Declares Home City of DAILY WORKER Will Lead

When the meeting of Branch Subscription Agents and "active" members of Local Chicago was held on February 7th and the campaign for "One Thousand NEW Subscribers by March 10th" took definite form, it was decided that subscriptions turned in prior to February 10th would not count in the present contest.

Some, who have very enviable records for number of subs turned in prior to the beginning of the contest, have since expressed their opinion that subs previously gotten should be credited to their account, with the understanding that the figure set for this contest should be increased. Chicago is not resting on past efforts, however, and is giving no consideration to results attained before February 10th.

Windy City Will Show Speed.

Detroit started its contest to boost the DAILY WORKER over a month ago and every sub obtained since that time is figured in the point score. But in spite of this fact, Chicago intends to outstrip them in the total by March 15th.

"The City of Chicago will not only do that, but will do its mightiest to get more subs during its special one month's campaign than the District of Detroit will have to its credit by March 15th, when the Detroit campaign will have been going for over two months. We know this is a lot to promise, and we know that our old friend, Edgar Owens, is not in the habit of making empty threats. But we also know what Chicago can do, and we are not in the least disturbed about Chicago being disgraced. — Yes, tell Edgar that his former associates will be on the job." This is the answer received from the City Subscription Agent of Local Chicago, who feels determined that Chicago must and will be the first under the wire when the "Detroit-Chicago" contest ends.

Englewood Leads.

Members of the English branches are at the head of the list at the close of the first week, with John Heinrichson (Englewood branch) first with 101 points. A. Valentine, of the Northwest English branch, has come along with a rush and is now second with 60 points, with J. Shafir (South Side English branch) third on the list with 34 points. It is remembered that the Northwest English branch stood in the front ranks in the campaign for shares, and there is no doubt that it will not bow to anyone in the present contest—if determination means anything at all.

South-Slavs Active.

Among the Language branches, the South-Slavic branches have taken the lead, followed closely by the First Cheko-Slovak, the German and the Northwest Russian branches. Some of the members of the Language branches are of the opinion that they have an even chance with the English-speaking branches and will be able to score as many points. The City Daily Worker Committee is impartial as to who will be "chief booster" and does not believe any branch will make a runaway race in the contest.

Many of the comrades are active in assisting the speakers at union and other meetings by getting subscriptions, as subs gotten in this way are credited to their branch account as well as their own. Young Workers League members are in the forefront in this phase of the work. An active campaign to reach the union members with the message of the DAILY WORKER has started. Every available speaker is being drafted and assigned to as many meetings as they can cover in an evening or during the week.

Much more is expected of Chicago, the "home" of the DAILY WORKER, than of any other city, and the local members are determined to do their best to meet this expectation.

OTHER WORKERS STRIKE IN AID OF BRITISH DOCKERS

Five Big Unions Are Now Involved

LONDON, Feb. 19.—With every port in England tied up by the strike of 225,000 dock workers for a wage increase of two shillings a day and maintenance when unemployed, sympathetic strikes are breaking out in other industries. The warehouse workers and dock train crews in Liverpool are out. Sympathetic action by deck and engine room crews aboard ships is threatened. With no coal moving out of the ports enforced idleness in many of the mine fields is resulting. The immediate effect of the dock walkout has been to shut off Britain's food supply, which comes chiefly from abroad. Anticipating a food shortage profiteers are boosting prices. The government is making plans for rationing supplies as in war days.

Glaring Grievances.

The grievances of the dock workers are so glaring that, despite the inconvenience to the general poulation caused by their action, the strike is a popular one. The country for the most part accepts the figures of the statisticians showing that less than 10 per cent of the dockers receive enough to support themselves much less their families. The strike, which began Feb. 16, came after long negotiations had failed and was ordered by the unanimous vote of the delegate conference of the unions. The unions involved are the Transport and General Workers' union, the National Union of General Workers, the National Amalgamated Union of Laborers, the United Order of General Laborers, and the Amalgamated Association of Electricians.

Bosses Force Strike.

The dispute arose out of the refusal of the employers to consider a revision of the terms of the Shaw award made in 1920, which provided, among other things for the decasualization of labor by establishing the guarantee week with maintenance. The Shaw agreement, fixed the minimum at 16 shillings a day in the larger ports and 15 shillings in the smaller. Periodical reductions since have brought the wage down to 10 shilling and 9 shillings a day. A reduction of 1 shilling a day last summer led to a number of strikes at London, Hull, and Liverpool.

Wanted Price Raise.

The employers offer to compromise on a shilling a day increase and maintain that any wage increase will have to be paid by the public. "If the 2s now demanded has to be paid by the public," replies Secretary Bevin, Transport and General Workers' union, "what happened to the 2s when it came off under the agreement of September, 1922? The cost of living now is higher than when that 2s was given up." He points out that real employers of the dockers are not the port authorities but the increasingly rich shipping companies, "the spoiled darlings of the war."

Railwaymen Shut Off Sea Food.

GRIMSBY, Eng., Feb. 20.—The fish trade of Grimsby, source of London's vast fish supply, has been brought to a standstill by a strike of the railwaymen belonging to the national union of railwaymen who are employed in checking consignments of fish into the railway cars for shipment into the metropolitan district. On learning of the strike the railway officials immediately notified the Grimsby shippers that no fish would be accepted for delivery. The effect of this will be to throw thousands of persons in the fishing industry out of work.

McADOO WILL USE OZONE IN EXPLAINING QUARTER MILLION FEE

Instead of the bedtime stories coming over the ether waves from stations WXZ or GBD, the radio fans of America may soon listen to explanations as to the why, what and wherefore of the famous retainer given by Edwin Doheny to a presidential candidate. The station will be a powerful one and will be erected at the Los Angeles home of William Gibbs McAdoo. The candidate applied to the secretary of commerce for permission to build the station. The attitude of Doheny towards McAdoo, which was formerly one of friendliness, has now turned to hate. A friend of the oil king composed a ballad which may be the slogan of the anti-McAdoo democrats. Its title is "He knocked the dough out of Doheny, so we'll knock the Mick out of McAdoo."

U. S.-Mexican Treaty Will Be Ratified Soon, Says Hughes

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Formal ratifications of the special claims convention between the American and Mexican governments were exchanged yesterday noon in Mexico City, Secretary Hughes announced today.

The convention will be put in effect as soon as it is formally proclaimed here.

The general claims convention will be formally ratified in Washington when the documents arrive from Mexico.

MacDONALD IN PROBE OF BIG DOCK STRIKE

But Officials of Strikers Show No Faith in Ramsay

cannot be unloaded and because their crews object.

The strikes are picketing all cold storage houses and great difficulty is encountered, despite the terrific unemployment, in getting workers willing to blackleg for the meat companies.

Moved by the steep increase in food prices the government has appointed Colonel Wedgewood as chief commissioner of the emergency committee created to handle matters arising out of the strike. This committee has power to fix all food prices.

* * * *

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 20.—The government of Premier Ramsay MacDonald opened its court inquiry into the strike of the dock workers today and there appeared to be some hope the action would hasten a settlement.

Executives of the dock men's union, however, were not optimistic, and said the strike had been intensified.

Ships Are Idle.

Scores of ships lay idle in harbors, unable to discharge their cargoes.

Food prices were mounting despite the government manifesto against gouging.

Fear Rank and File.

As the government opened its campaign, it was indicated the labor cabinet will move warily, realizing that any strong move against the dock men will provoke a general outburst of wrath from the rank and file of the labor party, making precarious its first experiment in government.

Prime minister MacDonald faced a critical situation. With discipline in his own party threatened, the premier had at once to keep the confidence of union labor and at the same time guarantee the rationing of the population.

Henderson for "The Peepul".

On behalf of the government, it was stated that the prime minister is keeping close personal watch on mounting food prices.

Arthur Henderson, in a speech, said:

"The government is determined the people shall be fed."

Henderson intimated an arrangement soon will be reached with the labor unions whereby necessary food supplies will be handled.

U. S. Government Inflates Railroads: Deflates Farmers

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The federal government should shoulder losses of the farmers resulting from the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board in 1920, Senator Brookhart, Iowa, declared before the House agricultural committee today.

Brookhart suggested that restitution be made by the government purchasing surplus farm products at prices insuring a reasonable profit to the farmers.

The Iowa senator appeared in support of the Sinclair-Norris bill, providing for a direct appropriation of $200,000,000 for the purchase by the government of surplus farm products which would be marketed abroad thru federal agencies.

Klan Issue in Maine.

PORTLAND, Maine, Feb. 20.—The Ku Klux Klan has entered actively into the election campaign here and declares its intention to control the Republican party in the state. The Klan, if successful in securing a majority in the next legislature, will seek to have a law placed on the statute books forbidding the appropriation of public money to parochial schools.

Socialists Lose Votes With Principles.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 20.—Figures made public today by Secretary of State Hamilton shows that the Socialist party enrollment sustained a loss of 4,000 from the figure of 1922-1923.

KEENEY GOES TO TRIAL IN COUNTY OPERATORS OWN

Venue Change Denied to Miners' Defense

FAYETTEVILLE, W. Va., Feb. 20.—Frank Keeney, president, District 17, United Mine Workers of America, is on trial here charged with the murder in connection with the so-called armed march of miners in the summer of 1921. The original plan of the prosecution was to try William Blizzard again, District 17 subdistrict president, whom they have failed to convict in the two previous trials. The reason for the change, according to the prosecution, is because already two terms of court have passed since Keeney was indicted.

McKell Owns County.

The defense moved for a change of venue. The motion was based on the belief of the miners' lawyers that William McKell, multi-millionaire non-union coal king and avowed enemy of organized labor, dominated the life and thought of Fayette county. McKell owns 25,000 acres of coal lands and is said to have 15,000 more under lease. Railroads and banks are also listed as his property. Ten thousand men are in his employ. His control of the local republican party is absolute. His field marshall is Osenton, a democrat and a national committeeman. Osenton's sway of the democrats equals McKell's republican influence. The change of venue was denied.

The Prosecutors.

In the courthouse here on Lincoln's birthday Frank Keeney made the following charges to show that the operators are the "state":

"Sitting there at the prosecuting attorney's table is Charles W. Osenton, chief counsel, William McKell coal interests, representing the state; with him is Alfred Belcher, hired by the Logan County Coal Operators' Association. There beside Belcher sits Emmett Keadle, employe of Don Chafin, sheriff of Logan county; at least until a few months ago he was drawing his pay from the Logan coal operators. At the same table is J. E. Thurman, millionaire coal operator of Logan county; S. A. Scott, president, New River Coal Operators' Association; M. L. Garvey, Maryland, New River Ass'n. Standing near the portals of the courthouse is William Gray, a Logan thug, who has been implicated in several disorders in Logan and Kanawha counties. And with Gray is James Scott. James Scott is the paymaster employed by the Logan coal operators. He is the man that went to the witness stand in Lewisburg, where Blizzard was tried several months ago, and admitted he paid state witnesses money to testify against Blizzard.

Steel Trust Stronghold.

"In McDowall county the steel corporation has several large operations. In Logan county the same organization has large holdings. Thru interlocking directorates the steel corporation and the Pennsylvania railroad control more than 40 per cent of the mines in the southern fields.

"The steel corporation," said Keeney, "hopes to dominate the coal markets of the nation by making West Virginia fields nonunion. That is why the fight is so bitter. It is not that the coal operators think I inspired the miners' uprising in 1921. They know that is ridiculous; that I was doing everything in my power to turn the men homeward.

"They have set out to crush the United Mine Workers, and I am simply incidental."

Friend of Ku Klux Klan Is Leading in Louisiana Poll

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 20.—Henry L. Fuqua today piled up a heavy lead over Hewitt Bouanchaud in the race for nomination for governor in the count of ballots from Tuesday's primary. Returns from the entire city of New Orleans and 465 out of 1,082 county precincts gave a vote of, Fuqua 81,352; Bouanchaud 63,649.

Attorney General A. V. Coco, who prosecuted the famous Mer Rouge investigations of the murders of Watt Daniel and T. F. Richards, has apparently been defeated for re-election by Percy Saint.

Practically the entire Fuqua ticket was victorious with the exception of Justin F. Defechaud, candidate for state auditor, who is in a tight race with T. O. Harris.

Tuesday's election was a run-off primary.

Hines Is Called On Carpet In Probe of Vet's Bureau

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20.—The senate investigation of the Veterans' Bureau which was stopped at the request of President Coolidge was unexpectedly reopened today when the investigating committee convened and called Frank L. Hines, director of the bureau before it.

Hines was called to explain "personal matters." He was also asked what steps the Veterans' Bureau has taken to remove hard boiled officials unfriendly to ex-service men from the bureau.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka, and now Matusenko, the luxury loving place hunter. CHAPTER III. (Continued)

THE last time he had seen her was in the street in Winter. Out of the white, glittering curtain of falling snow, her trim figure had suddenly appeared; there, close, close to him was her face, snowflakes in her hair, her subtle almond-shaped black eyes. She had seen him: joy burned in her eyes, and then they clouded over with gloom, and she passed by, and in remembering her, loved and alone desired, he murmured words of affection, and these words, heard by no one, fell irrevocably, like pearls into the dark water of a deep well.

They had lived like this a whole year in the same town, separated by a few blocks of houses, near and at the same time far away . .

And now when he came to his lodging, he looked out of the window and tried to see, over there on the hill, where the bulk of the old church was clearly visible, the house in which she lived, and he imagined her cozy room, hung with beloved engravings, and, in the corner, in the old image-case, the dark, stern pictures of the saints.

Martuinov came home mechanically, threw off his coat, and, as if he were waking up, looked about him.

A bed, a bare table, with crumbs of bread on it. Books lying on the chair. and general emptiness and untidiness, as if in an uninhabited room. And for a whole year, immersed in his work, Martuinov had lived in this room.

The sight of the room was unpleasant to him. "Shall I go out somewhere?" he thought aloud, "but whither, and to visit whom?" For, in spite of his devotion to the revolution, in spite of his intimate work with them, he had no friends among the Communists.

Once only during the Winter, Martuinov had visited Matusenko, who had almost taken him home with him by force . . . Martuinov had spread yellow, creamy butter on white household bread, had greedily drunk perfumed, sweetened tea with cream—he had had nothing so tasty for a long time, and he was naively surprised: "How did Matusenko come to have these things?"

And round-faced, attentive Matusenko, had smiled affectionately, blinked his tiny little eyes and respectively, but all the same with a certain tone of house-keeping pride, had entertained Martuinov.

"Take a little honey, Comrade Martuinov. My wife works in the Food Committee, so they give her a very good ration. And do take some milk, from our own cow. . . . A family man can provide himself with everything. I am an economical fellow, and why should I kill myself with hunger? Nothing is said about that in our Programme. Ha, ha! isn't that so, Comrade Martuinov? Ha, ha! Why are you taking nothing? Grusha, entertain the Chief . . ." jokingly but sternly, he said to his wife.

Martuinov caught the eye of Matusenko's wife, a full-breasted, rosy blonde; he saw the gold lights in the blue depths of her pupils and those eyes of hers spoke of the sweetness of love, of the pleasures of the senses that Martuinov had not yet experienced. And showing her white teeth in a smile, Matusenko's wife pushed towards him white butter-cakes, spread with saccharine essence, and said, "Pray, help yourself. . . ."

And Matusenko, in his thin voice went on wheedingly dropping into Martuinov's ear mawkishly sweet, tidy words, like the butter-cakes spread with saccharine.

Martuinov had looked round Matusenko's room, curtains on the windows, little round tables, a Chinese screen, a divan, a carpet, and remembered the past, so recent, the well-fed life in the comfortable rooms of his own house, now occupied by a Children's Home, and it had been as if he were regretting all this. . . .

Martuinov knew that he had nowhere to go, and that even in the Politdep he would find no one, that there was nothing there but empty chairs and barefooted women cleaning up, washing the dusty linoleum. Martuinov lay down on his hard bed and stuck his face into the pillow, so as not to see his slovenly room.

And again he remembered his past life—not recent times, after the revolution, when political convictions had taken him and his family by different roads, but his childhood long ago, games of hide and seek in warm rooms, the affection of his dead mother, a Christmas tree, and all the endless stream of that quiet happy life, with its plentiful dinners, suppers and morning teas. . . .

Had there really been such a life?

And from under the pillow he pulled out a blue knitted waistcoat, the only thing left to him from his home, the waist-coat in which, jingling his skates, he used to run to the rink,—there, on the skating rink, he had made her acquaintance. . . . . O bitterness, "Pray, help yourself. . . ."

He put on his coat and went out into the street.

It had grown dark; a few stars were showing, and tho the air was keen, yet, for this night, the Spring had stayed in town; the freezing puddles glittered, but streams were bubbling in the dark gutters.

Martuinov walked with quick steps, and thought now of nothing at all, but heard all together, the bubbling of the streamlets, the dripping of water from the roofs, the rustling of the bare twigs, and the whistles of the locomotives in the station. But now all these sounds were covered by another, low, disturbing,—the siren was howling at the Power Station. Martuinov, not understanding was enjoying the lively music of these sounds. The streets were empty, the little houses were quiet, and only when he came to the Red Army Club, Martuinov met a man with a coat thrown on in a hurry.

The man came right up to Martuinov and looked him straight in the face. They recognized each other—they had often met at the meetings of the Party.

"Sounds like the alarm signal?" said the man.

"Alarm? Why?" Martuinov was surprised, but while he asked understood already the meaning of that roar, close by and loud, sent out from the Power Station. It was as if some one shouted, threatened, called for help. . . .

"Do you hear?" said the man, "Two breaks. . . . . Let's hurry along to the Communst Company."

For Martuinov the quiet comfort of the Spring evening had somewhere disappeared, and everything had become secret, dark and hostile. The hundreds of silent houses were like enemies hiding weapons the folds of their wide dark clouds. . . .

"Well, we are on a war-footing today" Martuinov thought aloud, and it occurred to him that at that moment beside this alien, taciturn man, he was going, with quick steps, to suffering, to death which was hanging over the silent little town and at any time was ready to submerge it.

The siren went on booming over the town; it was echoed from the railway station by the powerful chorus of the locomotives and the whistles at the Depot, and the summons of these inhuman voices rolled far beyond the town, over the speechless snow-covered fields, among the quiet villages and hamlets.

The summons was stronger than the fear of suffering and death and from all parts of the town, hundreds of people gathered towards the Communist Company, making their way thru the malicious winding lanes. And Martuinov also came into the broad lamp-lit courtyard of the Communist Company. Hurriedly, group after group, the Communists poured in, and formed quickly into platoons and so squads.

There was no fear. It had remained outside this bustling courtyard, there, in the empty streets. And Martuinov was ready to kill himself for the ideas that had taken possession of him a few minutes before.

He stood on the left flank, near the gates, and those coming into the yard passed by him, and the lamp flung light on their faces.

Some of the faces were perplexed and intent, others quietly thoughtful, others unrestrainedly nervous, while in others burned the powerful splendid flame of enthusiasm, burned clearly, like a bonfire on a windless Summer night. Women and girls came too; some had not yet chased from their faces coquettishly sly amusement, others, forgetful of themselves earnestly sought some one with their eyes, others laughed, nervously and loudly.

Industrial Accidents Cause Loss of Four Times As Many Working Days As Strikes, Declares Olds

By LELAND OLDS.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

The struggle between capital and labor has cost the American people $12,522,203,356 in the last eight years, according to exaggerated figures made public by Secretary Noel Sargent of the National Association of Manufacturers' Industrial Relations committee.

But this employers' one big union, representing billions of dollars of capital solidly lined up against the trade union movement, does not add that on their basis of calculation the cost of industrial accidents is more than four times as great. And if the unions could control conditions in industry these industrial accidents would be largely eliminated.

227,169,970 Days Yearly—Accidents.

Strikes and lockouts, Sargent states, have involved an average loss of approximately 53,000,000 working days a year since 1916. But the U. S. bureau of labor statistics computes the annual loss on account of industrial accidents at 227,169,970 working days not to mention the loss of 21,232 lives which can hardly be adequately valued.

Sargent's figures divide the total cost of the industrial conflict as follows: Cost to wage earners, $1,740,403,522 in lost wages; cost to employers, $478,610,969 in lost profits; and cost to the public, $10,303,188,865 in lost production.

The following table shows for each year the number of working days lost on account of strikes and lockouts and wages as computed by Sargent. He figures the loss to capital at 27½ per cent of the wage bill and the public's loss in terms of products worth six times the total loss in wages:

	Total days lost	Total wages lost
1916	37,431,818	$ 96,451,136
1917	30,817,626	67,083,820
1918	21,165,935	78,737,278
1919	141,747,366	598,173,885
1920	55,087,112	295,817,791
1921	55,107,658	236,411,831
1922	62,420,358	270,904,354
1923	20,551,140	97,823,417
Total ..	424,329,008	$1,740,403,522

1919 Strikes Hottest.

These statistics show 1919 as the year in which the conflict was hottest. This was the year in which tens of thousands of workers were struggling to bring their wages abreast of the cost of living which had run so far ahead in its upward swing that wages would purchase only about 80 per cent of the prewar standards. The total cost of strikes in that year as figured by Sargent was $4,303,861,102.

Between 1919 and 1922, the period in which the first campaign of the open shop forces developed the total cost of strikes and lockouts amounted to $10,082,410,058 or to 80 per cent of the cost of the entire eight-year period. This may be accounted the burden which according to their own estimate employers were willing to saddle upon the country in order to break the strength of organized labor.

During 1923 there was a comparative lull in the conflict. Sargent's figures show that strikes and lockouts cost only $703,839,575 during that year.

Bosses' Statistics Exaggerate.

The industrial conflict forced upon workers by injustices of the present industrial order is enormously costly but these figures of Sargent include at least one gross exaggeration. The actual value produced by the average wage earner does not represent six times the wages paid. Two and a half times the wage bill would be a fairer figure to use in estimating the actual loss to the public in terms of the value of the production withheld. On this basis the total cost of strikes during the six years amounted to approximately $6,000,000,000 or half Sargent's estimate. And a certain proportion of the loss computed on this basis is not real loss because days lost on account of a strike would in many instances have been lost otherwise on account of no market.

Taking this figure, however, it is evident that strikes and lockouts have occasioned an average annual loss of something under $1,000,000,000 as compared with an annual loss of approximately $4,300,000,000 on account of industrial accidents which can be traced in larger measure to the negligence or deliberate evasion of responsibility by employers.

Furuseth Officials Allowed on Boats of Shipping Board

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Andrew Furuseth, for the International Seamen's Union of America, announces that Admiral Palmer, new president, Emergency Fleet Corp., has granted passes into the port premises of the government merchant marine for officers of the union.

This is a point over which the union and the shipping board fought for three years, and upon which turned the decision of the seamen to go into the great strike of 1921. At that time it appeared that the board was determined to cut off the ships' crews from all contact with their organization on shore and thereby break up the strength of the union.

COOLIDGE FORCED COAL PEACE ON PA. MINE OWNERS

Fears Coal Strike During Presidential Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 20.—That the Coolidge administration had a direct hand in the signing of the three-year truce between the coal diggers and the mine owners was learned today by THE DAILY WORKER correspondent. The Pittsburgh coal barons came to Jacksonville with instructions from Washington that they must sign any sort of an agreement rather than add a coal strike to the oil troubles of the Coolidge administration.

It is an open secret that the cabinet officer who carried the White House instructions to the coal plutes from the smoky city is none other than Herbert Hoover. Another cabinet officer was appointed to keep in touch with Lewis. For racial and other reasons Mr. James J. Davis was considered the proper man to show John L. Lewis the advantage of being reasonable and not make wage demands which the operators would not grant.

Everything came off as planned. The Pittsburgh coal barons, until now the "die hards" among the mine owners, were quite tractable at Jacksonville, and signed on the dotted line after a little stage play to throw off suspicion that they came instructed by the Republican administration not to kick over the coal bin.

It should be remembered in connection with this that Lewis is a dyed-in-the-coal Republican even tho his organization has platonic connections with the Conference for Progressive Political Action, a non-partisan outfit.

The delegates to the Jacksonville conference who have been here since Feb. 11 have left for home to report the results of their work to the members of the union.

The agreement provides for a meeting in Miami, in 1927 to consider drafting of another contract. "No more strikes" is the new slogan of John L. Lewis. The agreement to meet in 1927 is mandatory.

Immediately following the signing of the agreement, unions in all districts outside the central competitive field, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana and Western Pennsylvania, were ordered to proceed at once to make new agreements on the basis of the old wage scale.

There is very little hope that agreements can be reached in parts of West Virginia, Eastern Kentucky or Tennessee. One hundred million tons of non-union bituminous coal are mined each year in West Virginia and with the non-union mines in operation in the other states this agreement can be laughed at by the operators who can shut down their union mines and open up the scab pits. There is no clause in the agreement to compel a coal operator to keep his mines working.

Ontario Labor Asks British Premier to Keep Jobless Home

By ROBERT SCRAEFTER.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

TORONTO, Feb. 20.—The British policy of solving the unemployment menace in Great Britain by subsidizing emigration to the colonies, especially Canada, has aroused widespread protest on the part of Canadian labor faced by unemployment here.

Speaking for the organized labor movement of Ontario, the District Trades and Labor council has telegraphed to the new British Labor premier, Ramsey MacDonald, asking that "everything be done owing to prevailing unemployment here to counteract the immigration campaign of the Ontario government in Great Britain."

The unemployed workers in Toronto have organized and presented the following demands to the local authorities: "Relief work, a hall for meeting a letter protesting against further emigration to be sent to Premier Ramsay MacDonald, that the stigma of labeling material given for relief from the house of industry be stopped and that some place better than a police station be provided for the sleeping accommodation of the unemployed."

Mayor Hiltz agreed that immigration should be stopped until those out of work are absorbed in industry and pledged himself to take the necessary steps with the state authorities to accomplish those results. He promised relief whereby work shall be provided for at least 500 men until May.

The "right to work" was asked for by 300 unemployed assembled in an open meeting at Queen's park. Resolutions were passed demanding either work or full maintenance by the federal provincial and municipal governments on the basis of union wage rates. A parade to the Labor Temple was prohibited by the police.

Canadian Clergy Ask Meal Tickets for Unemployed

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HAMILTON, Ont., Feb. 20.—Aid for the unemployed and issue of meal tickets were the demands presented to the city's relief department by a deputation of clergymen here. Criticizing the treatment of the unemployed by the city authorities, the deputation suggested the recruiting of voluntary helpers to handle emergency cases.

The Hamilton Trades and Labor council recently sent a letter to the new British secretary of state for home affairs in the MacDonald cabinet, Arthur Henderson, asking him to check the flood of British immigrants expected here in the spring. The letter states that "it is absolutely hopeless for fitters, turners, millwrights, brass finishers, die sinkers, or tool and die makers, to come to this part of Canada expecting to get work at their trade," and that the unskilled and semi-skilled market is more crowded than the skilled.

FLAMES QUICKLY BURN CHEAPLY BUILT TENEMENT

13 Charred Bodies Are Laid Out in Morgue

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Thirteen charred bodies, victims of one of the worst tenement fires New York has experienced in years, have been laid side by side in the Twenty-sixth Street morgue here, while sorrowing relatives attempt to identify them.

After extensive investigation, police and the fire marshal's office abandoned their first theory that the fire which broke out early today and swept thru the tenement house with savage fury, was of incendiary origin.

War Vet Epileptic Released.

Lewis Schoenfeld, ex-soldier, an epileptic, arrested as he was fleeing from the blazing house, was released.

Patrolman Michael Huesline, who discovered the blaze, told a graphic story of the disaster.

"I saw smoke pouring out of the building," he said, "and then a man (Schoenfeld) running away. I caught the man and held him until help came and then rushed into the building.

"It was terrible. The flames were roaring up thru a sort of natural flue formed by the stairways of flimsy wood.

All Is Over Quickly.

"I managed to rouse some of the people and help them to safety.

"There was a little girl in a crib. I took her in one arm and carried her with me as I ran thru the halls beating on doors with my night stick and shouting. The girl's clothing caught fire and I had to stop once to beat out the flames."

Firemen said the flames burned themselves out in a few minutes, eating thru the cheaply built old house with lightning rapidity.

Union Teachers Ask A. F. of L. to Visit May 30 Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Union teachers in New York are favorable to Third Party action by labor. At the regular meeting of Local No. 5 of the American Federation of Teachers at the Ethical Culture School, 2 W. 64th street, the teachers voted to ask the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. to send an observer to the May 30th, Farmer-Labor convention.

Abraham Lefkowitz, leading member of the so-called "American Labor Party," raised the only voice in dissent.

FARM-LABOR OF NEBRASKA HOLDS STATE MEETING

Widespread Discontent Making Itself Felt

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GRAND ISLAND, Neb., Feb. 20.—The widespread discontent amongst the farmers of the Northwest is making itself heavily felt in Nebraska.

The state is now in the throes of political developments of great dimensions and no one is ready to state definitely what new steps the farmers and workers are planning to take for the next campaign.

Call Gets Big Support.

A call for a state-wide mass convention of the farmers and workers to find ways and means of striking the heaviest blows at their political enemies in the coming elections has just been issued.

The call for this convention is indorsed by more than 75 active members of the Progressive Party and the former Non-partisan league. This group is representative of the most populated sections of the state.

It is the intention of those behind this call to get together on a program and to build a working political machinery to enable the farmers and workers of the state to agree upon, not only state candidates, but also national candidates.

Opens Washington's Birthday.

This convention will open on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, at Grand Island, Neb.

It is significant that the call reads in part: "Certainly, a program for union with the Minnesota Farmer-Labor movement and similar groups elsewhere in a national movement should be adopted, and desirable presidential candidates considered and recommended."

Most of the Nebraska congressmen are lawyers or business men, not at all representatives of the dirt farmers of the state who have been hit hard by the economic depression that has struck the agricultural areas of the country.

This dissatisfaction with the elected officials of the state is hitting both the Democratic and Republican parties alike. The Democratic congressman, John Henry Morehead of Falls City, is a spokesman of the big farming, mercantile, banking and business interests of the state. Another Democratic congressman, Ashton C. Shallenberger, is the president of the Bank of Alma and is engaged in cattle raising. The Republican congressman, Willis G. Sears, is a prominent lawyer, and Mr. Robert E. Simmons, another Republican congressman, is the state commander of the American Legion.

Dirt Farmers Not Satisfied.

The dirt farmers of Nebraska feel that these men do not represent them in congress and are bent on organizing to change the present unsatisfactory conditions.

The dissatisfaction of the farmers and workers has been seriously aggravated by the attempt of the Democrats to swallow up the Progressive Party organization here. A traitor in the ranks, Mayor Ellsberry of Grand Island has been prevailed upon to start a movement in the ranks of the progressives to turn the tide to the Democratic fold. He has just filed a petition at Lincoln placing Governor Bryan's name on the Progressive primary ballot.

The farmers of the state are very sore over this maneuver because this is the second time that an attempt is being made to trick them out of their political games. In the 1922 gubernatorial campaign, the progressive candidate, Mr. Ray, was prevailed upon in the midst of the election contest to withdraw from the race in order to throw all the progressive strength to his Democratic opponent, the present incumbent of the Governor's office, Mr. Bryan. This betrayal had a demoralizing effect on the ranks of the dirt farmers and working men of Nebraska. They are now determined not to allow such a surrender to occur again.

The Progressive Party which has been able to gain considerable strength in the state, is an organization of the farmers and workers who after the breakdown of the Nonpartisan league, refused to accept Townley's balance of power scheme in politics.

Fight Democratic Steal.

The leaders and most active workers of the Progressive Party are now marshalling all their forces to prevent the Democratic clique from stealing their organization.

If the convention at Grand Island is sufficiently representative and strong enough, there is a likelihood of its even going to the length of organizing a state Farmer-Labor party in order to end the present political muddle and nullify the attempts of the Democrats to file candidates in every congressional district on the party ticket.

Among the most active workers behind this move to thwart the Democratic politicians from misleading the farmers and workers of Nebraska are Wm. Repley of Grand Island, D. A. Kircheck of Chapman, C. W. Wagner of Indianola, E. J. Desmond of Bartley, Belle Taylor of Merna, J. M. Paul of Harvard, Guy Farmer of Inland, Morris Burkhart of Clay Center, Wm. Lyman of North Platte, John O. Smith of Wahoo, J. W. Behrens of Yutan, Otto Ulric of Winside, John Havekost of Hooper, Fred Panko of Sterling, Perry J. Green of Tilden, L. A. Larson of Wellfleet, David Coutts, Tom Matthews, Maud L. Lechy of Omaha, and Edward Sughrue of Indianola.

MOREL SAYS U. S. AND ENGLAND CAN PREVENT WARS

Free Germany, Recognize Russia, He Urges

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—E. D. Morel, England's famous peace propagandist and Labor M. P., was not an entrant in Mr. Bok's peace prize contest, perhaps because only American citizens were eligible and also perhaps he thought, in the words of the cartoonist, that the contest didn't mean anything anyway. But Mr. Morel has a plan. The text of it follows:

America can best help to save the world from further catastrophe by initiating, or co-operating with Great Britain in suggesting a world conference for the purpose of:

Seven Points of Peace.

1. Enabling the German people to resume a national life free from external interference, and to recover financially and economically.
2. Securing a wide measure of disarmament among all the nations in every branch of war organizations.
3. Abolishing the private manufacture of armaments.
4. Establishing a scientific rationing of the world's raw materials in order to prevent imperialist economies, especially in particularly weak or uncivilized communities.
5. Creating, either thru the existing League of Nations, strengthened and reformed, or thru some other medium, an international mechanism designed to be a substitution for the institution of war; and to examine with impartiality the economic, political and racial problem of all states with a view to providing for their respective needs without their being driven to war in the attempt to secure them.
6. Recognizing Russia.
7. Ensuring the neutralization, on some such plan as that laid down in "Africa and the Peace of Europe" and in "The Black Man's Burden," of the greater part of Africa including also the tropical regions; and abolishing the militarization of Africa.

Must Revise Peace Treaty.

No. 1, as Mr. Morel points out, involves the wide revision of the Versailles Treaty. No. 5 involves the reexamination of all the peace treaties of 1919 with a view to the protection of racial minorities.

"America," adds Mr. Morel, "can convince herself, if she chooses, that the British government now in power is not an imperialist government but is sincerely and deeply anxious to start a new chapter in the history of international relationships.

"Its capacity to do so depends in large measure upon American action, or inaction.

"The best in America and the best in Britain associated officially and unofficially in the unselfish task of preparing a new and better future for humanity can change the face of the world."

Now if some of our left wing agitators would speak up as to their opinion of this British legislator's suggestion the first steps toward such a conference would be accomplished.

"The "plan" as outlined above was sent to Julia Ellsworth Ford, American peace worker, by Mr. Morel at her request.

Youth Views

High School Students Forced to Quit.

More than half of the high school students are forced to quit before completing their courses is the latest information obtainable from the United States Department of the Interior, which is concerning itself with this phase of education in this country.

It is worthy of emphasis that the increase in the number of students leaving high school is coincident with the increase in unemployment and the epidemic of wage cuts now evident.

Most of these children that are forced to leave school before completing their meagre courses are sons and daughters of workers who have lost their jobs or have suffered a wage cut.

Not only is child labor increasing, but the legal exploitation of young, undeveloped boys and girls between 14 and 18 is a growing factor that must be faced by the labor movement precisely for this reason: These children are placed in jobs formerly occupied by adult workers in factories, shops and offices and do the work for less wages. Result: More unemployed workers or lowered wages for those older workers kept on the job.

Publishers Greedy for Wilson Matter, Since He Is Dead

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Publishers and editors of this city are hungry for Wilson material, acting on the "hunch" that the country wants and will pay a good price for a lot of it. We may therefor expect a veritable deluge of "intimate, outspoken" sketches and memoirs of the late president.

George Creel, so it is said, has a restless fountain pen; Josephus Daniels is already working on something. So is William C. Redfield, formerly secretary of commerce; Brand Whitlock, Colonel House, Jo Tumulty, Newton Baker are all said to be anxious to write books about the man who kept us out of war.

His daughters, his widow, his physicians and other intimates have, of course, been besieged by editors of newspaper syndicates, magazines and newspapers as well as book publishers.

Austrian Finances at Standstill from Bank Clerks' Strike

(Special to The Daily Worker)

VIENNA, Feb. 20. — Austrian banks are shut down by a walkout of the bank employes. The strikers refuse to increase their working week by two and a half hours.

It is impossible to replace the strikers. Austrian bank workers have to be accomplished statisticians to deal with the financial figures that run into the billions and trillions since the depreciation of the currency. Foreign exchange is particularly taxing.

So far the efforts of the capitalist papers to shame the bank clerks back with sob arguments about the hardships the government is suffering during these reconstruction times are dismal failures.

COMMUNIST·CHILDREN'S·COLUMN

Frogs and Children.

By EDMUND R. BRUMBAUGH

2,014 frogs were unkindly treated last year in Illinois alone, according to a press dispatch from the DAILY WORKER'S own home city of Chicago. 15 ostriches and 95 monkeys were abused.. A cage of songsters were bothered by jazz music on a phonograph.

Chickens, alligators, dogs and gold-fish were also unkindly treated, according to the state humane society, which made public the report.

Also, as an afterthought, perhaps, we are informed that complaints of cruelty to children numbered 1,437.

* * * *

It may just have happened, or possibly the order of mention reflected a state of mind all too common under our grab-and-gulp social order. Looking out for frogs, alligators and gold-fish requires a brand of sympathy that is safely narrow and has nothing to do with serious, fundamental things like the industrial system and just distribution of wealth. Kindly and prosperous ladies and gentlemen, all on fire for unselfish service, can thus have an outlet for their impulses without having to let go of cherished privileges, and, what is more definite, without having to go to work.

* * * *

Now children happen to be different from dumb things. They are generally acknowledged to be human beings. All kinds of possibilities are wrapped up in them. All kinds of big and far-reaching changes are in prospect if their present is to be improved and their future made secure. If one honestly starts to help children, there is no telling in what radical surroundings he may land, for, quite plainly, such help cannot stop at seeing that children are not slapped too often or bathed too seldom or sent to school without any breakfast.

* * * *

Humane societies do good work, but their work is woefully circumscribed, and it may even mean a serious misdirection of energy. When the labor movement has found itself and has more fully justified itself, the cruelty to children which is deep and damning, the poverty and the suffering, the stifling of worthy ambition and the refusal of equal opportunity, will be ended, not all at once, but surely promptly and permanently.

In that hour, too, frogs, alligators and gold-fish will not be forgotten. A genuinely civilized human race will not allow cruelty anywhere at any time to anything.

NICK LONGWORTH FIGHTING THAT 44 PER CENT TAX

Mellon Champ Leading Forelorn Hope

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Having killed the Mellon plan and written the Garner income tax rates into the revenue bill the Democratic-Progressive coalition in the House today stood its ground against efforts of the administration forces to reverse this action.

Republican Leader Longworth today insists, however, that there is still a possibility of forcing the adoption of a compromise which would not destroy the Mellon program.

As a result of the vote of 222 to 196 in the House late yesterday, the income tax schedule now stands:

44% On Big Incomes.

1.—Normal taxes on incomes up to $5,000 are two per cent; four per cent between $5,000 and $8,000 and six per cent above $8,000.

2.—Surtaxes beginning at one per cent on $12,000 are graduated to 44 per cent on $92,000 incomes.

3.—Personal exemptions for single persons are $2,000 and for heads of families $3,000.

With the adoption of the Garner plan in the "committee of the whole house" the fight will lag until the bill gets into the House proper. Democrats intend to support most of the administrative features of the bill.

When the bill does come before the House proper, Longworth intends to force a record vote on his substitute for the Garner plan.

It provides for a 25 per cent cut in both normal and surtaxes. It proposes the Mellon normal rates of three and six per cent and a maximum surtax of 37½ per cent on incomes of $100,000.

Melon Cutting to Be Taxed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Democrats scored their second victory in two days when the House this afternoon adopted the Garner stock dividend tax by a vote of 162 to 112.

Profits from the sale of stock dividends, regardless of when the stock is sold, would be subject to the regular income tax rates, under the amendment offered by Representative Garner, Texas.

Under the present law, profits from the sale of stock dividends more than two years after the dividends are issued are subject only to the capital assets tax of 2½ per cent.

Only 274 votes out of a total of 435 in the House were cast on the amendment and the Republican leaders hope to be able to reverse today's action when a record vote is taken in the House proper.

Willie Hearst Spurs on Cops to Pursue Gilda's Highwaymen

Two bombings, a little holdup that ended in the shooting of one holdup man, and the capture of six persons supposed to be connected with the holdup of Gilda Gray, friend of W. R. Hearst, shimmy dancer who was robbed of $150,000 worth of jewelry, disturbed the peace and quiet of the police of Chicago yesterday.

Unknown persons for unknown reasons placed a bomb under the porch of the home of Anthony Czarnecki, 6877 Hobart avenue, Norwood Park, a member of the board of election commissioners, and did about $1,000 damage. Fiore Lamonttagna, a grocer at 2327 W. Harrison street, failed to settle with black handers and as a result, yesterday his place of business was bombed. He was asked to give the black handers $2,000. He estimated that the bomb did about $1,000 damage.

Two men held up a drug store at 6260 Champlain avenue and tried to escape in a taxi. A policeman from the Woodlawn station commandeered a passing auto and gave chase. He caught the two men, who are said to be ex-convicts, and after a tussle shot one thru the chest and took them both to the station.

For the forty-eleventh time the police have captured the bad, bold bandits that robbed Gilda Gray. This time there are six of them in custody. Up till a late hour last night Gilda had not called at the detective bureau to identify them. The detective bureau promises that if Gilda feels she can't identify the men they now have they will get several more for her.

The Herald and Examiner men have been privately urging the police to get busy and recover Gilda's lost jewels, because of her friendship for William R. Hearst, it is believed.

Heresy Trial of Bishop Brown, Communist, Is Put off Again; He Denies Belief In "Saviour Gods"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GALION, O., Feb. 20.—The death in Dallas of Bishop Alexander L. Garrett, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in America, may delay the heresy trial of the Rev. William Montgomery Brown, who is to be tried by the House of Bishops because of statements contained in his book, "Communism and Christianism."

Altho no date for the trial has been set, it was expected the hearing would be held here early in the summer.

Secret Decision to Oust.

Bishop Brown intimated that the decision to try him was made in secret at the last meeting of the House of Bishops in the early Winter of 1923. He asserted that news of this leaked out thru remarks made by Bishop Thomas F. Gailor of the diocese of Tennessee in a sermon.

Bishop Brown said that even if the trial did take place it would affect his status in the church but little, since the "sacramental graces of baptism and ordination are indelible." He said that he could be as good a Christian on "atheistic and materialistic lines" as could any other member of the House of Bishops on "theistic and spiritistic lines."

Bishop Brown in the letter announced his willingness to resign if a committee of three named by the House of Bishops argue the matter out with him and still find him at fault. He also said he would resign if the House of Bishops placed itself on record that the recently promulgated declaration of orthodox faith by the House of Bishops at Dallas really was not such.

The "extreme heresy" charged against Bishop Brown consists of twenty-three quotations from "Communism and Christianism." Among them are:

Doubts Christ Lived.

"I doubt that Christ lived."

"The Holy Ghost sees to it that the slave class is kept in ignorance."

"The birth, death, resurrection, descension and ascension of all the Saviour-Gods not excepting Jesus, are versions of the sun-myth."

"There is no rational doubt about the fictitious character of the Divine Jesus."

Bishop Brown was accepted as a member of the Modern Churchmen's Union, even tho he took extreme pains to acquaint its leaders with his radical social ideas.

Evolution of Superstition.

The Bishop's views on the evolution of religious thought are given in the following excerpts from his public statement:

"The works of Frazer, Tylor and others have scientifically established the revolutionary fact that the history of religion is continuous from the savage upward, and that it is the history of an evolution. From the savage to ourselves there is no break, one phase of religious belief has given way to another, and there has been the same revolt and the same resistance to change at every step.

"The history of religion becomes more and more a question of phsychology. It is not a question of certain events having occurred at some particular date in history, and at some particular place, but one of what caused people to believe that these things have occurred.

"We have the same problem, in kind, presented to us by the growth of new religious beliefs among savage and civilized people. It is really a question of studying the culture stage at which a people are living and relating the beliefs in the supernatural to their existent stage of culture. The question no longer is, 'Did miracles occur?' The question now is, "What led people to believe they occurred?'

Witchcraft and Religion.

"In one direction the new viewpoint is quite openly adopted. We do not ask when did witchcraft cease to exist, for no one believes that it ever existed, but when did people cease to believe in witchcraft? This is a distinction of first-rate importance.

"The whole study of religion now consists in an investigation of man's intellectual evolution from the prescientific stage, where he believed in miracles, to the scientific one, where he ceased to believe in them. Miracles are left-offs from the age of traditionalism, and have no place in that of scientism as realities, but only as symbols.

Still Near Stone Age.

"Heresy charges are at this day almost enough to make one despair of human nature. They compel one to realize how near we are to the stone age, and how very thin is the veneer of civilization we have put on.

"The fact is that we are in for a wave of reaction toward tyranny all over the world. The United States is today at least fifty years behind what it was before the war, and our government can do with impunity tyrannous things it would not have dared to do twenty-five years ago. There are few, comparatively, today who have any real regard for freedom as such."

No Point of Agreement.

While Bishop Brown stands so far to the left in the opposition movement inside the Protestant Episcopal church, that it is quite difficult to see any point of agreement between him and the rest of the Modernists on the religious question, there is an ever widening split in the ranks of the Lord's army.

Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, the stormy petrel of New York, throws bomb after bomb into the camp of the Fundamentalists or those who take their religion raw. In a sermon delivered last Sunday in the Church of the Ascension, New York, he requested those of his congregation who could accept literally the Apostle's Creed to stand up. No one arose.

Brown Versus Grant.

Grant believes that superstition or religion can be reformed. Bishop Brown declares it must and will go the way of belief in witchcraft and other delusions of the past.

Dr. Grant is in favor of eliminating the more obviously out-of-date religious dogmas such as the Virgin birth theory. It is true this plank was an after thought on the part of the Catholic church and did not put it in their platform until several hundred years after the alleged date of Christ's birth.

Archbishop Hayes of the Catholic church has organized a mass meeting where special sacrifices will be offered to God for the pain caused him by the insinuations of moral turpitude against the Holy Ghost, his favorite field worker.

Christ a "Mad Artist."

Another New York divine declared that Christ was a "mad artist," meaning of course, that he was an idealist who would feel quite at home in Greenwich and very probably would not be able to pay his rent with any degree of regularity. This familiarity with Jesus is bringing the latter into general disfavor with respectable church patrons.

Not only was Christ a "mad artist" but he was also a poet, declares the same accuser, who evidently does not appreciate the seriousness of the last charge, else he is no friend of the meek and lowly Nazarene.

In the meantime the New York district of the Presbyterian church is proceeding in a normal manner and is demonstrating its regularity by putting on a drive for a million dollars. The motto of the Presbyterians is "O Lord, give us this day our daily pay."

Fakers Get Company to Do Dirty Work

(Special to The Daily Worker)

YUKON, Pa., Feb. 20.—Tactics of the Lewis machine in the coal mining district of western Pennsylvania, District 5, are illustrated in the case of Thomas Ray, a militant unionist who has just been discharged by the coal operator for whom he was working at Wyano, Pa., at the request of the officials of the district.

Bay was fired when he returned from the International convention. The reactionaries charged that he worked with the radicals there for the reinstatement of Howat and for other anti-Lewis measures.

This union man they have put out of a job is father of seven children, the oldest only 13. The machine has been trying to get him for a long time—even since he became identified with the Progressive Miners International Committee. They persuaded the company to fire him after they had failed to get his local union to expel him.

Earlier, when he was working near McDonald, and in a machine controlled local the district officials made a demand for his expulsion and Bay quit his job and went to work at Wyano where he had friends.

1924 CRISIS GIVES WORKERS PARTY ITS OPPORTUNITY

Ruthenberg Puts Situation Before Branches

The following appeal by C. E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary of the Workers Party, will be read at every Party Branch. It describes the magnificent opportunity before the organization that has come with the wrecking of the reputations of both old parties and asks for the fullest support at once:

"Our party has before it a great opportunity. During the past year we made great progress, as testified to by the letter to our convention from the Communist International. We have before us now the opportunity for even greater achievements.

"A crisis of major importance is shaking this country. For two years the farmers have suffered under conditions which have driven millions of them from the land. As a result there has developed a widespread movement among the farmers for a farmer-labor party and independent political action.

Oil Bespatters Both Parties.

"Now comes the Teapot Dome exposure—showing corruption and rottenness in high places unequalled in the previous history of this country. Both of the old parties are being splattered with the oil from Teapot Dome. They stand before the workers and farmers as the corrupt instruments of the exploiting class, using the power of the government to loot the nation in the interest of this class.

"The result of the Teapot Dome exposures has been a great impetus to both the movement for a third party and a Farmer-Labor Party. Literally millions of farmers and industrial workers are moving away from the old parties and are prepared for independent political action thru a Farmer-Labor Party.

We Must Lead Movement.

"It is our work to crystallize this movement. It is our work to give it definite form and to become the leaders in this movement. If we do not take the place in the forefront of this movement, these workers and farmers, who are moving toward independent political action will fall under the influence of petty bourgeoisie Third Party leadership. They will be misled and the class movement of workers and farmers will be delayed for years in its crystallization.

"Is our party equal to the opportunity which lies before it? Are we strong enough to win the farmers and industrial workers for the class movement in a struggle with the middle class leaders? The Central Executive Committee believes that our party is capable of undertaking this struggle and to win new successes for the Communist movement in the United States. Our successes during the last year prove our strength to go forward to new struggles and new victories.

"The Central Executive Committee has launched the campaign for class Farmer-Labor Party in connection with the Teapot Dome exposures as the medium thru which to build up our forces. Again we have taken the position of leadership. Now we must thru intensive work in this campaign prove our right to that position.

Need Funds to Build Movement.

"The immediate need of the National Office in order to take full advantage of the opportunity which lies before our party is financial assistance. For nearly a year the National Office has made no appeals to the membership for funds. It left the field clear for the DAILY WORKER campaign, to which the membership responded so splendidly. The result of the DAILY WORKER campaign, however, was that the National Office suffered financially. All its revenue was reduced by the fact that the membership were giving all they could to the DAILY WORKER.

"Now the national organization faces a great opportunity to build our movement with a depleted treasury. It must have funds for the Teapot Dome-class Farmer-Labor Party campaign. It must have funds for the many political conferences which are part of the maneuvers in this campaign. It must have funds for new literature, for speakers and organizers.

"The Central Executive Committee has, therefore, determined to ask the party membership for a Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund of $15,000. There will be no compulsory assessment, but the Central Executive Committee feels assured that every party member will realize the significance of the present situation and make his contribution.

$1.00 From Each Member.

"Attached are Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund emblems. We ask that every member of the party contribute $1.00 and put one of these emblems on his dues card. The payment is not compulsory. We ask that each party member assess himself voluntarily to enable the party to go forward to great achievement.

"Each branch of up to twenty-five members should be able to raise at least $10.00 thru these emblems and each branch of over 25 members at least $25.00. That is the standard.

"The money is needed quickly. Take the matter up at this branch meeting. Collect as many dollars for the emblems as possible and remit them to the National Office. We do not want a long, lingering campaign. Let us show that we can act quickly even in a financial campaign. Canvas every member during the next two weeks. Send in the remittance promptly.

"The National Office will transmit 25 per cent of the receipts from each district to the District Organizer to finance the work in the district.

"Comrades, we are going forward to greater struggles and greater victories. Your contribution to Farmer-Labor Party campaign fund will furnish the means for the biggest campaign the party has waged. Do your part—do it quickly and well.

Fraternally yours,
C. E. RUTHENBERG,
Executive Secretary."

From Austria to Spain Misery Rules Capitalist Europe

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20th.—Dispatches to commercial institutions of New York in one day sketch a depressing picture of Europe as follows:

The bank employes of "reconstructed" Vienna went on strike for wage increases so that they may buy sufficient bread to keep them alive;

There was "some disturbance" reported in French industry because of rising living costs with little success reported for the governments' attempt to cope with the stiuation by means of restrictions on exportation of certain kinds of food stuffs, coal and leather;

Industrial disturbances in Norway;

Only "slight improvement" in occupied Germany due to the stabilization there of money.

Norway's strikes are of metal and dock workers. They are spreading. In France prices are rising rapidly as the franc drops, and buying for export is increasing at the expense of domestic busines. Unemployment is increasing. This is France's first taste of unemployment.

And — significant! — French commercial syndicates are advising members to calculate their selling prices on a dollar basis to avoid replacement losses!

KLAN METHODS TOO CRUDE FOR NICHOLAS BUTLER

Goosestep President in War on Night-Gown

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, has accepted the leadership of a movement to center a fight against the Ku Klux Klan by unseating Earl B. Mayfield as junior United States senator from Texas. Convinced that if the Klan is to be stamped out Mayfield must be unseated, fifty men of affairs in New York have been asked to grant moral and financial support to Texans now working in Washington to evict their junior senator.

Butler, in announcing the conference's purpose to obtain financial assistance for those prosecuting the Mayfield ouster, said:

"My interest in combating the Klan movement arises from its lawlessness. The Ku Klux Klan is one of the newest and most active forms of that lawlessness which surrounds us on every side and which threatens the foundations of our government and our social order.

"The very professions of the Ku Klux Klan, to say nothing of its acts, are in violation of our fundamental law. We guarantee to every man freedom of conscience, freedom of worship and equality before the law. The Ku Klux Klan denies and violates all of these principles.

"It is fundamentally un-American and un-Christian and it must be stamped out at all costs without delay. We serve this notice upon time-serving politicians and office seekers who expect to gain personal advantage by compromise with this evil thing.

"The attempt to keep Mayfield as senator from Texas is not an ordinary political enterprise. It is a declaration of war on the American government and it affects and challenges the whole nation, not merely the people of Texas."

Another Juicy Scandal.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Validity of the first ballots counted in the Mayfield election investigation was challenged today by opponents of Senator Earle B. Mayfield, Texas.

Returns from seven precincts in Anderson county were questioned on the ground that variation is shown in the handwriting purporting to be the signatures of the presiding election judges in those precincts.

The recount of the ballots was begun yesterday under orders from the senate committee which is investigating Mayfield's election.

Ballot Boxes Absent.

The committee has completed the recount of the first county but the totals were not made public.

Luther Nickels, attorney for George E. B. Peddy, the contestant, claimed that the differences in signatures may indicate some of the ballots were not signed by the presiding judges who have that exclusive power.

Several boxes from Anderson county—a strong Mayfield district—were said to be missing.

Young Granted Injunctions.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Feb. 20th.—Forty-seven temporary injunctions closing as many saloons in Herrin and Marion, Williamson County, were issued today by Federal Judge English in Federal District Court here, on affidavits sworn out by S. Glenn Young, leader of Ku Klux Klan liquor raids in that county.

Fifty informations charging violation of the Volstead law were filed against Williamson County residents by Young and his assistants.

Both informations and injunctions, together with about eighty other liquor cases, already under prosecution by the Klan, are returnable at Federal Court in Danville, Ill., March 3rd.

Young to Go.

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 20.—A compromise between Sheriff George Galligan and the Ku Klux Klan, which provides for a cessation of "dry" raids by the klan, the removal of S. Glenn Young, paid employe of the organization, and two of Galligan's deputies, was announced today by a citizens' committee that brought about the compromise.

New York Teachers' Union Starting Big Membership Drive

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—The teacher's Union is preparing for a membership drive in March. The organization which has under 1,000 members, wants a big proportion of New York's total of 25,000 teachers.

The technic of the drive, as explained by Dr. Henry R. Linville, president of the union, is to include personal letters, personal interviews at homes of teachers as well as in schools, distribution of special literature explaining the aims of the union, and conferences in schools, a number of which have already been held.

At a preliminery meeting of organized teachers, John L. Tildsley, a divisional superintendent of schools declared that the union should have every one of the 25,000 teachers as members, and when it did have them all educational conditions might be transformed over night.

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

The Woman of Paris.

THIS first venture of Charley Chaplin into the admittedly serious is worth all the praise bestowed upon it by the critics—and then some. In taking the most tawdry and trite of dramatic material—the threadbare French "cabinet drama"—and thru sheer directorial skill making it the vehicle for supreme expression of almost every emotion known to man, Chaplin again proves himself the foremost genius of the film world. There have been other great actors who could move their audiences alternately to thought, to tears and to laughter, altho no one on the silver screen does it so well as this supremely human, lovable clown. Chaplin here proves that he can do the vastly more difficult job of making other actors, and by no means the best known of them either, do all the subtle thrilling little tricks that makes the screen illusions of life so real as to seem life itself.

This picture is an emotional field day. One sees the private property pride of the French father whose services in marriage agreement have been spurned by impetuous, callow young lovers, pride that sends one old man to death and the other to a lifetime of loneliness. One sees mother love in its true colors, gloriously selfish, meddling in the boy's love affairs "for his own good" even tho it brings him to a wretched death. In "The Woman" one sees love, pique, jealousy, vanity, and above all a trader's dissatisfaction with the deal no matter how profitable the commerce. One sees little old "Economic Determinism" make the fine dame ludicrous and the tramp a philosopher.

"Judge not that ye be not judged," is the underlying theme of the picture. A splendid antidote for an overdeveloped morality. A rap on the door at the wrong time by a doctor called to attend a corpse, busts up a village elopement and makes the country girl into the "Woman." A studio door left open by an indecisive boy breaks up the wedding a second time and results in the most artistic suicide ever screened. And the old mother is cheated of a violent revenge by her lack of a limousine.

This is truly an all-story picture, each player lives in his role and the result is perfect characterization. Edna Purviance is technically the star, she is regally beautiful most of the time, but the honors really go to the "Villain." His acting is flawless but then the part is the most sympathetic in the play. On the other hand the poor "Hero" is given a very rough deal by Charley. He is made a callow, narrow-minded, indecisive weakling whose one redeeming feature is that he made a beautiful corpse, especially with his face. This is just like Chaplin. The villain has been the under-dog in American movies too long, it is about time he came into his own.

Direction is perfect, one might almost say, inspired. It shows what we can hope for when changed social conditions permit production for art rather than for the box office. The aforementioned suicide, the arrival of the train portrayed by moving window lights, the mother cooking a frugal supper while her boy's body is being borne home on a police stretcher, the reporter breaking the news with the question, "How old was your son?" the wooden-faced message expert, all these are pure genius. The kitchen scene with the over-ripe wood-cocks approaches very, very close to the pie-slinging slapstick for which Charley is famous. I wonder tho if a man who shoots with his left hand really loads with his right, and if even the suavest villain would not have been just a little mussed up after a two-minute tussle with an infuriated lover fifty pounds and six inches the better man?

The end is bosh. A dozen pretty orphans and a rotund village priest are the woman's consolation for the loss of both love and luxury. And in company with her near-mother-in-law! As sticky-sweet and messy as the jam on the cherub's face. Typical American hokum. Hell, Charley, couldn't even you rise above that?

GERMAN RELIEF ISSUE IN BOSTON CENTRAL BODY

Progressives Won't Let Machine Shelve It

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Feb. 20.—The Boston Central Labor Union today referred to its executive board the question of sending two delegates to the second Conference for German relief called by the Boston organization of the Friends of Soviet Russia and of Workers Germany, George Kraska, secretary.

Accompanying the request was a statement describing how the F. S. R. has been thoroly investigated by an impartial committee of representative men from unions and political organizations; and by the district attorney of New York, who found no basis for charges.

An interesting discussion ensued after a motion was made by Delegate Simons to send the two delegates requested.

Conservative Machine Objects.

Members of the conservative machine objected on the grounds that the Central Labor Union had already appointed a committee, at the request of the A. F. of L. to help the German trade union movement.

Delegate Abrahams answered, showing the difference between the two plans. The A. F. of L. was trying to save the trade union machinery by providing funds for the salaries of officials and other administrative expenses. The proposed conference, however, was for the relief of the German workers who were suffering from low wages and undernourishment, and large numbers of them starving. He appealed to the delegates on behalf of the kiddies in need, and urged the sending of delegates.

Investigation Excuse.

Delegate Gillespie stated that he was not a Friend of Soviet Russia, and amended the motion to read to refer to the executive board for investigation. To this Simons replied that if investigations could have killed the beneficial work of the F. S. R., it would have been killed long ago. It was a legitimate organization for the gathering of relief funds and clothing, first for Russia and now for Germany. Action was imperative at this meeting. If any delegate who urged further investigation would state grounds for further investigation, very well, but this was not done. While the C. L. U. would be investigating thousands of German workers and children would be starving. What would you say, if under similar conditions in America, with hundreds of thousands starving, those in other countries would delay relief by carrying on interminable investigations?

The passage of the amendment referring the matter to the executive board made a poor impression on many delegates from organizations newly affiliated with the central body.

The question of relief raised at today's meeting will come up again before the Central Labor Union, and will not be downed. More and more delegates are now fighting the Gompers' policy that have been ruling in the Central Labor Union under the leadership of McCarthy, A. F. of L. organizer.

Stage Setting Helps Create Mysterious Air About Rachmaninoff

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN

Sergei Rachmaninoff gave a piano recital at the Auditorium Theater Sunday afternoon. There is always something mysterious about Rachmaninoff, caused by the tall and gaunt appearance of the man, and the stage setting in which he plays. The iron curtain is always lowered, and the piano is on the half-lighted proscenium. Rachmaninoff always surprises one with the genius of his playing. One moment we are borne by great, overwhelming billows of fiery tone, the next second all is soft and far away, like echoes from a great distance. His is the deep interpretation of a great and wonderful artist.

* * *

Georges Enesco, Roumanian violinist, played his first Chicago concert at the Studebaker on the same day. His stage was decorated with Christmas wreaths. These were not timely, but they were not out of place, for Enesco seemed a trifle out of date. He is not a young man, and his playing sounded logy and lifeless. This was contrary to expectations, because his symphony, played some weeks ago by Frederick Stock, is a most beautiful composition.

* * *

Carolyn Schuyler, a young pianiste, made her debut at the Playhouse the same afternoon. We heard her play an utterly useless work by Debussy, the title of which, flippantly and freely translated, is "The Song of the Goldfish." Her subsequent numbers revealed in her an excellent musician, and thoroly capable. Perhaps she is a little inclined towards an excess of sentiment, but this is not too great a fault.

* * *

Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto, sang at Orchestra Hall, also on Sunday afternoon. We were able to hear her for only a moment, but that moment was thoroly charming. Her voice is of beautiful quailty, and her personality most pleasing and attractive. The program indicated an interesting afternoon of Swedish, German and American songs.

THE THEATRE

By D'FERRIER

V.

TO SAY that "Peer Gynt' is amusing nonsense might be construed as implying disrespect for one of the most austere masters of dramatic art; Henrik Ibsen. Nevertheless, such is the attitude towards this poetic fantasy that this department is prepared to maintain.

There is considerable discussion as to whether or not Ibsen ever intended "Peer Gynt" to have a stage presentation, but this question cannot be answered after viewing the altered version of the drama. Suffice to say that, in certain respects, the current presentation justifies its existence.

The play chronicles the adventurous life and imaginings of Peer Gynt, a turbulent yet jolly character as played by Basil Sydney. Sydney is at his best in the fourth act, wherein he undergoes various experiences on the continent of northern Africa.

The best bit of acting in "Peer Gynt" is contributed by Nannie Griffen, who makes of Ase, Peer's mother, a living and breathing creation.

Arthur Hughes, as the master of a Cairo madhouse, gives an enjoyable performance. This madhouse setting is a masterpiece of the grotesque.

Asya Kass, playing a wanton dancing girl who gyps the infatuated Peer of much worldly treasure, proves good enough to join the "Follies."

In the Norwegian trolls, the Guild has combined a slap-stick comedy with a fairy tale to achieve its effect.

There is little poetry in "Peer Gynt" as presented here, but this loss (if a loss) is more than made up for by the charmingly naive spirit injected by Mr. Sydney and his associates. There is also much delightful incidental music, composed by Grieg.

The play is in the repertoire of the Theatre Guild, a most estimable organization, who will also stage at the Great Northern theatre in this city, "He Who Gets Slapped" and Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple."

Jakira to Discuss Miners' Meet at Phila. Open Forum

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 20.—The Workers Party local is arranging for an Open Forum to be held every Sunday at 3 p. m. at 521 York Ave., corner Spring Garden and Fifth Sts. The Forum will open next Sunday, Feb. 24, with a lecture by A. Jakira, district organizer of District Three, on the "Lessons of the Indianapolis Convention of the Miners."

The Indianapolis convention represented a continuous battle between the famous steam roller of the reactionary officialdom and the rank and file delegation. It finally broke up amidst turmoil without having fully completed its regular order of business. The lessons of this convention, at which more than 1,800 delegates were represented, are of utmost importance not only to the miners but to the American labor movement as a whole and no one should miss the opportunity to hear the story told by one who attended all the sessions of the convention and who takes an active part in the American labor movement. Admission is free.

The Dockers' Strike

Instead of greeting the strike of the dock workers as evidence of a revival of militancy among the workers of Great Britain, the MacDonald government announces in the House of Commons that "the government will not fail to take such steps as are required to secure the necessary transportation and has already set up the nucleus of an organization."

It might be noted here that the theory of strike-action is that the cessation of work creates such a shortage of the commodities produced or transported by the particular industry involved that the concessions demanded by the workers become of less importance than the inconvenience their idleness causes.

It follows then that in arranging for the transport of foodstuffs the MacDonald government is actually taking the side of the private employers, who, rather than pay the two shillings per day increase demanded by the dockers, will witness nation-wide suffering.

Two shillings per day in England mean the difference between comparative comfort and poverty. That the employers could well afford the increase is unquestioned, but in no pronouncement of the MacDonald government is there found any threat of action against the employers.

The MacDonald government, the opposition and the capitalist press, are a unit against the dockers.

Perhaps the dockers believed that with socialists elected on the British Labor Party ticket holding the government positions a strike would be won easily; that if the government interfered it would be to aid the striking workers. Perhaps they wanted to settle this disputed question.

The answer has been given. It is that the MacDonald government is not even a labor government let alone a revolutionary one.

It is a government of the "people" and just as the interests of the capitalists are paramount in economic life so are their interests of first concern to any government that does not intend to abolish the foundation of their privileges—private ownership of the means of production and distribution.

If proof were wanting that the leadership of the British Labor Party has no wish to disturb the status quo it has been furnished by its action in the dockers' strike.

Instead of ordering the employers to grant the two-shilling increase as an alternative to the nationalization of their properties and enterprises, the MacDonald government does exactly what its predecessors have done—mobilizes the attaches of the government to do the work of the strikers and force them back to their jobs in the name of the good of the British Empire.

It is well that this early in its career the reformists of the second international, who rule in England, have shown their close kinship to the Kerenskys, Noskes and Pilsudskis the world over.

Parliamentarism as an end in itself leads to the same point in all countries—betrayal of the workers and support of the workers' enemies.

Business and Politics

Because of the shocking disclosures of abnormal graft and corruption in Washington many people have limited their consideration of the Teapot scandal to the political field. An important and seldom considered angle of the historic investigation, now besmirching the White House with oil is the business-side of the matter.

What effect does the revelation about sordidness in politics have on business? How do the big interests react to the examination? These questions are pertinent because if any pressure is to be brought to bear on Congress to drop the whole investigation, it will be big business that will do the pressing.

The black smoke of the oil conflagration is befogging many a hope of Wall Street. Big business is plainly worried where and when will the investigation stop. The reaction of the market to date spells only trouble. Said the authoritative Commercial and Financial Chronicle: "It would be useless to blink the fact that the oil scandals at Washington have had a more or less disturbing effect on all the markets, whether for securities or for commodities. To merchants, stock markets and its decline of late on enormous transactions, has been the subject of painful interest as reflecting the disturbance of business sentiment growing out of the fact that the more the Teapot Dome oil scandal is probed at Washington, the worse it looks, until men are beginning to ask, how far is the thing going? Whom is it going to smirch?"

On this basis, it is easy to understand why Jesse Livermore, the noted New York operator, has said that the confidence of business and the country were being undermined by Congressional investigations and therefore called for the election of "none but successful business men to Congress." This is the same Livermore, who was employed by Harry F. Sinclair to market stock of the Mammoth Oil Company, which leased the Teapot Dome area.

The above statements by men of such great prominence in the financial circles are of inestimable significance. They show very clearly that big business is planning to launch an offensive to put an end to the present investigation. The first step in this direction is the soft-pedaling of the investigation by Chairman Lenroot of the sub-committee in holding executive sessions during the absence of Senator Walsh.

The Teapot investigation must not be interfered with. The workers and farmers should make every effort to force the Senate to probe to the depths of the oil well.

The Fate of the Workers

We have shown how the workingmen of New York have been forced to live in abominable houses and dangerous congestion.

The loss of thirteen lives in a fire which swept a five-story tenement house on the East side, only brings into painful relief the findings of our investigation.

The bodies of seven children, two women and four men, removed from the burning tenement house are a ghastly warning to all the workers of New York and other cities, dangers that beset them in the present acute housing crisis.

The landlords and their government agents know that there are thousands of working men living in fire traps. The government is well aware of the fact that if it were to execute its own laws, it would condemn hundreds of tenements now occupied by working men who cannot afford to pay the exorbitant rents demanded by their profit-hungry landlords.

In the days of feudal oppression, the ruling class, now and then, burned their subjects at the stake. Capitalism is much more ingenious and complicated. The capitalist class does not resort to this crude method of murdering the helpless men, women and children of the laboring masses. What the ruling class of today does is somewhat more peaceful in appearance yet characterized by the same deadlines in effect.

The fatal blaze in New York, that destroyed the lives of thirteen people is to be attributed solely to the horrible system of housing that now prevails in the metropolis. The blood-guilt for this heinous crime is to be placed solely on the heads of the landlord class of New York.

Dollar Diplomacy

While the Interior, Navy and Justice Departments are being drained of Teapot oil, it might be well to pay a little attention to the State Department.

It is an open secret, in political circles, that the Department of State also reeks with oil corruption—the Standard Oil brand. The State Department is now in the midst of a controversy with the Government of Peru because of the attempt of a Standard Oil banking firm, the Guaranty Trust Co., to monopolize the field of Peruvian investments.

The president of Peru has just protested to Washington against the methods pursued by the Guaranty Trust Co. in Peru. It is charged that the New York bank has notified all financial institutions that it alone has the option on Peruvian financing. This group of Wall Street bankers proceeded to "warn all others off the field."

On the basis of the record of the State Department, the policy that our government will pursue is a foregone conclusion. There is no doubt that Secretary of State Hughes will run to the support of the Guaranty Trust Co. in the name of national honor and the country's security—in reality the banker's securities. Needless to say our ambassador at Lima, the lame-duck reactionary ex-Senator Poindexter, will do his best to defend "our interests" in the South American republic.

The mailed fist of dollar diplomacy will be swung in the face of the people of Peru who are dependent on American capital for the development of their natural resources. A smoke screen of the thinnest juridical abstractions will be raised to show that American property rights are being violated in the Latin republic.

Soft as these words may appear on the surface, they are in reality stern warnings to the English capitalists to keep out. They are a challenge to the safety of the Latin American republics in general and the national life of Peru in particular. The services rendered by Secretary Hughes to these bankers is a constantly recurring menace to the safety of the American workers as well as their southern brothers.

Dollar diplomacy is only another form of dollar democracy as enjoyed by the workers when they strike for the right to organize and against unbearable conditions of employment.

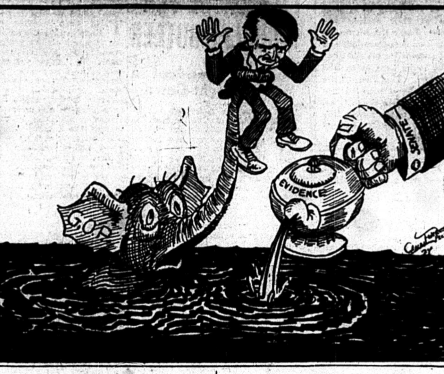
YELLING FOR HELP



Russia Leads the Way

With Germany on the eve of becoming a satrapy of the international financiers and France face to face with bankruptcy because of the collapse of the franc and burdensome taxation, Soviet Russia's great advance in reconstruction is the outstanding feature of the European politico-economic situation today.

M. Krassin, the Soviet Commissar for Foreign Trade, has just announced that the Soviet Republic, in the fiscal year 1922-23, exported goods to a total value of more than 210 billion gold rubles—an increase of more than 200% over the preceding year. According to Krassin the estimate of Russian export for the coming year already exceeds 500 billion gold rubles. The Soviet government is now winding up arrangements with French, Austrian and Dutch firms for credit on consignments of grain lying in Russian ports. Up to the end of 1923 close to 2 million tons of grain have been forwarded to Russian ports and 1,300,000 tons had been delivered abroad. This shows the great progress that the Russian railway system and shipping are making. The trade balance is now on the right side, imports having been reduced, those of food having practically ceased.

The recent recognition of Russia by England, Italy and Norway are of paramount political importance. The British government has laid special emphasis on its ambassador to Russia devoting his major attentions to securing agreements for English interests to counterbalance the close French control of nearly 70% of the iron and coal deposits of Central Europe by French capitalists.

The political side of these prospects for gigantic British development of the coal and iron wealth of Russia spells an attempt of England to co-operate with the Soviet government in order to counteract French policy in Central Europe.

To the workers and farmers of the world the great advance made by Soviet Russia, to date with practically very little outside help, is a victory of first rate importance. The Soviet government's tenacity and strength have forced the foreign capitalists to terms. Germany is making a strong demand for Russian rye and barley; Italy and France are competing for Russian wheat. While the currencies of practically every government in Europe are tumbling, Russia's financial condition is becoming more and more stable and sound.

Pollyanna at the Helm

President Coolidge, if one can judge by his most recent official statement, is an incurable optimist.

The governmental machinery, he says, has not been injured by the oil scandal.

The ship of state, says he, sails serenely on. New Hampshire's favorite and favored son is at the helm, a Jonah has been jettisoned, and all is well.

The agonized wails from amidships that split the air lead one to believe that the mates are not as enthusiastic as the skipper. In the forecastle mutinous curses are voiced by the ordinary seamen who complain of the smell of oil in their quarters. The ship itself reeks with the odor of disinfectants that, tho liberally used, may still not prevent quarantine officers refusing it permission to dock on November 7.

Tho jagged rocks shaped like teapots beset the course of the careening vessel, the pirate fleet of which it is a part continues to seize much rich loot.

These be parlous times for American institutions and we are moved to inquire the whereabouts of their staunchest defender—one William J. Burns—who was wont to issue from time to time hair-raising statements dealing with the communist plans for seizing the White House.

Perhaps he has discovered that the White House is now so well oiled that the Communists could not hang on to it. Even his chief, the doughty Daugherty, seems to be having trouble maintaining his hold.

The Strikebreaking "Pennsy"

One of the bitterest, if not the most uncompromising, anti-labor corporations in this country is the Pennsylvania Railroad.

During the shopmen's strike of 1922 and since, the Pennsylvania Railroad set the pace in smashing the organizations of its workers. So tactless and arrogant have the officials of the Pennsylvania system been in their attack on the labor unions that now and then a government official was compelled to disapprove of the offensive open shop methods.

Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission has come forward with a report which shows that the Pennsylvania Railroad has been able to break up the railway workers organizations only at the expense of crippling its service. The war of the Pennsylvania on the union men has brought in its wake a serious danger to the people traveling on this railway system. The Pennsylvania Railroad which is the leader of the anti-union crusade also ranks first in faulty engines. The Interstate Commerce Commission has just found that the Pennsylvania Railroad has had the largest percentage of defective locomotives of the nine railroad systems selected by the Commission as representative of the railways of the United States.

Of the Pennsylvania locomotives examined for 1923 fiscal year, 76% were found defective or closely approaching violation of the law and actually committing the most flagrant disregard of all safety statutes.

Within the last six months of the calendar year 1923, all of the nine railroads except the Pennsylvania showed a decided improvement. The Pennsylvania alone which has been most violent in its campaign against organized labor, showed no signs of improvement.

The conditions on the Pennsylvania system are a menace to the safety of thousands of people traveling on its roads. The dangerous state of affairs arises directly from the war being waged on the workers by the labor-hating officers of this corporation. The government in not compelling the Pennsylvania to improve its system and in tolerating the continuation of this man-killing inefficiency is aiding and abetting the strikebreaking activities of the Pennsylvania railroad.

> To a foreigner who saw Austria on the verge of chaos only eighteen months ago, the attitude of the bank employes and of the working class, who are constantly striking, appears to be grossly selfish while the Government is struggling to meet the obligations of the State and the interest on the international loan due in April.
>
> —Vienna correspondence of the N. Y. Times.

We submit the above as evidence of the impartial character of the news carried by the capitalist press. No comment or editorializing is allowed in the news columns, is the claim of its apologists.

Sixteen million dollars in fines have been collected from bootleggers by the courts according to a government report. There are no statistics available as to the amounts collected by prohibition enforcement officers.

Brother Denby has gone to swell the ranks of the unemployed and the "Help Wanted" sign on the White House has brought scores of applicants.

Our conviction that the oil leases were entirely legal has been somewhat shaken by the insistence of prominent prospective witnesses upon immunity.

Clare Sheridan says the British aristocracy is looking for a savior of the Mussolini type. They probably do not recall that Clare does not approve of Mussolini.

The Hearst papers are disappointed by the developments in the Teapot Dome scandal. No sex angle has been found as yet.

The tie-up of shipping in England must be working awful hardships on the drove of lecturers who are headed this way.

If we were Attorney-General Daugherty we would begin to believe that the boss wanted us to quit.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

A young girl, a foreigner who assimilated some of the Americanism that is floating around every large city, is on trial for her life in a Chicago court room. As the task of selecting a jury proceeds she reads a German bible. The poor unfortunate is a Christian. Perhaps she hopes the jurors are. So much the worse for her unless they have forgotten the Puritan brand of that creed.

• • • •

This girl came from Hungary nine years ago. She had dreams of a land where there were rich folks but no poor. It did not take her long to learn her mistakes. The first thing to do was to drop her old world customs and become Americanized. She had to quit school early and go to work. Her father was sick. She went to work in a mail order house. Only a few weeks ago the wife of a mail order king gave a few millions to a university. This girl who is now on trial for murder helped to pile up those millions. The blood of countless slaves is on every dollar of that gift.

• • • •

The girl could not live on the wages paid in the mail order house. She got a job in a restaurant. Long hours, seven in the evening to seven in the morning. No, the League for the Suppression of Vice took no interest. Neither did the Ku Klux Klan. She was just a victim of legitimate capitalism. She had to make a living. She refused to starve. Ignorant, untrained, without friends, there was only one way. She had a body that appealed.

• • • •

Christian ministers continued to rave about a just God, defended the virgin birth theory, while committees of pestiferous busybodies raided pool rooms, bootleg parlors and houses of infame. But the real houses of shame, the shops where girls were forced to work for a wage so low that they were forced to choose shame or death were not raided, the ostrich heads of the Christian crawthumpers were buried deep in the sand of hypocrisy—for a price.

• • • •

An unfortunate victim of capitalist society today sits in a capitalist court charged with murder. Ignorance, starvation wages, prostitution, robbery and a murder charge. Who is the criminal, that ignorant girl or the system that breeds the conditions that produce that type? We say the system. And the judge who presides over the trial and the prosecutors who will try to send her to the gallows—all staunch upholders of this immoral robber system—should be placed on trial and the victim who is in the dock sent to a hospital or a school.

• • • •

The workers of this city who suffer torture in riding to and from work in crowded, insanitary and crawling cars ask themselves the question: Why the political bosses of this growing community do not provide the people with adequate means of transportation? To anybody who does not know that democratic and republican politicians do not seek election to run cities but to ruin them the failure to build subways would be a mystery. The capitalist politicians take advantage of their terms of office to make money. They take advantage of the conflicting interests of rival capitalist groups. The big fellows are gobbling the little fellows and Sam Insull is probably gobbling them all. By the time that gentleman has dined on his competitors perhaps he may graciously give Chicago a subway. We will have a good deal more to say about the Traction gluttons later on.

• • • •

Modern politicians promise material consideration to those who can afford to back them in the race for office with cash. But the practice is by no means new even tho the considerations offered are different. As far back as the year 1455 a book was printed containing an indulgence issued by Pope Nicholas V, "to each person as should contribute money to aid the King of Cyprus against the Turks." An American millionaire, if living in those days, would have little difficulty in passing the pearly gates. Doheny could purchase several satchelsfull of indulgences for the cash he used in oiling the ways for the Teapot Dome.

• • • •

The writer noticed a deadly pallor overspread the countenances of the delegates to the McAdoo conference when the photographers set off their flashlights in the Crystal Room of the Great Northern Hotel. He could not understand the reason. He has an inkling of it now. They feared an explosion. Scratch a capitalist politician nowadays and you will touch an oil can.

"HELP!" DAUGHERTY TO BURNS

BRITISH DOCK WORKERS WIN GREAT STRIKE

Prestige of Labor Movement Enormously Increased

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 21.—The end of the greatest dock strike in British history is scheduled for today. Employers have agreed to yield a two shilling increase, tho they are postponing the full-week work guarantee issue and maintenance of unemployed for later negotiations.

Representatives of the dock workers' unions reached the agreement with the employers after an all night session. The strike will end when the union delegates ratify the settlement.

The strike was practically 100 per cent effective in every British port,—the first time a great national movement of the dockers was ever carried out. More than 120,000 men were involved.

The nation's food supplies were reaching a low level.

Labor Movement Strengthened.

The success of the strike will enormously increase the prestige of the labor movement in England. The MacDonald government, also, will retain influence of workers who would have damned it forever if it had turned itself into a strike-breaking machine.

Official support, which the British Trade Union Congress gave the strike, is believed to have been the deciding factor that prevented the government from yielding to the demands of its anti-strike supporters in the ranks of the liberals.

Rail Men Gave Support.

Days will pass before the congestion caused by the strike can be cleared away. In Southampton thousands of sacks of American mail are lying in lighters. Railroad workers refused to touch any cars loaded by scab labor.

Employers lost sympathy of a large part of the middle class public even when it was learned that the average profits last year exceeded seven per cent. On the other hand the cost of living has advanced so that the workers, with the two shilling increase, will not be so well off as they were before the cut of two years ago.

DENVER, Colo., Feb. 21.—A church was used for prayer meeting and boxing bouts in the same evening here last night.

The Merritt Morrel Methodist Church staged a combination smoker and prayer meeting. Seven youths were awarded the palm of victory in as many boxing matches.

After the devotional services in the earlier part of the evening, led by the Rev. B. B. Kassler, the congregation made its way to the basement of the church where a ring was roped off for the matches.

POINCARE BARELY GETS CONFIDENCE VOTE IN SENATE

Exposed as Disburser of Czar's Bribes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 21.—With the franc still at worse than 24 to the dollar Poincare barely succeeded today in gaining a vote of confidence in the senate, by 150 to 134. The vote shows a decided break away from the strength he had recently.

The proposed election laws were adopted but it is not yet learned whether the features objectionable to the government were eliminated or not. Poincare has stated that he would resign if these features were not deleted from the bill.

The French premier has lost his popularity in Paris. The confusion in business circles since the crash of the franc is blamed on his international policy.

Exposures in L'Humanite of Poincare's role as disburser for the Russian subsidies to the venal French press in the years preceding the war have played a large part in destroying confidence. Poincare has not denied the exposes, which are supported by authentic documents from the Czar's archives, taken over by the Soviet government, and turned over to a member of the French communist paper's staff for investigation.

President Millerand has barred all foreigners from the Paris bourse—claiming that their speculations in French securities have contributed to the anarchial conditions there. The counter charge is made that Millerand does not want outsiders to see what is going on.

Aged Worker, Scrapped by Bosses, Gives Up Struggle and Ends Life

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOBERLY, Mo., Feb. 21.—Henry Miller long had been out of employment and destitute. For the past several days he had been sleeping in the rear of a shoe shop here. In a fit of despondency over his circumstances, Miller hanged himself this week in his makeshift sleeping quarters. He was 60 years old, and he found his age against him whenever he applied for employment.

FIVE-CENT FARE HAS WON BIG PROFITS FOR N. J. TROLLEY SYSTEM

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Feb. 21—Five-cent fares, instituted by the Public Service Railway Co., after the strike last summer and early fall show a profit, according to the financial report for December of the company. A deficit of $30,000 in November was wiped out in December and a credit of $47,781 piled up. There were 8,000,000 more passengers in December, 1923, with the 5-cent fare in force than in December, 1922, before the rate was cut. The company operates in almost 150 Jersey cities and villages.

LADIES' TAILORS IN FIGHT TO ENFORCE RAISE

Demand Five Day Work Week; 8 Hours

Ten thousand local garment workers have made all preparations to strike to enforce their demands for an eight-hour day, a five day work week and an increase of 15 per cent over the wages now effective in the Chicago market.

In a statement to The DAILY WORKER the headquarters of the Chicago Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union which is conducting the strike, declared that plans are now perfected and that leaflets will be distributed directing the strikers what halls to go to for instructions.

The manufacturers of ladies' garments in this city have declared their determination to resist the efforts of the union members to secure their demands. The various boss associations are joining together in order to more effectively resist the workers.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—President Coolidge today nominated Charles B. Warren, Detroit, Mich., to be ambassador to Mexico.

COX ASKS JOB AS JACKASS JOCKEY; NO PLATFORM YET

1920 Candidate Chief Rival to McAdoo

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 21.—Ohio today became a political battleground following announcement last night that James M. Cox, former Ohio governor and defeated candidate in the 1920 election, definitely had entered the lists as a candidate for the democratic nomination for president.

The battle is between Cox supporters and backers of Wm. G. McAdoo, California democratic presidential aspirant, who is admittedly popular in the state.

What the former Ohio governor does in the April primaries will have much weight with national bourbon leaders, local democrats believe.

McAdoo Headquarters, in charge of former Judge David L. Rockwell, here, was silent today as to what course will be followed.

Supporters of Cox believe that McAdoo adherents will not come out in the open in a primary fight but will name Cox in their delegate petitions.

This was seen in the filing yesterday at Columbus of declaration of candidacy as delegate of Harry H. Weiss, Canton. Weiss named Cox as first choice and James E. Campbell, former Ohio governor, as second choice. Cox's friends believe that Weiss is a McAdoo supporter in disguise.

Cox is in Miami, Fla.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 21.—Former governor James M. Cox of Ohio, democratic standard bearer in 1920, is again a candidate for the presidency, but how far he will press his fight and what will be his major issues, he is not ready to say.

In his 1920 campaign Cox was a strong apostle of the league of nations and in his speeches during the last two years he has consistently held failure of the United States to enter the league as responsible for many of the current ills, both domestic and international.

The Industries for the workers!

GOVERNMENT IS CORRUPT, VANDERLIP

Banker, Sued For Libel, Hits "Wholesale Dishonesty"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—"Corruption has attacked the government at its heart," charges Frank L. Vanderlip in a statement following the $600,000 libel action brought against him by Louis H. Brush and Roy D. Moore, purchasers of the late President Harding's Marion Star.

The former head of the National City Bank called for a thoro house cleaning of the Washington government. He pointed his finger at the fact that there had been no court proceedings against the management of the Alien Property Administration and he denounced the failure to prosecute the "wholesale dishonesty" of the veterans' bureau.

Welcomes Court Proceedings.

"The courts are an effective means to bring out facts. I therefore welcome this court proceeding," Vanderlip's statement begins. "I hope that it is the forerunner of other court proceedings. There is nothing this country needs so much at the moment as some court proceedings initiated by grand juries and pressed by incorruptible prosecuting attorneys.

"Twenty-two months ago, in April, 1922, the senate by unanimous resolution, called for the facts in the Teapot Dome leases. That resolution was so framed that the red flag of suspicion was run up. For weeks no answer at all was received and none was urgently pressed for, and thereafter, until quite recently, the search for the facts was made without vigor. What were the newspapers doing for 22 months? What was Senator Walsh doing? It looks as if somebody had been asleep at the switch, or perhaps asphyxiated at the switch. At least no court proceedings have yet resulted from the Teapot Dome situation.

"Wholesale Dishonesty."

"Nor have there been, so far as I am aware, any court proceedings initiated as a result of the criminal mismanagement of the veterans' bureau. The wholesale dishonesty there is not a matter of rumor, it is a matter of official record in the committee proceedings and the proceedings of congress and Mr. Forbes and his friends have as yet encountered no court proceedings.

"There have been no court proceedings nor even a thoro investigation of the alien property administration. There are other directions in which court proceedings would be admirable.

"Congress today is spending its time solemnly and partisanly debating an income tax measure. It is like discussing the size of a faucet you would put in a barrel leaking between half the staves. If we can have honest administration of the taxes that are collected, the rate of income tax will take care of itself.

Worse Than Foreign Foe.

"If this country were invaded by an alien foe and I were a young man I believe I would offer myself for its defense. It has been attacked by something more dangerous than a military invasion by a foreign foe.

"Corruption has attacked the government at its heart.

"I believe that the facts are not fully presented to the country and even when presented are not being acted upon."

Vanderlip Sued for $600,000.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—Louis H. Brush and Roy D. Moore, owners of the Marion, Ohio, Star, have brought suit for $600,000 against Frank A. Vanderlip, New York financier and former president of the National City Bank, charging his speech of February 11, in which he declared the Marion Star was purchased from President Harding at a figure twice its value, impugned not only their own character, but the character of the late president.

Hit as Gambler in Oil Stocks Calls in Aid of U. S. Sleuths

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Attorney-General Daugherty today called in William J. Burns, head of the Department of Justice Secret Service, to help him prepare a counter-attack on his critics.

Burns and Rush Holland, assistant to Daugherty, who recently has been "sitting in" at hearings of the Senate Teapot Dome Committee, spent several hours in Daugherty's apartment.

It was intimated there might be a statement later replying to the attack on Daugherty by Senator Wheeler, Montana, author of a resolution for investigation of Daugherty's administration.

Show Daugherty Oil Speculator

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Senator Burton K. Wheeler declared today that he had received a written report from a special investigator "indicating Attorney-General Daugherty had speculated in oil stocks." The evidence relates to the Sinclair company.

Wheeler's resolution will be taken up in the senate, White House officials said.

Wheeler obtained the report of the investigator last week. He was to have gone to the White House to see President Coolidge last Sunday, but a brother of Senator Walsh, Montana, was struck by an automobile and Wheeler took him to the hospital, making him late for his engagement to see the President.

Other senators who were at the White House are understood to have told Mr. Coolidge of the report. Senator Walsh also has a copy of the report.

The identity of the special investigator is not known. His report involved a cabinet official and a senator. He is considered by Wheeler to be a "responsible authority." The senator Davis Elkins, West Virginia, said yesterday he had speculated in Sinclair oil stock.

Probers Are Mum.

Members of the Teapot Dome committee today refused to affirm or deny reports that Daugherty's name was found on stock brokers books examined in connection with the commitee's inquiry.

The story circulated was that Daugherty had lost $11,000 in oil stock, not, however, stock connected in any way with the oil scandal.

Daugherty could not be reached for a statement on these reports. Chairman Lenroot of the committee, would give no information regarding them.

Coolidge Sticks by Daugherty.

Senators were slowly piecing together from fragments of information given them by Senators Lodge and Pepper, the story of what happened at the White House yesterday when Lodge and Pepper urged President Coolidge to dismiss Daugherty.

The President, it was said, indicated by questions he was reluctant to ask Daugherty's resignation, because there was no direct evidence connecting him with the oil scandal.

The senators told Mr. Coolidge it was not a time for sympathy, in the opinion of most republican senators.

McAdoo Enters Illinois Primary for Presidency

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 21.—William G. McAdoo today formally entered the Illinois presidential preferential primary as a Democratic candidate for president

The petition of the former secretary of the treasury was filed by W. J. Murphy and William Coleman of Chicago. The petition contained 4,971 signatures.

Petitions of Hiram Johnson and Calvin Coolidge as Republican candidate for president already are on file. McAdoo is the first Democratic candidate to enter the Illinois primary.

Plan Water Gas Plant.

Officers of the Illinois Power and Light Corporation today were considering plans for the construction of a $50,000 water gas plant at La Salle, Ill. The plant officials said, will be in operation by July 1. High pressure mains, costing $30,000, will be laid.

N. Y. Skates to Work.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21—New York skated to work on icy sidewalks today after the most disagreeable storm of the season, but brilliant sunshine and a favorable weather forecast cheered the commuters.

DAUGHERTY MUST QUIT TO SAVE G. O. P.

Solons Fear His Oil Spots Will Show Under Probe

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Attorney-General Daugherty today was faced with the alternative of resigning from the cabinet "to relieve President Coolidge from an embarrassing position" or undergoing senate condemnation in a resolution similar to that adopted in the case of Secretary of the Navy Denby.

Daugherty has taken the attitude that his record is clean; that he doesn't care what the senate or, in fact, anyone else, thinks; that he knows what he's about; that he's ready to fight it out with his accusers, and that he won't resign unless the President asks him to.

Tell Cal to Can Him.

But Republican Senators are exerting pressure both on President Coolidge and Daugherty himself to create a vacancy in the attorney-generalship without further furore. Late yesterday Senators Lodge and Pepper called on Mr. Coolidge to this end and today other republican senators are getting into the play, mostly with Daugherty.

Since Mr. Coolidge, up to now, has let it be known he could not ask for Daugherty's resignation unless specific evidence finding Daugherty culpable in the oil or other scandals were produced, the line of argument directed at Daugherty is that he should resign to spare the party unnecessary additional trouble.

Wheeler Resolution Will Pass.

Unless the president or attorney-general acts very soon, administration leaders told the president, it will be impossible to delay senate action on the Wheeler resolution condemning Daugherty and providing for an investigation of his aministration. Lodge told the president that the resolution would pass by a large majority. But Lodge and other leaders want to avoid its adoption.

While Mr. Coolidge had refused, in the Denby case, to recognize the senate's right to dictate to him regarding cabinet officers, it was pointed out to him that the administration's standing with the country would be hurt by adoption of another resolution condemning a second cabinet member.

What Do You Think of "A Week"--Turn To Page Fou

STOCK DEALS WILL DAMN DAUGHERTY

Wheeler's Evidence Has Cal's Pals in a Panic

By LAURENCE TODD
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Wheeler has the Coolidge crowd and their oil-smeared allies frightened. They are ready now to throw Harry Daugherty overboard at the Montanan's demand, and they will yield others to public inquiry and exposure if he continues to gather the information that the government should have gathered six months ago.

Stock Gambling Leaks Out.

After Denby's resignation was made public Feb. 18, it was revealed that no less a personage than Senator Borah had learned of the case against Daugherty in connection with stock market deals and had gone to the White House and demanded that Coolidge compel Daugherty to get out of the cabinet.

He told the president bluntly that the country had no confidence in Daugherty, that such a man at the head of the department of justice would make victory in the coming election impossible, and that the hour for his going had arrived.

Coolidge presently called Daugherty into the room, confronted him with Borah, and asked the Idaho senator to repeat what he had said. Borah repeated. Daugherty became angry and ugly, defying the senate or any senator to tell him whether he should remain in the administration. Borah walked out.

Coolidge then talked with Old Guard chiefs, and a group of them went to see Daugherty at his home, and tried to persuade him to quit. He refused. They warned him that the party was in danger. He stood pat. They knew that he would be more dangerous, if he decided to fight them openly. So they went back to the capitol and kept their mouths shut.

Brokers Ready to Testify.

But Wheeler was prepared for this. He had himself "invited" into the first long secret session yet held by the probe committee, when the evidence he had secured with reference to stock deals handled by the Benkard firm in New York was laid before them.

Members of the Bonkard firm were kept waiting two hours in an anteroom while the committee debated the next moves with Wheeler, and while Pomerene and Roberts, the president's special counsel, were brought from a White House conference to advise the committee.

Harrison of Mississippi, in a bellowing indictment of the republican oil politicians, coupled with a whitewash of democratic oil servants, declared that Theodore Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, was "just as guilty as Denby" and insisted that "every official implicated in this damnable incident" be removed Lenroot made no reply, and Smoot, who formerly thundered and browbeat the senate, sat limp and silent in his chair.

A cabinet meeting had taken place during the morning, and Daugherty had emerged in his ugliest and most defiant mood, showing signs of having been under high nervous strain.

Australian Farm Workers' Union Asks Higher Wage

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Feb. 21.—The Australian Workers union has lodged claims with the arbitration court, demanding decent wages and working conditions for workers engaged in the cotton growing and harvesting industry. To this, the corporation controlling the industry, has protested, indicating that it desires to run the industry on a low-wage basis.

The claims lodged by the union covering wages and accommodation for all workers engaged in clearing and preparing land for cotton cultivation or harvesting of cotton runs from $17.50 a week of 44 hours for youths under 18 years of age to $27.50 for adults, including keep, with preference to unionists.

Probers Will Ask Sinclair Monday to Tell Whose Palms He Greased

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The Senate Teapot Dome Committee today was preparing for two lines of inquiry when public hearings are resumed Monday. These are:

1.—Questioning of Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, concerning the making of that lease with Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, and financial transactions with Fall and others growing out of the leasing.

2.—Investigation to disclose stock deals by other government officials besides Davis Elkins, senator from West Virginia, who admitted market operations in Sinclair oil, but said he had no tip and made no profit.

Seek Fraud In Lease.

Sinclair is now regarded by the committee as its star witness. Upon his testimony also the President's special counsel, Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts, are depending, it is said, for the clinching of their case showing fraud and corruption in connection with leasing of at least one of the oil reserves.

Whether Sinclair's testimony also will provide necessary evidence for criminal prosecutions.

Recent testimony before the committee has tended to show that Fall and Sinclair were negotiating for Teapot Dome even before the reserves had been transferred from the navy to the interior department and that to prevent the negotiations from being upset, Sinclair paid or agreed to pay more than $2,000,000 in all to other claimants.

Senator Lenroot, chairman of the committee, said Sinclair, who landed in New York yesterday from Europe, will be here Monday.

On Daugherty's Trail.

The inquiry into stock transactions is expected to disclose, thru the testimony of expert accountants who have examined brokers records, whether reports that attorney general Daugherty and other officials dealt in Sinclair oil are true.

The committee wants to know whether these dealings, if conducted, were based on advance tips regarding the Teapot Dome lease and if so, where those tips came from.

KLANSMEN MAY MARCH; MUST DROP NIGHT CAPS

Oklahoma Passes Law to Unmask Klan

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Feb. 21—Ku Klux Klansmen parading here Friday night will be unmasked, following widespread protests against the paraders appearing in full regalia, according to reports today.

After a conference between high Klan officials, Governor Trapp and members of the Legislature, a resolution now pending before the Senate demanding the Governor halt the proposed masked parade, was withdrawn. It was understood an agreement had been reached for the unmasking, altho no official anouncement was made.

An anti-mask law passed by the Legislature does not become effective until next June

Galligan to Quit?

MARION, Ill., Feb. 21.—An agreement to end the war between friends and foes of the Ku Klux Klan over booze law enforcement in Williamson County was reported to have been decided upon today.

One known feature of the pact, arrived at thru the conferences of about 30 leading bankers and miners, is that Sheriff George Galligan, leader of the anti-Klan elements, will take a "long vacation" from office. Galligan is reported to have agreed to this.

Glenn Young, leader of the Klan raids, is said to have been requested to leave the county, but the details of the concessions of the Klan were not made known.

All of Galligan's deputies except one desk man are to be discharged and a new set agreed upon by the citizens committee, will take over the duties of enforcing the law in the county.

These steps, the citizens committee hopes, will relieve it of the presence of five companies of the National Guard, quartered here and at Herrin since several gun battles, February 8 and 9, in which Constable Caesar Cagle was killed and Deputy Sheriff Layman was wounded.

Emperor's Troubles Multiply.

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 21.—The troubles of William J. Simmons, founder of the Ku Klux Klan, were increased today as a result of his "peace" agreement with Dr. H. W. Evans, Imperial Wizard of the hooded order.

The Kamelia, the women's organisation founded by Simmons, which recently announced he would be "banished as a traitor," because of the peace pact, filed suit in superior court today for $25,000 damages from Simmons.

The suit saying that Simmons was to have been paid $500, for six months for writing rituals and making other preparations for the secret society, charges the founder failed to carry out his part of the contract. In addition an injunction to prevent Simmons seeking members of the Kamelia for his newly formed secret order was asked in the suit.

Yard foremen are increased from $6.32 a day to $6.64, yard helpers from $5.84 to $6.16, and switch tenders from $4.40 to $4.72.

STATE FEARS TO USE SCAB LAWYER IN BOYCOTT TRIAL

Taylor Not Called in Upholsterers' Case

Fire which the DAILY WORKER and the Chicago labor movement has directed against Dudley Taylor, attorney for the Illinois Employers' Association, caused the state to drop him as a witness in the trial for conspiracy to boycott, which Taylor initiated in Criminal Court before Judge Wells againt the Upholsterers' Union.

The prosecution closed its case against the five union men, held for their part in the upholsterer's strike, without calling the man who framed the case, altho Assistant States Attorney Romano had promised the jury that Taylor would be called.

Taylor Leader In Plot.

All the evidence which the state had against the four union upholsterers and Fred Jurish, the union painter who wouldn't work with scab upholsterers during the strike, had been procured by Taylor in cross examination of the unionists in the states attorney's office, that had been conveniently loaned him for his strikebreaking purposes. Therefore he was the most important witness in the case.

Robert Bronson, secretary of the Carpet, Upholstery and Drapers association, took Taylor's place and testified concerning the questioning of some of the defendants in the presence of assistant states' attorneys and Dudley Taylor and himself.

Bronson testified that he and Taylor had gone to the state's attorneys office and that Thomas O'Shea and Michael McKenna, business agents of the upholsterers' union, were brought in by police officers of the state's attorney's office. He testified that both Taylor and himself asked the defendants questions.

Bronson "Didn't Know."

Bronson said that he did not know if Taylor had asked the first Assistant States Attorney Jonas to send for the men. He denied that Taylor ordered the men to come to the office of the assistant states' attorney with the books of the union.

He said they were "asked" to return to the office of the states attorney the next day and bring the books of the union.

Worried by Sticker.

Bronson said, when questioned on direct examination by Assistant States Attorney Romano that he had called McKenna and O'Shea to his office and there warned them that their campaign of placing stickers on buildings in the course of construction, telling building trades workers to ask upholsterers, working on the same jobs with them for their union cards, was illegal. He said, however, that he had not given them his opinion that placing such stickers might leave them open to criminal prosecution. About a month after he had the conversation with O'Shea and McKenna, he said, he and Taylor went to the office of the states attorney to enlist his aid to stop the sticker campaign.

The state's attorneys, who questioned the members of the Upholsterers' union at their office later, sent Dudley Taylor a transcript of the questions and answers they, Taylor and Bronson asked, he said.

Bronson admitted that he had gone to a certain job on Mayfield avenue, Chicago, where Fred Jurish, one of the men on trial was working, to question him about his efforts to get non-union upholsterers to stop work. He said that he had been told that Jurish had stopped the non-union men from working by saying that he would either quit or the non-union men would have to quit.

Bronson said that he flashed the badge of a special deputy sheriff on Jurish before he questioned him. He had been sworn as a special deputy sheriff last December he said. He did not say what duties he has as a deputy sheriff aside from attempting to intimidate union men who objected to working with scabs.

Get unity thru the Labor Party!

William Hale Thompson, former mayor of Chicago, will leave here July 4 to photograph the singing, tree-climbing fish of the Malay archipelago. Thompson has indisputable evidence of the gifted fish's existence and he wants the picture.

HIRAM OFFERS SELF AS PILL TO HEAL FARMERS

Broke Dakotans Hear Campaign Talk

By ALFRED KNUTSON
(Special to The Daily Worker)

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Feb. 21.—Hiram Johnson, the chewing gum candidate for the republican nomination for president of the United States, spoke here to a crowded house.

Most of those who heard him were disappointed. It was expected that he would go somewhat into detail in discussing the agricultural situation, and at least make a little effort at offering a solution for the terrible distress the farmers of the Northwest are now in.

Instead he made long-winded, tiresome arguments about the apportionment of delegates to the national republican convention, the Mellon tax plan, the League of Nations and the World Court.

Just Tea Talk.

The Teapot Dome scandal, Hiram said, showed plainly that an "invisible" government was at work, but he failed to tell us how we were to rid ourselves of this menace, other than suggesting that the whole oily mess could be remedied by having the people select him to sit in the presidential chair.

His solution for the bankrupt condition of the farmers was the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, a measure that even many conservative members of congress do not take seriously, and Hiram himself did not profess much faith in it because he told his audience that "it was at least worthy trying out."

Banker-Lawyer Audience.

The whole question of agriculture was passed over with but a very few remarks. It is a cinch that this much heralded "progressive" will not get much support from the farmers in the Northwest on the strength of the speeches he is now making. Very few farmers heard him here, his audience being made up almost entirely of bankers, business men, lawyers, store clerks, etc.

Tut's Bones Safe from Carter; His License Cancelled

LUXOR, Feb. 21.—The Egyptian director general of antiquities took steps today preliminary to reopening the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen and safeguarding the contents thereof.

Following cancellation of the license under which Howard Carter had been excavating, Egyptian authorities moved immediately to deal themselves with the tomb and mummy of their former ruler.

The license which was cancelled was granted to Lord Carnarvon when he took up the excavating in the Valley of Kings for his health. Came the discovery of the burial place of Tut-Ankh-Amen, unearthed in 1922, followed by the death of the earl in 1923. The license was transferred to Lord Carnarvon's widow, who since married a British officer, Colonel Dennistoun.

Carter had been carrying on, amid frequent altercations with the Egyptian government, principally over the matter of press reports of progress, which the explorer wished to reserve to a syndicate with which he has a contract. The government insisted upon equal rights for all press associations and when Carter proved adamant upon this point and on the matter of visitors to the tomb, which he came to treat as his private property, the ministry of public works took away his license.

The chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation said as much in a speech during a reception at the foreign office, one of many accorded him since his arrival here Tuesday.

"If Peru contains iron, I want the opportunity to investigate," Gary said.

Judge Gary was accorded an official reception aboard ship before he landed, at the American embassy afterwards he was received by the Peruvian president and heads of other departments.

Gary left Lima last night for Santiago, Chile, where he will remain from Feb. 28 to March 4. He will be at Valparaiso from the sixth to the twelfth and at Montevideo March 13-14. He will spend 12 days in Brazil, during which time he will visit the United States Steel Corporation's big manganese mines in the famous iron mountains of Minas Geraes.

Jazzers Organize to Demand More Money and Dignity

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The writers of popular songs are meeting at a series of get-togethers under the auspices of the Society of American Composers, Authors and Publishers. There are no less than 500 song writers in New York's "Tin Pan Alley" engaged in the manufacture of jazz songs and ballad. ((They are not all rich, either).

What do they want? More wages (that is to say, more royalties), and they don't want to be known as workers in "Tin Pan Alley." They say the name is undignified. "We are writing music for the world. We are writing the universal music of the twentieth century," they say with heat and no little truth, "and 'Tin Pan Alley' fits no longer."

$55 Minimum Now for New York Cloak and Dress Cutters

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—At the demand of Local No. 10 of the cloak and dress cutters in practically all New York shops have jumped the minimum up to $55 a week. The current issue of Justice says: "The movement was carried out in the course of a few weeks with astounding success, with the result that today there is hardly a shop in the industry where the cutters are working for less than $55 a week, while many others, of course, receive an even higher scale. Suffice it to say that in every one of its features this sporadic wage increase move bore the evidence of the excellent fighting spirit of the men of Local No. 10."

No 48-Hour Week for South Carolina Textile Workers

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 21.—The 48-hour bill introduced in the South Carolina legislature by Senator R. Fant, Jr., went by the board after an unfavorable report by the committee on commerce and manufacturers. No fight was made. The unfavorable report was adopted and the bill was killed.

The bill would have affected the cotton mill workers the most. In its statement the committee claimed that the warehouses were full of cotton goods and that mills would have to shut down this summer for the lack of raw cotton. With the mills running only part time, no better time could have been picked for the passing of the bill.

The Situation in Azerbaijan.

BAKU, Feb. 21.—The economic situation of the city, which had been ruined during the war and revolution, is on the way to recovery. According to the census of 1920 the population of Baku was 255,000. The census of 1923 shows a population of 337,000, an increase of 82,000. New buildings are needed, but there are not enough funds in the local treasury; the government will have to help. Electric lights have been installed all over the city. The streets and sidewalks have been repaired. A few new parks have been built. An electric street car system has been built.

Amnesty for Socialist-Revolutionists.

MOSCOW, Feb. 21.—Amnesty for the convicted Socialist-Revolutionists was proclaimed by the Soviet government on January 14th. Those who originally were given a death sentence for participating in terrorist acts against the government, were commuted to five years imprisonment, the sentence of the others have been cut in half and more. A long explanation of the reason why they have been sentenced and why the government finds it now possible to grant amnesty to them, has been issued.

Don Coal Basin Runs 7 Per Cent Ahead of Production Program

BACHMUT, Feb. 21.—The Don Coal Basin during December exceeded its production program by 7 per cent, 44,500,000 poods of coal has been mined, including 20,000,000 poods of anthracite. For local needs 8,000,000 poods has been used, which is less than last month; 25,000,000 poods have been shipped. To Jan. 1 there were 102,000,000 poods in store.

SLAVES GLUTTED LABOR MARKET AT END OF 1923

Every State Showed Shortage of Jobs

The turn for the worse in the labor market during the last half of 1923 was more serious than can be accounted for in terms of the usual winter layoffs, according to the carefully prepared labor market index of the federal reserve board. After making every possible allowance for normal seasonal charges the board's statistician finds that jobs were much scarcer in December, 1923, than in any month since April, 1922.

The report is based upon records kept by free employment offices in New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin. These records show the proportion of of jobs to applicants, that is, the number of positions offered per 100 applicants for positions. When carefully weighed in terms of the relative importance of each state in the industrial life of the country an index number based on these records shows the changes in the labor market, in other words how the law of supply and demand is hitting the man looking for a job.

In December every state showed a shortage of jobs and a surplus of idle labor. When the index number was computed by federal reserve statisticians it showed the condition of the labor market was far worse than the average for the years 1919 to 1922. In fact from the favorable situation which made possible several thousand wage increases during the first half of 1923 the number of jobs available for each 100 applicants has fallen nearly three-fifths of the way back to the lowest point of the depression of 1921.

The South Slavic Branches in Lead on Appeal Coupons

The South Slavic branches of the Workers Party are far in the lead of other sections in the sale of the Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons. These branches are sending in funds in greater amounts and larger numbers than any other language section. The Marianna, Pa., South Slavic branch writes as follows:

"Our branch (No. 80) has sold $60.00 worth of the Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons. Altho Marianna is not a big place, we managed to sell $60. GLENN YOUNG GOT $5,000 TO START WAR IN HERRIN

Rape and Robbery High Spots in Klan Activity

HERRIN, Ill., Feb. 21.—S. Glenn Young recently announced that he had severed his relations with Federal Prohibition forces when he came to Herrin and was given $5,000 by the Ku Klux Klan to clean up Williamson County. The boodle was raised by the wealthy business men and open shop elements of Herrin who could not smash the unions in any other way except thru a flank attack on the foreign-born workers under the white flag of prohibition.

It is now known that the Ku Klux Klan was secretly glad over the coming of the militia to Herrin to save them from the position into which it was forced by the lawless raids on the homes of foreign-born workers, their insults to the Catholic Italians and the rape of women into whose homes the hooded morons broke.

This gang appears to be possessed of the mentality of Cromwell's Covenanteers. Headed by clergymen they chant scriptures and then revel in debauchery that would shame the hardened habitues of the Chicago underworld in the days when vice flourished open and unabashed.

Caesar Cagle, the policeman who was killed as he drew his gun ready to shoot, is now the Klan martyr but Cagle was not distinguished for moral behavior and it is worthy of note that a sister of this shining light of Klandom was mixed up in a roadhouse affair which got her into Joliet penitentiary and while there received attentions from a deputy that resulted in his occupying a prison cell for several years.

The only armed opposition to the Klan here is an organization called by the name of the Knights of the Flaming Circle. It is pro-union and in direct opposition to the Klan on most everything. The first paragraph in its declaration of principles runs as follows: "The Knights of the Flaming Circle believes absolutely in organized labor and will aid and assist organized labor at any time in all worthy causes." The Klan on the contrary is an open shop organization.

The Knights of the Flaming Circle is not a class organization. It seeks to unite "the labor, business and professional elements" in the community. It however, prohibits membership to anybody who is opposed to organized labor. Membership is open to Christians only but differences of opinion as to the denomination is allowed provided the person "is a worshipper of the true God." There is the rub.

Unlike the Klan the Knights of the Flaming Circle is a democratic organization and holds elections every six months. Its head is Ora Thomas, who had a tussle with the Klan chief of police a few days ago. Both reached for their hips on sight and but for the presence of guardsmen it is probable that another Klan martyr might be by now a guest in the celestial kingdom.

At the moment Herrin is tranquil on the surface but two sets of hostile guns are itching to get into action and they may may begin to bark on the slightest provocation.

Even White House Janitor May Be Searched for Oil

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Senator Frazier of North Dakota and Congressman Wefald of Minnesota, have introduced a joint resolution directing every member of the senate and house, and every federal employe receiving a salary of over $3,000, to file with the federal trade commission a sworn statement stating the amount of stocks or bonds held by him or his immediate family. Investments within ten years, in any banking, industrial, mining, railroad or other corporations or firms or partnerships must be declared. The same information with reference to any corporation, firm or partnership with which such member or employe has been connected as counsel or has served in any capacity during the past ten years is required.

The preamble states that members of congress and federal employes should be protected from the suspicion that they are influenced or swayed in their attitude on any pending legislation by their own financial interests.

KLAN CYCLOPS SEEKS JOB OF HERRIN SHERIFF

Aims to Oust Galligan, Anti-Klan Chief

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MARION, Ill., Feb. 21.—Sam Sterns, exalted cyclops of the Ku Klux Klan and prominent business man, is seeking the position now filled by George Galligan, sheriff of Marion County. That his ambition has the approval of the Citizen's Committee, organized by General Milton Foreman is the general opinion around here.

Sheriff Galligan is lined up with the pro-union faction in the Williamson county fight. Sterns and the Klan are frankly lined up against the union.

Put On Clean Shirts.

The committee of "neutral citizens" is simply the Klan in a new disguise. The deeds of the Kluxers got them into disrepute so they must be fumigated and put in new uniforms. Their night shirts need a visit to the laundry. They may have to wear civilian clothes for a little while.

The official organ of the Klan of Illinois gives a list of the prominent citizens who favor the Klan and the formation of a Citizen's Committee. There is not a worker on the list. The same paper also published the names of the "criminals" allegedly responsible for the disorders. They are all workers and mostly union men.

The prohibition crusade was only an excuse to punish the miners for being members of the union. The repudiation of the Ku Klux at the Indianapolis convention of the U. M. W. of A. also rankled in the breasts of the bigots and they took it out on the members of the union in Herrin.

The anti-labor character of the Ku Klux Klan dry raids and reign of terror in Williamson county is attested by an official report of the Martin Leonard case prepared for The Daily Worker by local 3192, United Mine Workers of America. After describing Leonard as a miner, and a self-sacrificing parent of ten orphaned children, the local union describes the unwarranted raid and S. Glen Young. The report states:

Knocked Patriot Cold.

"While cooking breakfast for his family and preparing buckets for his two sons and himself to go to work at the mines (Feb. 2) Leonard answered the door and one of four men gave him a warrant demanding the right to search the house for intoxicating liquor. There were several men standing in the yard. Three of the men searched the barn and outbuildings. One man stayed in the house and talked with Leonard. Leonard was saying: 'Yes, I had two sons volunteer in the world war, and I have three more when Uncle Sam needs them,' when the three returned and one of them knocked him thru a window. Leonard's son, John, went to his father's rescue, but was clubbed on the head with the butt of a revolver by another raider.

"James, another son, and John took their buckets and went to work. Leonard was pretty badly cut across his nose and around his eyes. He intended to go to the doctor.

Young Curses in Court.

"Young and the raiders returned with warrants for Leonard and his sons, John, James and Joe, charging them with disturbing the peace, assault and resisting an officer. John and James were refused permission to change their pit clothes and wash at the mine and were paraded up and down Broadway so garbed. With their father they were landed in jail and held until $1,800 bail was arranged by the mine superintendent.

"In the courtroom S. Glenn Young cursed Leonard and told him, 'When I come back there will be less skin on your face then there is now, and I'm coming back. I'll teach you to be a Christian.'

"The next week when no witnesses appeared against Leonard on the first or second date set for the trial, the prosecuting attorney threw the case out of court.

Kluxers Rob Cripple.

"Another deplorable case here was that of Mrs. Morez, a French woman," the union's report continues. "Her husband is a cripple unable to work and she had saved up $125 to pay her taxes. The raiders looted her house and took the money. There was no liquor in the house and they were people never known to bootleg. Mrs. Morez has gone insane and is under the care of two physicians.

"There have been several other cases of unwarranted raiding and looting in this town by the Ku Klux Klan and their leader, S. Glenn Young," the report concludes.

Cops and Firemen Got Jewelry, Says Chicago Burglar

Two policemen and one fireman are under investigation today following a confession from Harry C. Thomas, burglar, involving them. Thomas, whose amazing career of crime covers everything from larceny to murder, said he gave Sergeant George Garry some jewelry and money to return to victims. Garry kept the articles, he charged.

Thomas related a similar story about another policeman. A fireman was named as receiver of the stolen property. Since 1914 when he finished a jail sentence in a North Dakota penitentiary, Thomas is accused of having committed more than 300 robberies in and around Chicago.

NEW HAMPSHIRE TEXTILE WORKERS STRIKING BRAVELY

Pacific Mills Meeting Real Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DOVER, N. H., Feb. 21.—Eighteen hundred textile workers are heroically continuing the strike they began last November, when the Pacific Mills attempted to speed them up by adding more looms and spindles to their tasks. Vainly is the superintendent attempting to drive them back to their jobs.

The strike was the workers' answer to the arrogant demand the company posted up in November that weavers were from then on to handle 40 cotton looms, instead of 20; spinners already handling 12 to 14 frames were to take two or more sides; carders were to add another frame to the two already handled.

Efficient Exploitation.

Greater efficiency, you say. And so said the efficienty expert, who had been holding a time clock as he watched like a hawk every movement of the mill workers. A worker in a single day walked to and from machines many miles, which would be raised additional miles by the extra frames. One handling 40 looms could not see from one end of the room to the other.

The effect of the contemplated change would be an early breakdown of the workers, to be replaced by a new batch of slaves, imported in mass at the demand of the mill sharks. The older workers would be banished from the factory, to die in their homes, or rather on the streets, for one must abandon one's home, if the owner is the mill company. They are skilled, with twenty or thirty years' experience and as one youthful worker would double his work, one of the older folks would be fired. Helping the old and infirm, sympathy for old age, reward for long years of service, which are extolled in textbooks as capitalist virtues, are revealed as hollow frauds.

Super From Dixie.

The workers are up against the Pacific Mills, a powerful company, with a large mill in Lawrence. They hoped to crush Dover, and then ride over to Lawrence, and repeat the business there. Unfortunately for the Pacific, the challenge was met by a strike by men and women who have shown themselves to be real fighters. To the Superintendent, a southerner who married his job, and knows nothing about the industry, they said, "You boast that you handled negroes in the South, whom you call niggers, and you hope to make us crawl before you. Before this fight is thru, you'll be back in the sunny south." The superintendent is a glowing tribute to the wonderful "managers" of present day industry.

Funds Are Needed.

The president of Local 27, William E. Hayward, now in Boston with a committee of strikers, collecting funds, calls it fortunate that when the men go on the picket line, the Mayor will be with them. It is to be hoped that the strikers do not get the same dose as the Brockton shoe workers, who took pride in their former fellow shoe worker, who allowed them to picket for the first eight weeks. But at the critical moment, when the manufacturers felt the pinch, the Mayor backed up the City Solicitor, outlawed the strike and arrested the pickets.

Funds for the relief of the scrappy Dover strikers are to be sent to the Financial Secretary of Local 27, of the United Textile Workers of America, Joseph St. Cyr, 36 Hanson St., Dover, New Hampshire.

CHICAGO, Feb. 21.—The Tragedy of the Railroad Workers is the title of a pamphlet issued by the American Federation of Railroad Workers. It opposes craft unionism and advocates independent industrial organization.

SMITH SEES "RED MENACE" AS HIS LADDER TO FAME

Exploiting Prosecution of Foster-Ruthenberg

By CYRIL LAMBKIN.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 21.—O. L. Smith, assistant attorney general of the state of Michigan, is a dapper young man of great ambition. He reached his present high office within ten years of his graduation from the law school of the University of Michigan. But the office of assistant attorney general of the state is after all a comparatively minor one, incapable of satisfying a great ambition. How is one to advance to a higher office? except when the name of a public official appears in a favorable light in connection with some public sensation.

Bridgman Raid His Chance.

When the raid was made on the Communist Party convention in Bridgman in August, 1922, hope sprang in the breast of probably more than one state official. Did not Coolidge achieve supreme political rank as a result of his fight against a strike? Were not the Communists the most militant section of the working class? So, altho, generally, alleged violations of state laws are taken care of by the officers of the county in which the alleged violations have taken place, in this instance, it was decided that the office of the attorney general of the state was to take over the case and that assistant attorney general Smith was to be in charge.

Mr. Smith unquestionably expected to secure a conviction against Foster. But fickle fortune withdrew her smile on that occasion, compelling Smith to woo her again in the Ruthenberg case. His victory in this case, however, was no longer a sensational one. It then became necessary for him to carry on a campaign to exploit the incident. And so Mr. Smith, who is quite a good conventional speaker has utilized gatherings of politicians to talk of the menace of Communism, incidentally leaving an impression of the importance of the St. Joseph prosecutions, in which he had the leading part.

Calls G. O. P. Rival a Bolshevik.

The latest occasion employed by Mr. Smith to further his ambition was the recent convention of the State Supervisors Association held in Lansing. At this convention he attacked Herbert Baker, a leader in the Farmer Movement of the state, who is seeking the gubernatorial nomination on the Republican ticket. Herbert Baker at the time of the Bridgman raid wrote a letter, which was read at a mass meeting in Grand Rapids, condemning the raid as well as the Criminal Syndicalism law. According to the report of the Detroit Free Press correspondent Smith's version of the incident of that letter was as follows: "Baker wrote a letter of indorsement (of the C. P. movement) which was intercepted by the department of justice officials. Either Baker did not know what he was indorsing or else he was in sympathy with the movement."

Mr. Smith also informed the State Supervisors that Borah and LaFollette have the indorsement of the Communist and Magnus Johnson is also acceptable to them. Ex-Governor Allen, of Kansas, and Ole Hanson, of Seattle, take the witness chair!

Sacco-Vanzetti Committee Calls Conference in N. Y.

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—A conference of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense committee is to be held in Boston Saturday, February 23. It promises to be a most interesting meeting.

The two Italian radicals were convicted of the murder of a paymaster in Braintree, it will be remembered, and convicted on the assumption that Sacco's automatic pistol fired the fatal shoots . . . . But frame-ups, like murders, will out.

About two months ago defense attorney Fred H. Moore submitted five motions for a new trial, all five related to the fact that the bullets could not have come from Sacco's gun.

Now the District Attorney, Harold P. Williams, feels impelled to announce that at some time or other the barrel of Sacco's gun was removed and another substituted. Judge Webster Thayer has ordered an investigation.

To a great degree the case pivots upon this matter of the gun. Harold P. Williams, gun expert for the defense, and William H. Van Amburgh, a government expert are assisting in the investigation.

It is hoped that this startling revelation that the main defense "exhibit" has been tampered with will expedite the granting of a new trial to the accused men.

Several hundred invitations to the defense committee conference Saturday have been sent out to contributors, and prominent liberal and radical leaders. The purpose of the conference is to discuss policy and ways and means. The sudden discovery of the new evidence is likely to provide material for much of the discussion.

Moscow "Picks Up" New York.

The Moscow Izvestia of January 19 reports that the new Luberezk Radio Station of Moscow picked up New York, Bordeaux, Lyon, Saint Acisa (France), Kopvika, (Holland), Nauen, (Germany), and others.

With the new automatic typewriter attachment the Luberezk station is now able to pick up 250 characters per minute, instead of the usual 120 per minute.

Missouri Coal Men on Fraud Charge Plead Innocence

(By The Federated Press.)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 21.—A general plea of not guilty is the only reply of the Missouri State Retail Coal Dealers' Assn., which has been charged with unfair trade practices by the federal trade commission. The organization comprises retail coal dealers in Missouri, Illinois and Arkansas.

The federal body charges that the respondents cooperated in preventing distribution of coal except thru "regular" dealers—members of the combine. The commission charges the coal ring with boycotting and intimidating independent dealers.

DAVIS STATUTES ROUSE WORKERS IN MINNEAPOLIS

Flay Plan to Thumbprint Foreign-Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 21.—The workers of Minneapolis will hold a mass meeting in the assembly hall of the court house here Saturday night, February 23rd, to protest against the proposal to register, index and finger-print all foreign-born workers.

The meeting is being called by the Minneapolis Council for the Protection of the Foreign-Born. The Council, which was recently organized, represents many local unions, fraternal organizations and labor political parties.

The Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly recently passed a resolution condemning all attempts to coerce the foreign-born by discriminating laws.

Labor Council's Stand.

The resolution follows:

Whereas, there is now pending in congress, bill No. 691, based upon the recommendations of President Coolidge in his message to congress which provides for the registering, photographing and finger-printing of the foreign-born workers, like criminals, and

Whereas, bill No. 2900 likewise pending before congress provides for the scrutiny by government agents of potential immigrants in their own countries before allowing them to enter this country, and

Whereas, this legislation would violate our American tradition of freedom of asylum to political refugees, and

Whereas, since the foreign-born workers now in this country were invited to come to this land and make their homes here under American conditions of equality and justice, it would be an unpardonable betrayal of trust to new create legislation that would make them a subject class, and

Whereas, this legislation would create a subject class differing but little from chattel slavery, a subjection, which, in the Civil war, thousands of men laid down their lives to abolish once and for all, and

Whereas, by means of this legislation, the employers hope to cow into submission by the threat of deportation and separation from their families, the foreign-born workers who are a majority in such basic industries such as mining, textiles, leather, and meat packing and thus prevent their being organized into unions and going out on strike, and

Laws Would Aid Bosses

Whereas, this legislation would enable the employers to pit the foreign-born workers against the organized native born, and thus lower the standard of living of all workers, therefore be it

Resolved, that the Minneapolis Trades and Labor assembly, do vigorously protest against this proposed un-American infringement upon the rights of millions of our population, who in their daily endeavors have become an inseparable part of our American life, and discrimination against whom will disastrously react upon the economic welfare of the common people as a whole, and be it further

Resolved, that we call upon our governmental representatives and officials to use their influence to defeat this vicious legislation.

Young German Artist Who Caricatured Rich Is Arrested

The authorities in Berlin have brought charges in court against the great artist, George Gross, and against the Malik publishing house for the folio of caricatures drawn by George Gross, entitled "Ecce-Homo," and printed by these publishers. The charges are of spreading printed matter of an immoral character among the public.

The real reason is that the caricatures drawn by George Gross are terrific satires against the crime, the shame, the cruelty of the present ruling class. These caricatures are the most powerful propaganda against the rich, and the books of drawings of George Gross are immensely popular and sell by the hundreds of thousands.

George Gross is considered one of the most eminent of the younger German artists—but that does not deter the authorities from prosecuting him.

COMRADES HOLD FORT IN GERMANY DESPITE REACTION

Bismarck's Persecution Outdone Today

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—In spite of brutal suppression on the part of the police, reichswehr and courts, in spite of the shutting down of the Communist press and the forbidding of meetings, the German Communists are true to the revolutionary cause and are keeping up the fight for the revolution.

That was the outstanding statement of Erich Kirchenknopf, who has just come from Germany, in the course of a speech at the Labor Temple here under the auspices of the German branch of the Workers Party.

Worse Than Bismarck.

"This fight is immeasureably harder than the struggle which the Socialists waged about forty years ago against the exception laws of Bismarck.

"This is explainable, for the political, social and economic conditions have undergone enormous changes since then, and since then the class conscious German workers went thru the world war and the revolution.

"And the Communists have had to contend not only against the capitalist class but also against the Social Democrats. The Social Democratic leaders are saying that the Communists will be forced to silence.

"But the Communists keep up their activity right along. They are holding meetings. January 13 they even held great memorial meetings for the leaders Liebknecht and Luxembourg.

Children Distribute Circulars.

"And the red press and illegal circulars are now as before being distributed secretly, for the most part by children, for the parents have to hide or are in prison."

The speaker went on to tell how the secret meetings are arranged. Then he described the shameful, criminal treatment of comrades. They are dragged out of bed in the middle of the night, and at the police stations they are mistreated and then thrown into prison, without any possibility of instituting any kind of legal proceedings for their freedom. Very often father and mother are arrested and the children are left helpless in the house.

But in spite of all this persecution by the ruling class the Communists are holding out, and are working for their aim, because they realize that if Communism is victorious in Germany the rest of the world will be conquered to Communism.

A very interesting discussion followed, in which it was brought out that the factory nuclei established by the Communist Party all over Germany have taken the place of the former legal party.

Union Labor Will Control College Started in Iowa

DES MOINES, Ia., Feb. 21.—Eight subjects running simultaneously for ten weeks each are the first offerings of the newly organized Des Moines Labor college. The school is controlled by delegates from the labor organizations with farm cooperative bodies, faculty, students and sympathizers also represented. It was formed after a visit to Des Moines by George S. Lackland, president of the successful Denver Labor college.

The courses are in public speaking, labor law, economics, English grammar, labor history, psychology, current events, practical arithmetic. Two sessions a week are held for each subject and on each evening all the classes are thrown together for a joint discussion period. The fee is $1 per subject to cover expenses. Neither officers nor instructors in the school receive compensation. Courses running thru the winter and spring are planned to begin next fall.

H. Thomas, secretary, Des Moines Trades and Labor assembly, 106 Sixth Ave., will furnish information to those interested.

Homeless Workers Allowed to Wash in Municipal Lodging

Registration files of the Chicago municipal lodging house, 162 N. Union ave., indicate that mine laborers from many camps are drifting to the industrial centers. Southern Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Arkansas and West Virginia were represented by recent arrivals without a job. From 1100 to 1200 men come to the house every week. They are given a chance for a bath and laundry facilities. A limited number of cots are available and coffee and rolls are served for breakfast.

"Most of the men state that they have no family connections or friends," Superintendent Thomas Allinson declares. "This is not true in a majority of cases. We know they are men who have not been out of work before and are too proud to let their relatives know about it. Over 80% are unskilled; 10% are Negroes. There is a flow of unemployed from the smaller industrial towns as well as from the mining camps."

Another Airplane Disaster.

BALBOA, C. Z., Feb. 21.—Private Edward Abernathy, U. S. A., was killed and three others were injured when their plane fell at Cristobal Wednesday.

THE POWER COLUMN

Something Big Coming

DETROIT has declared war on Chicago. The defy flung by Comrade Edgar Owens, challenging Chicago boosters to envy, but not equal the showing made by Detroit, has been accepted by Comrade Gus Schulenberg, city agent for Chicago, and the battle is on with heavy increases in the DAILY WORKER circulation expected on both sides.

In the meantime Comrade Harvitt, DAILY WORKER chief of Toledo, is not making hostile demonstrations but is quietly knocking off one subscriber after another. The most bitter suffering is being endured in THE DAILY WORKER business office, where overtime has become the generally accepted fate so that the new subscriptions may be entered on the mailing list promptly.

The worst of the whole matter is the hostility is spreading thru the entire country to such an extent that there is hardly a city in which the DAILY WORKER boosters are any longer attempting to maintain neutrality. It seems that it means civil war and bitter war. Under the conditions there is no longer any use in concealing the fact. Let there be war and new subscriptions without stint or limit. Only there ought to be some rules set so that the punishment which is now being centralized in the business office can be made as painless as possible.

Within the next few days definite plans will be made for a real national DAILY WORKER subscription campaign. Every reader of THE DAILY WORKER, every Workers Party branch and City Central Committee, every branch of the Young Workers League and its Junior Groups, in other words every militant thruout the length and breadth of the country will be drawn into the drive which adds at the very least ten thousand new readers to THE DAILY WORKER list. Watch THE POWER COLUMN for additional information regarding this Ten Thousand New Readers Campaign. No reader of our paper, no party unit can afford to be uninformed or late in getting into the drive from the very start.

* * *

THE name of Comrade Harvitt of Toledo cannot be kept out of THE POWER COLUMN, it seems. This comrade has ideas which are so good that they cannot be kept from the rest of the DAILY WORKER boosters. Harvitt reports that he is using his commissions to finance those who wish to subscribe to THE DAILY WORKER, but who do not have the ready cash to pay. Harvitt pays the subscription price for these loyal but broke DAILY WORKER readers and collects when their financial condition is improved. That is a good way for keeping up the circulation of our paper; everyone is benefited, THE DAILY WORKER, the agent and the reader. Comrade Leo Walewitch, one of the most successful branch agents of Minneapolis, Minn., has also employed the same plan and makes the further suggestion that branches which are financially able, set aside a small amount, say ten or twenty dollars, in addition to the funds which the branch agent can advance. In this way, suggests Comrade Walewitch, many comrades, especially those who subscribe to foreign language papers, but who would also like to have THE DAILY WORKER, can secure the paper and pay for it later.

* * *

A HIGHLY efficient, but modest Chicago comrade, who does not want his name published, has another excellent suggestion. Says this comrade, "It is easy to sell subscriptions to workers who are already sympathetic and who know about THE DAILY WORKER. But there are many whom I approach who have not been in any contact whatsoever with the militant labor movement and who are slow in appreciating the worth of our paper. With these people I have been employing a different method.

"Instead of showing them the paper and telling them how good it is, I pick out a particularly good news article or editorial, which contains information that no other papers ever print. Then I get my prospect to read that article. If then he is interested I tell him why it is that THE DAILY WORKER can print news and articles which no capitalist paper would dare to use because THE DAILY WORKER is published solely in the interests of the workers and has no interests of bankers, employers or advertisers to serve. Often a single article or editorial will sell a subscription to THE DAILY WORKER, when a sample copy of the paper is thrown away without having been read."

Soup Kitchens or Wage Cut? Banker Gives You Choice

Soup kitchens and flop houses will be the lot of American labor unless it decides to let the bosses cut wages, said Melvin A. Traylor, president of the First Trust and Savings bank, in a speech delivered before the Chicago Association of Credit Men at a dinner in the La Salle Hotel recently. High wages were forcing business to stop legitimate expansion, he said.

While Traylor was promising American labor the benefit of soup kitchens and flop houses thousands of men were tramping Madison street wishing for the price of either soup or a bed.

The dinner served the association of credit men was a real feast. The reporter for the DAILY WORKER would like to listen to predictions like that every day if he could get such a fine feed while doing it.

S. D. FARMERS TURN THUMBS DOWN ON MC ADOO

Will Have Nothing to Do with Oil Man

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Feb. 21.—W. W. Howes, of Wolsey, South Dakota, chairman of the McAdoo delousing conference held in Chicago yesterday, did not speak for the dirt farmers of South Dakota but for the dirty capitalist politicians when he pledged his native state to the McAdoo boosters.

A political storm rivalling the tempest in the Teapot Dome broke here yesterday when the wires flashed the news that McAdoo was sufficiently recovered from his attack of oil fever to warrant the removal of the quarantine, and was fully qualified to carry the banner of Wilson democracy at the head of the hungry office hunters who now thirst for the spoils of office.

James F. Houlihan of Watertown, who has a bloc of his own, does not hold McAdoo's progressivism in high esteem. In fact, Houlihan, speaking of the group represented by Judge Howes, restrains himself with difficulty from laying himself open to the charge of being guilty of the use of "cruel and abusive language." The fact is that no candidate in this section of the country has the slightest chance of election unless he fools the farmers into the belief that he is a progressive. Houlihan is just as reactionary as Howes and his candidate for U. S. Senator, U. S. G. Cherry. Mark P. Bates is Houlihan's candidate.

Houlihan and Howes are both united in their opposition to Ayres. They see in the organization which he leads a menace to their political rule.

Since the oil exposure, sentiment here has been rapidly crystallizing against McAdoo. The progressive farmers have now another argument in favor of an alliance with labor and for coming out boldly on a clear-cut issue severing connections with both capitalist parties and the political leeches who have fattened on the misery of the rural toilers.

Here's Another Installment of "A Week"

By IURY LIBEDINSKY

Published by THE DAILY WORKER thru special arrangement with B. W. Huebsch, Inc., of New York City. Coypyrighted, 1923, by B. W. Huebsch & Co.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornulkh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedants allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue Martuinov has rushed to the court-yard of the Communist Company at the sound of the alarm siren which calls the party members to arms. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

What Do You Think of "A Week"

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have already published three installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its characters, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We will publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

THERE was one, still quite a boy, red-cheeked and beardless, with a healthy bare neck coming out of his short leather jacket and a careless smile on his face. He called out to a friend in a cheerful voice:

"Well, Mitka, are we going to smash the bandits?" and then disappeared in the dark ranks.

"Do you smoke, Comrade?" some one asked Martuinov, and beside him he saw a quiet simple face almost eaten up with thes marks of an ancient small-pox. He recognized him—from the Supply Committee, Stalmakhov.

And Stalmakhov was shaking hands and saying:

"Good day, Comrade Martuinov, I did not recognize you."

And instantly Martuinov covered over with a big grey veil the unquiet ideas, the anxiety, all that was tossing about in his soul. He entered quietly into conversation.

"I am no smoker, Comrade. . . . What is the alarm about? Do you know?"

Stalmakhov had not time to reply before Martuinov's other neighbor, a fat man in a civilian overcoat with a leather belt over it, broke into the talk.

"Probably the bandits have come . . . so I was told . . . bandits with machine-guns . . ." he hurriedly whispered.

"No, Comrade. Hardly likely to be bandits, and you should not spread unconfirmed rumors."

"I do not think I frightened any one," replied the fat man. "Bandits, what a prodigy!"

"Yes, I know that you are not afraid," said Stalmakhov quietly, "but all the same, why babble? Better say nothing." And he turned away.

People were noisy in the ranks. They were all, like Martuinov, hurriedly covering their doubts, fears and anxious thoughts with big grey veils.

"Dress! Attention!" was called along the ranks.

The ranks became silent, and stiffened, like fiddle-strings. A blow on them, and with strong enthusiasm, each heart would sing and pour itself into the general symphony of struggle. . . .

Every one listened and looked; three men were walking along the ranks; Karaulov, Klimin, Robeiko.

Klimin's voice rang out clear and sharp:

"Comrades, Communists! There is no need to say much about what you have all read today in the newspapers and yesterday heard at the meeting, namely that before us is the task of bringing seed for the sowing. To bring seed, we need fuel. To get fuel, we need working hands. You must now collect from all the town the hands of the slackers and parasites who are at present doing nothing. Their hands must become working hands. We must make a house to house search, and all who can be taken without loss for the life of the town, and made use of in getting of wood, all these we shall take for several days and, simultaneously shall be clearing the town of the counter-revolutionary element. Comrade Karaulov is appointed to direct the whole search, he will assign you your districts and give you instructions. Work in unison, be careful and vigilant! . . ."

With abrupt sentences, as if giving orders, Karaulov began to speak. Martuinov did not listen to him. The big courtyard of the Communist Company, the familiar faces of those who had gathered there, now seemed to him workaday and ordinary. After all there was no heroic action before him, neither death nor suffering, but simply a sleepless night.

Martuinov was one of a group of three appointed to visit dwellings, and with him were his stout neighbor and Stalmakhov. Stalmakhov went into the building and was allotted a district to be gone thru. When the three of them were walking down the empty street, Martuinov asked Stalmakhov:

"And where is our district? Far?"

"No. Not very. Another four blocks . . . You know, from the Rozhdestvensky Church to the Post Office."

And Martuinov knew that today he would be in the house in which Nadya Rostovtseva used to live, in which she was still living, the house in which he had spent the best days of his past life.

She had been his love, the love which one can be false to but never forget. Else why had he chosen her in particular from the crowd of merry children with whom he had grown up? For then she had not seemed pretty: a dark face, with high cheekbones, a rather snub nose; only her scarlet lips and those dark wide eyes, made her strangely attractive.

And then she had turned into a bewitching young girl who kept her smiles for him alone, and enchanted him with the wise and tender charm of her face, the severe and sober grace of her movements. . . . And he had known that he had no need of other love or other lips.

He did not like her family, her father, the Colonel bragging of his nobility, the sons who copied him, young elegant officers—and yet he spent his evenings at her house, listened to her unhurried sensible words, and read her his first poems, that he had written for her.

What a short time ago that was, and how irrevocably far it seemed! If there is such a thing as immortality, the soul of the man who died yesterday remembers so his past existence.

The Revolution had come between them. Nadya did not understand it, listened to his burning words, smiling and tearing up a scrap of paper or stuff in her delicate fingers—that was a habit she had—and replied: "All this has happened before, Volodya; every revolution begins with joy and the expectation of the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth, and the event brings so much suffering as to outweigh altogether its diminutive gains."

And each moment the development of the revolution took firmer hold on him, whereas she became religious, studied the Apocalypse, and expected the end of the world. They became more and more alien and incomprehensible for each other.

At the time of the October Revolution he was an opponent of the Bolsheviks, and was even arrested by them for two weeks. But this arrest did not draw them together but still further drove them apart.

When he came out of prison she met him as if he were a martyr. Whereas for him, all it amounted to was that he "had had some difference of opinion" with the Bolsheviks.

Soon after that he had stopped going to the house. He was pained by the blind hatred with which her whole family regarded the Soviet Government and the revolution.

The civil war separated them for a long time, and then when he, already a Communist, returned to the town with the victorious Red Army and learnt that her brother had been shot as a counter-revolutionary, he could not make up his mind to visit them, and, meeting only in the street, bowed to her who had grown handsomer tho always sad, and she soberly nodded her head in reply, and each meeting left its trace in his soul. . . . The comrades walked in silence, each one immersed in his own thoughts. . . . There was the railing of their garden, from which drooped the boughs of lilac and acacia.

"Well, let's begin with the corner one," Stalmakhov broke the silence.

With the corner one? There it stood, a red brick house, and thru the chinks of the closed shutters spirted thin welcoming rays of light, as in that time so long ago. . . .

"No, Comrade Stalmakhov, into that house I will not go. I beg you to go in by yourselves," and catching by the sleeves the coldly wondering Stalmakhov, he whispered to him, "You go in there, the two of you. . . . Acquaintances of mine live here . . . awkward for me . . . I am sorry, of course. . . ."

"All right then. . . . I had forgotten that you are from these parts," Stalmakhov murmured, attentively and humorously looking at Martuinov.

"Come on," said Stalmakhov to the third of them, and they began knocking loudly.

A swarm of thoughts, one after another, rushed thru Martuinov's mind, and when the wicket already creaked, and a frightened voice asked, "What is it? What do you want?" Martuinov, breathless from the beating of his heart, with the despair of a man resolved on suicide, went into the big courtyard. Stalmakhov glanced back at him.

They went thru the dark passage into the dining room Martuinov knew so well; there, under the bright circle of the lampshade, they were drinking tea. Martuinov knew so well everything in that dining room!

There was Colonel Rostovtsev himself, a little dried up old man, in a worn-out military tunic, the places on the shoulders where once had been stitched epaulettes showing green with new cloth. He was serving now in the Commissariat for War and, with trembling hands, hurried to get his certificate.

There was his wife, a tall, handsome woman with a pale face and eyes like Nadya's, who once upon a time had been so fond of Martuinov. Not raising her head, she went on cleaning the glasses.

And there, in the far corner, was Nadya. . . . It was so long since he had seen her in a simple indoor frock! She was getting up from her chair; she was disturbed and angry—for Martuinov knew every line, every movement of this face that even now was dear to him.

From under the lamp she tried to see those who had come in. . . . She was looking . . . straight into his eyes. She recognized him and turned pale.

WORKERS PARTY WINS RIGHT TO MEET IN NEWARK

Attack on Lenin Meeting Was Boomerang

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—When the police prevented the Workers Party from holding a Lenin memorial meeting in Newark they greatly assisted the cause of free speech in New Jersey, according to Atty. John Larkin Hughes, who represented the four speakers arrested at the meeting.

"Conditions relating to public meetings are better in New Jersey than in the past ten years," he declared. Ludwig Lore, Alexander Tractenberg, David Kaplan, and Constant Chriss were fined $20 each by Police Judge Grice of Newark; but the brief trial clarified the atmosphere.

Hall Owner Intimidated.

It was brought out by the defendants that the Workers Party had sought to secure the Labor Lyceum for a Lenin memorial meeting Feb. 1. The owner of the hall was intimidated by the police so that he refused to grant the party a permit. The meeting was therefore held in the street.

The prosecutor at the trial sought to "get" the men on the old familiar grounds. "Are you a citizen of the United States?" he asked. "Were you ever arrested for anti-government activities?" But the judge insisted that the men be tried on the crimes for which they were arrested.

"Right to Meet" Admitted.

"I think," he said, "that no one could deny them the right to meet in a hall. These men were arrested for obstructing traffic, not for attacking the government. The police have absolutely no right to prevent the Workers Party from holding a meeting in a hall. If they do so the party should take the matter to the chancery court." However, he found the defendants guilty of "loitering and obstructing traffic."

After the trial the prosecuting attorney, city counsel for Newark, suggested a conference between the defense attorney, representative of the American Civil Liberties union, and himself to "work out some plan" by which the Workers Party might meet in halls unmolested by police.

German Middle Class of Pre-War Days Is Almost Wiped Out

Herman Basler, the recently-arrived delegate from the International Workers Relief Committee, with headquarters in Berlin, spoke last night at the Imperial Hall, under the auspices of the N. S. English branch of the Workers Party.

The decline of the mark, "said Basler, has completely abolished the middle class that existed before the war. This middle class has gone over, part and parcel, either to the Fascist or the Communist movement.

Conditions are so frightful that statistics giving famine death rates have been suppressed. All thru the winter little children have been without food or clothing—forced to walk half-naked, unshod, thru snows as heavy as any we have in this city.

"A hungry man will fight," he said, "but a starved man cannot fight, will not fight—he will crawl on his knees for a piece of bread. We must feed them back to energy and strength."

Castor Oil Prince Dopes Pittsburgh School Children

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 21.—Prince Don Gelasio Caetani, royal ambassador from Italy to the United States, addressed the children of St. Peters School in Fernando Street a few days ago.

Rows and rows of the children were massed on the stage as an applause committee of the prince's fascist policies. One of the children assigned as a spokesman repeated a memorized phrase: "Viva for Mussolini." The prince concluded:

"As ambassador of Italy, I tell you to remember Italy, to love America and to serve God."

Thus the worker's child is tutored to remember Italy—a country ruled by fascismo and castor-oil; to love America, the country of the injunction, the child slave and the exploited workers and farmers, to serve God or his representatives on earth, the supporters of the big bankers.

We heartily invite our "fascist prince" to address the child laborers in the beet fields of Michigan or on the truck farms of Maryland. We wonder if their cry would be "Viva for Mussolini" or "Down with the child murderers"?

Rockford Comrade Gets Second Set of Appeal Coupons

A few days ago the Labor Defense Council announced the offer of a copy of Libedinsky's famous Russian novel, "A Week," to everyone who sells a $6.00 sheet of Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons.

Already copies are being mailed out—and comrades are asking for more sets of coupons. S. Saltys, of Rockford, Ill., responded to the offer in less than a week and he asked for another set of coupons. Perhaps he wants to give the book to a friend when he sells the second set of Appeal coupons.

MENSHEVIK HEAD EXPOSES TREASON PLOTS OF PARTY

Planned Official Murders and Train Wrecks

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TIFLIS, Feb. 21.—A former active member of the Menhsevik party, Chamladze, is printing in the local paper "Rabochaya Pravda" sensational revelations of the activities of the Mensheviks. According to his statements the C. E. C. of the Menshevik party organized bandit groups for the purpose of wrecking and robbing trains, killing officials of the Soviet government, etc. He is giving facts, names and places. As a responsible member of the Mensheviks he received orders from the C. E. C. to organize some of these criminal undertakings. As late as November, 1923, the Mensheviks in Georgia were busy preparing an armed insurrection against the government, but the arrest of the leaders cut short these activities.

The revelations made a deep impression on the population. 83 members of the Menshevik party sent a signed statement to the paper giving reasons why they are leaving the party. A few days later 280 followed suit. In their statement they are calling upon those who still remain with the Mensheviks to leave the party of the traitors and join the Communist party, as the only party that actually defends the interests of the workers and peasants.

For Recognition of Soviet Russia!

COMMUNIST·CHILDREN'S·COLUMN

The Children in the Reform Schools.

By MARTIN MIROFF, Age 10

A recent investigation gives us a mountain of facts about reform school conditions. We find in existence bull pens where a boy is locked up for many days on the sickly diet of bread and water. Sometimes a new boy is thrown in and is beaten by the inmates. Proof has been given that a weak boy had been beaten to death.

The boys are only from 6 to 16 years old. Some of the teachers use fists and rules on the bodies of the boys. The children are taken out all bruised. Most of the children are from working class parents who cannot pay to take them out. They have to remain in the house of torture.

Instead of knowledge he is treated with brutality and such things as solitary confinement, bread and water, and physical punishment. They are also forced to work eight to nine hours a day as gardeners and farmers, which we know is too much even for a grown up man.

Capitalism drags these boys into holes of torture, pain and brutality, where they are brought up until those that can stand it no longer, commit suicide.

These are the reform schools, the tool of the capitalist class. We will fight against this tool and system of capitalism until it is gone.

Liberal Quixotes Tilt Lances at Cleveland Plutes

(By The Federated Press)

CLEVELAND, Feb. 21.—Cleveland progressives are preparing to carry their fight against the Union Terminal grab to congress. They want to find out how the promoters were able to reverse a decision of the interstate commerce commission that the deal was "not in the interest of public necessity," and why the director of the I. C. C. bureau of finance, who put the deal thru for the promoters, immediately resigned as a government official to become vice president and chief counsel of Van Sweringen's Nickel Plate railroad at a reputed salary of $25,000 a year. Besides this high official, the terminal grab involves a former U. S. secretary of war, the president of a great railroad system, and several nationally known bankers in what a member of the inter-state commerce commission brands as "an indefensible scheme to capitalize millions of dollars of fictitious value at the expense of the American people."

Smoke Out A Plot.

The independent progressive city councillors elected by proportional representation last November scored a victory by forcing out into the open the plot to plunder the public by the erection of the "real estate" stub terminal station on Cleveland's public square. The corporation henchmen in the council had to listen to a recital of how the Van Sweringens, after a bad real estate gamble, had wrecked the city beautiful plan of former Mayor Tom L. Johnson in order to help the big bankers recover their loans and get an unconscionable profit themselves by erecting an inefficient stub station on the over-congested public square.

The stub station would accommodate but four out of the seven railroads entering Cleveland, at a cost of from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000 more than the great lake front terminal that would serve all seven roads as the crowning edifice on the new city mall.

By a vote of 14 to 11, the progressive councilmen succeeded in sending back to committee the motion recording the city's intention to turn its streets and property over to the stub station promoters, and further carried a motion requiring the Van Sweringens to appear before the city council and answer questions about their project.

60 Per Cent Increase.

ODESSA, Feb. 21.—During the year of 1923 the Odessa sea port handled 28 million poods of freight, which is a 60 per cent increase over 1922. During 1923 the export of foreign countries was 15,673,000 poods, while the import was 1,895,000 poods. In 1922 the export was 1,270,000, while the import was 7,948,000 poods. This shows how rapidly the export is growing over the impor

COMMUNISTS WIN UNION ELECTIONS IN SAXON CITIES

Movement Strongest in Coal Districts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DRESDEN, Feb. 21.—The revolutionizing of the masses in Germany is proceeding rapidly. In Saxony, altho the Communist Party was not allowed to do any propaganda in connection with the elections, the masses voted nevertheless in great numbers for the Communist candidates. The municipal election in Saxony is only one indication of the way the masses are leaving the social-democratic party and are flocking to the side of the Communist Party. There are other examples of this process in other parts of Germany.

In Neumuenster the opposition captured the textile union. Those elected were four Communists, two sympathizing non-party workers and one social-democrat. The same thing happened in the leather workers' union, where four Communists and one social-democrat were elected.

In Elmshorn all elections in the trade unions so far have given majorities to the Communist Party, so that the district executive committee, in which up to now there have been 19 Communists and 26 social-democrats, will surely have an overwhelmingly Communist majority.

In the West Saxony district the various local groups of the social-democratic party have been reduced to 15 per cent of their strength. The same holds true of other districts, and many of the members who leave the social-democratic party enter the Communist Party.

In Schweinfurt the Communist list was elected in the full meeting of the factory councils.

In Meuselwitz-Rositz coal district 90 per cent of the trade unions are on the side of the Communists. The social-democratic party is trying to utilize the ban put on the Communist Party, and is arranging meetings everywhere. But it has not met with any success anywhere, and up to now it could not form a single new local branch.

In Wurttemberg six Communist local branches have been organized in the last few weeks.

Bulgarian Socialists Quit Fascist Government.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Feb. 21.—The Socialist members of the Bulgarian Fascist government quit when Zankoff, prime minister, refused the Socialist demand for more "democracy." The Socialists recently aided in crushing the peasant government, and slaughtering the communists.

Hard to Surprise, Easy to Please, Blase Gothamites

By FREDERICK KUH.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—A European, visiting the latest crop of frothy musical comedies on Broadway, would blink in amazement at their mechanical adroitness. In Berlin, Moscow, Vienna or Prague, the magician who draws a rabbit and a canary from a derby hat is still the highest expression of mechanical genius. In middle-class America, scarcely a single polite "Ah" escapes from the spectator who sees a life-sized kitchenette apartment with occupants emerge on the stage from imperceptible regions below. They are resorting to new devices on Broadway now, each more ingeniuos than last year's. A soubrette in the "Music Box Revue" sings a sentimental, railroad-circular sort of ballad about orange groves in California—while, from some invisible source—a suspicion of faint orange perfume is wafted into the auditorium. For some, this suggested a barber shop and hot towels. For the majority, it heightened the picture of orange orchards.

There is subtlety and untold genius in the technical perfection of these productions. Artists, engineers, dramatists, producers and a staff of stage workers devote weeks and months to evolving an Oriental scene, in order to have a convincing background for the newest morsel of "Chinese" jazz melody. One may reasonably question whether this elaborate game is worth the spotlight; but the pleasure-bent theater-goer has no doubts. He comes; he sees; and is conquered. He will even applaud a variation on the mother-in-law joke, as long as the trappings afford him novelty.

The "Music Box Revue" is ingenious, not only in its lavish mechanisms, but in its wit, settings, costumes and tricky scenes.

"Andre Charlot's Revue of 1924" is no less rollicking, tho it lacks the spontaneity of its Music Box rival. If it omits the familiar Main Street touch, it offers a lively collection of London and Paris manners. For this very reason, it affords a stimulating contrast; it is a European show, dressed by American tailors. One occasionally feels that the garments are a loose fit. But the dancing and costuming speak an international language, and they speak with fluency and appeal. Whatever is American in Andre Charlot's show is of the slapstick school. One wonders why the producers thoughtlessly omitted the conventional custard pie, casually dropped down the back of a lady's evening gown. There is incongruity between this American pool room humor and the tasteful decorations and delicate trappings of the chorus. In the old, old struggle between artistry and box office, the former, as usual, has taken the count; but not without putting up a good display.

$15,000 DEFENSE FUND MUST BE RAISED QUICKLY

Appeal of Michigan Case Won't Wait

Every mail brings money to the office of the Labor Defense Council, 166 W. Washington St., Chicago, these days, but unless the contributions continue to improve, the $15,000 required for the defense right away will not be realized.

The January financial statement, just made public, shows total receipts for the month of $2,598, as against current expenses of $1,282. A distinct advance in receipts during the latter part of the month—and by the way, continued into the first part of February—points to the probability that the February statement will be more encouraging.

One $814 Check.

Of the January receipts $1,357 was sent in on contribution lists, the greatest single contribution being a check for $814 sent from the South Slavic Federation of the Workers Party. Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons began to be circulated during the month and the amount realized from this source was $238. Local councils of the Labor Defense Council sent in $698; unions $159, miscellaneous $41.

Contributions have recently been received from a number of benefit societies, workmen's clubs, etc. The Workmen's Fire Insurance Society, Inc., Elizabeth, N. J., branch has proved itself a good friend in this connection, as have the Tourist Club ("Naturfreunde") of San Francisco and the Jewish Public Library of Winnipeg, Canada.

Free Copies of "The Week"

Considerable interest has been aroused in the sale of Ruthenberg Appeal Coupons, due to the premium offer under which the Labor Defense Councils gives a free copy of the great Russian novel, "A Week," to every one selling a full $6 sheet of coupons. The first book went to Anton Bubanj, Christopher, Ill., who saw the announcement of the premium offer in The DAILY WORKER. The Labor Defense Council announces that "A Week" will be sent only to those who ask for it, when sending in money for coupons.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 21.—During 1923 the local bakers' union used 100,544,000 union labels in bakeries under its jurisdiction. This local union enjoys the distinction of using a larger number of union labels than any other local of the international union.

Will Can't Make Movies Behave, Churches Assert

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Utter failure of Will Hays' "moral" dictatorship of the movies is declared, and the creation of a federal commission to "regulate at the source" is insisted upon, in resolutions adopted by the National Motion Picture conference of church workers here.

The resolution urges all church and civic groups to organize effectively to demand "the strictest supervision and control of the motion pictures which are cleverly constructed to prevent,, debase and corrupt public morals in our country thruout the world. . . . We declare it to be our conviction that the film industry's promise to reform itself, made two years ago, has failed as completely as did the other promises to reform, made in 1909 and 1921."

Star Spangled Banner Is Called "Barroom Music"

MADISON, Wis., Feb. 21.—An anonymous letter received by all Wisconsin legislators and many state officials today denounced the "Star Spangled Banner" as the song of the Irish to show hatred for protestant England.

The words of the song are termed "blood thirsty" and the music as "bar-room" music in the letters, which are signed "100 Per Cent American." The poem is essentially un-American and finds no response except among aliens, the letters state.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 31.—Slowly recovering from the effects of a relapse last week, Theodore Roberts, the actor, was able to sit up in bed and smoke one of his long black cigars today.

HERMAN BASLER TELLS MISERY OF GERMAN WORKERS

50 Per Cent Jobless; Children Tubercular

Herman Basler, member of the Berlin Executive Committee of the International Workers' Aid, is in America for a series of conferences with the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany, as well as with other American workers' organizations.

He was interviewed last night by a representative of the DAILY WORKER and gave a highly illuminating picture of the conditions under which the masses of the German people now live. He also brought with him motion pictures of German misery which will be incorporated in the coming F. S. R. film, to be called "Russia and Germany." Organizations desiring to book the picture can do so thru the National Office at 32 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Millions Unemployed.

"When I left Germany more than half of the industrial workers were unemployed because of strikes, lockouts, or the general industrial depression. Unemployed benefits amounted to so little as to be meaningless. The benefit for an entire week, in many cases, would not buy a loaf of bread. The worst pictures of German hunger now entertained by the American public are 100 per cent underdrawn. Only the most energetic action on the part of the working classes of the whole world can save millions of German men, women and particularly children from a miserable death," he said.

He went on to tell of his work in investigating actual cases of misery that came before the workers' relief organization. "Statistics don't mean much to Germans who must figure the price of bread in trillions of marks and who have time after time met price increases of over a hundred per cent. But actual cases by the dozens were found that revealed misery beyond description. For instance, the only bread winner in a family of eight is a 16-year-old boy, employed as a messenger in the Reichsbank at a weekly wage of 2.59 marks, about 65 cents. In this family two of the children are invalids. Every morning the boy must travel on foot for three-quarters of an hour because he cannot afford carfare. His only food consists of a plate of soup at noon. Last Christmas their pitiful meal, bought at the Bank Co-operative, cost them three weeks' wages, so the following three weeks the whole family had to exist on the few pennies unemployment subridy granted the mother by the government.

Hide Their Poverty.

"This is just one case, and by no means the worst. The people go to any length to try to hide their poverty. We saved one little girl from starvation only because other children had heard her repeat to herself, over and over again, 'I wish I were dead.' Clothing is patched and darned until it cannot be any further, and even then I have seen little girls hold their hands over unmendable holes in their dresses to keep them from the eyes of their friends. A doctor in one of the schools reported that in the severest winter weather 16 per cent of the chillren had no shoes and 14 per cent were without underwear of any description. Is there any wonder that of 1,720 children examined by city doctors in Tegel-Berlin 27 per cent were found to be tubercular and 48 per cent suffering from acute under-nourishment?

"One of the doctors engaged in this work said to me: 'It is a singular and humiliating admission from a doctor, but I must say that 'Justice' is not the only authority that is blindfolded. The doctor who is instructed to pick out the worst cases for excursions to other countries should also be blindfolded when time comes to make the choice, for each and every one of the children deserves and needs support, vacations and help.'

15, Look Like 10.

"The youth who are leaving the schools all show the effects of years of malnutrition. Girls of fifteen have the retarded growth of children of ten. In Gelsenkirchen 58 per cent of the youth seeking work are certified only for 'qualified tasks' because of their weak physical condition. Of course, they accept any kind of work they can get. In Berlin alone 24,000 and in Munich 20,000 youth are unemployed. The results are easily imaginable. I recall the case of one girl. Kaethe F., 17 years old. She lived in miserable conditions in a poverty-stricken home, finally left to work as a servant. At the end of November she lost her place, failed to find another, slept in the Municipal Home where her clothes were stolen. In seeking work she took grippe from exposure, and in due time was discharged from the hospital with a certificate to the effect that she was in need of special care—but with nothing but the certificate. The doors of her home were closed against her, they had enough mouths to feed. She went to the streets as a last resort.

Warm Meal Each 2 Days.

"The International Arbeiterhilfe is unable to do all it would like to do to help these poor unfortunates but we are doing all we can. Not more than one warm meal a day can be given, and in most cases only one warm meal in two days. Yet the thousands who receive this help from their fellow workers are touchingly grateful. That this meagre help should be so important to the German workers shows more clearly than anything else the depth of their misery. Teachers, upon questioning the school children, declared that most of the youngsters could not remember when they had had their last warm meal.

"In addition to the food kitchen the I. A. H. has opened a number of play rooms and libraries to shelter children from cold and remove them from the worst influences of street life. We also distribute 'Liebesgaben' from the workers of Holland and Switzerland and needy families and the beginning to send groups of children out of the country for vacations."

Basler will speak at several meetings arranged by the Friends of Soviet Russia during his few weeks stay in this country.

RAILROADS GOUGE U. S. PUBLIC FOR BILLION IN 1924

Biggest Profits Since 1916 Banner Year

By LELAND OLDS
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

Railroad profits for the year 1923 amounted to approximately $1,000,000,000. The total figure given out for Class 1 carriers by the bureau of railway economics is $977,543,590. This represents a return of 5.75 per cent on a valuation of $17,000,000,000 which exceeds by several billion dollars the actual money invested by the owners.

Such profits mean that stockholders of 16 railroads operating 40 per cent of the mileage in the United States will net more than $10 profits on each $100 share of stock. While profits of more than 6 per cent will remain for stockholders operating over 52 per cent of the total Class 1 mileage of the country.

The profits of 1923 have been exceeded only once in the history of American railroads. That was in 1916 when the owners squeezed out $1,040,084,517 by holding down wages and neglecting upkeep. The breakdown of private management directly attributable to deterioration of roadbed and equipment which resulted made it necessary for the government to take over the roads in 1918.

$8,494,363,242 Is 10-Year Profit.

This year's profits bring the total for the last decade to approximately eight and a half billion dollars as shown in the following table:

Profits Available for Owners of Class 1 Carriers.

1914	$ 673,104,933
1915	854,825,430
1916	1,040,084,517
1917	934,068,770
1918	906,500,000
1919	906,500,000
1920	789,000,000
1921	615,945,600
1922	776,880,592
1923	997,543,500
Total	$8,494,363,242

The huge profits of 1923 were made in spite of an unfavorable turn at the end of the year due to the minor business depression which began in June. Net earnings at $69,580,967 in December were nearly $10,000,000 below those of a year ago.

The gross revenues for December showed a decline of $19,212,804 as compared with the carriers' receipts during December, 1922. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle considers this decline in gross as a clear indication of the extent to which business fell off during the last half of the year. It forecasts still further contraction of railroad revenues during the coming months.

Pennsy Made $45,000,000.

Railroads which have made big profits during the year include the Pennsylvania with $45,000,000, the New York Central with $46,180,000, the Southern Pacific with $40,628,000, the Atchison with $40,785,000, the Union Pacific with $38,503,000, the Baltimore & Ohio with $22,054,000, the Great Northern with $18,000,000, the Illinois Central with $15,485,000, the Burlington with $20,375,000, and the Southern with $15,000,000. These figures represent profits remaining after all the demands of bond holders and other money lenders for interest have been fully met.

19 Per Cent Profit.

The Atlantic Coast Line has done the best by its stockholders with profits equivalent to 19 per cent. Union Pacific and Atchison have earned approximately 15 per cent on their common stock. While reports from other important carriers show the following returns to their common stockholders: New York Central, 17.2 per cent; Nickel Plate, 16.6 per cent; Chesapeake & Ohio, 14.9 per cent; Baltimore & Ohio, 12.9 per cent; St. Louis Southwestern, 14.6 per cent; Illinois Central, 13.5 per cent; Reading, 11.9 per cent; Southern Pacific, 11.8 per cent; Burlington, 11.9 per cent; Louisville & Nashville, 11.7 per cent, and Pennsylvania, 9 per cent.

Railway Shopmen Meet in Montreal in 3 Conventions

(By The Federated Press)

MONTREAL, Feb. 21.—Three conventions of railway shopmen will meet here in March. Division 4, Railway Employes Department, American Federation of Labor, opens its convention on March 24. Some 200 delegates are expected to attend, and the meetings are expected to last about one week.

Immediately on the close of the Division 4 gathering there will be conventions of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railway federations. The C. P. R. body is holding its regular biennial meeting. In the case of the C. N. R. the federations of the constituent roads are only now being merged into one federation for the entire government system

Division 4 will have the wage schedule up for revision, and the general policy of the organization on this matter will be threshed out. The C. P. R. federation is expected to take up the question of short time. At present the Angus shops are distributing the work rather than laying off men, while in outside shops the practice of short time is in vogue. An effort may be made to have a uniform practice in this regard thruout the system.

Landlords' Greed, Not House Lack, Will Raise Rents

When rents are raised in May it will not be because of a shortage of house; it will be because landlords think the tenants will pay the increase, said the Tenants Protective league. For three years, says the league, there has been going on the greatest building boom that Chicago has ever seen. Enough houses have been built in that time to more than take care of the increase in population There were 18,637 bungalows built during the last three years and 10,488 flats and apartments built during the same period.

Boguslawski Soloist in Chicago Symphony at Special Concert

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN

Moissaya Boguslawski, pianist of the Chicago Musical College, was soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra at a special, extra-season concert on the evening of February 19.

The concert opened with Weber's overture to "Der Freischuetz". A good piece of romantic music is this, full of delightful sentimental tunes, and weird melodies, suggestive of the superstition with which the opera is concerned.

Following this was the third symphony of Hugo Alfven of Stockholm. This is one of the finest symphonies of recent years, full of a wild and rushing reckless joy. It has a beautiful slow movement of different character. It is a lyrical section, producing the mood of serene exaltation of a great and noble art work.

Then Mr. Boguslawski played with the orchestra a serenade and allegro by Mendelssohn. This is a nice enough composition, but it fares ill by comparison with the Alfven symphony. Where Alfven is great, Mendelssohn is merely pretty.

Felix Borowski, also of the Chicago Musical College, conducted the second performance this season of his symphonic poem "Youth", which won a prize at the Evanston music festival last spring. There seems much in common between the spirit of the Swedish symphony and Borowski's poem. The same joyous pulse of life animates both, but Borowski's work also has a beautiful lyric element.

Boguslawski concluded the program with Liszt's tremendous first concerto. Here he revealed himself as a thoro and musicianly pianist, tho his interpretation of the great and almost savage music of Liszt showed nothing impressively original. Boguslawski was called out many times, and played two encores. It is regrettable that local musicians of such ability as Boguslawski and Borowski appear seldom in public concerts.

MILITANT MINERS PASS MOTIONS FOR UNION PROGRESS

Return of Howat and Dist. 26 Chiefs, Demand

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEADOW LANDS, Pa., Feb. 21.—A huge mass meeting of miners, sponsored by Local 4917, U. M. W. of A., of Tylerdale, Pa.; and supported by the Progressives, was held here on Feb 17 for the purpose of getting the facts of the International Convention in true light before the rank and file of the U. M. W. of A. and to pass judgement on resolutions drawn up by progressive delegates to be presented at the next District 5 Convention.

About 350 miners, mainly Progressives were present. The "Nightgown artists" undaunted in their humiliating defeat at the International Convention, showed their sinister faces, hoping to cause disruption and ultimately breaking up the greatest assemblage of miners for a long time, witnessed in this section.

Fine spirit was displayed when young Pat Toohey flayed the Lewis machine for its hypocritical stand on the newly proposed Immigration Laws supported by Secretary of "Labor" James J. Davis. This was too much for the "100% patriotism" of the Klansmen present. They started to hoot and jeer and cause general disturbance. But they didn't get very far, for this time they were not parading in the dark with their fiery cross, but were at a mass meeting of infuriated miners who were ready to back up their hate for these tools of the bosses with strong fists, a thing the cowardly Kluxers profoundly respect.

Resolution presented by the Progressives ranging from appointive power of organizers, Nova Scotia, reinstatement of Alex. Howat, etc., were passed with a roar that surely must have reached Lewis no matter where he might have been.

In Memory of Washington

There is no point in our writing about the role of hatchets and cherry trees in the life of the recognized father of our country. This task will be nobly handled by the official ink spillers of the big dailies, run for and by the employing class.

Today, when the very foundations of the Republic are menaced by the revelations regarding capitalist corruption, a brief statement of the outstanding facts regarding George Washington's role in the American revolution will be most appropriate.

Despite the myths and halo with which George Washington has been surrounded by historians, it is known today by many students of the development of our country that Washington was an aristocrat by origin and intention. He was a slaveholder. As the leader of the agricultural land-holding class and the rising mercantile class in America, Washington fought, and fought valiantly, against oppression of the American colonies and against English capitalist interference with the interests of his class.

Washington was always anxious to secure a compromise and reconciliation with the Mother country. Even on June 26th, 1775, after he became Commander of the American armies, Washington assured New Yorkers that he would do everything possible to establish "peace and harmony between the Mother country and the Colonies". And when the commercial and professional classes were busily at work robbing the masses of the victories of the revolution, George Washington in commenting on the critical conditions and the mass discontent confronting the country declared that such unrest exhibits "a melancholy proof . . . that mankind, when left to themselves, are unfit for their own government."

In practice this anti-democratic spirit of the Father of our country translated itself in Washington's buying enormous landholdings in Virginia, partly on military warrants secured from the soldiers. Speculators purchased the lands from the poor soldiers for a song. Poverty and starvation compelled the masses to surrender the land.

But there is one attitude and practice of George Washington that the working and farming masses of this country would do well to heed. He once said: "Government is not reason, it is not eloquence, it is force . . . never for a moment should it be left to irresponsible action."

Not Qualified!

Even if every admirer of William Gibbs McAdoo used a separate radio broadcaster to proclaim belief in his fitness for the presidency, the fact that he accepted a large fee from sinister oil interests renders him decidedly unavailable, in the editorial opinion of the New York World, friend of the Wilson family from the head of the house to the son-in-law's door-keeper.

The World has no hostility to McAdoo. This it admits. Yet it marvels exceedingly at the obtuseness of professional politicians who cannot read the signs on the heavens, but continue to run their heads into a hurricane of anti-oil opinion which will blow any politician tainted with its odor into at least temporary retirement.

The New York World sees nothing reprehensible in Mr. McAdoo's accepting a quarter million dollars retainer from Doheny to go into Mexico and endeavor to hog-tie the Mexican constitution so that American oil interests might rape the virgin wealth of the Mexican republic. The World's objection to McAdoo as a candidate is that as a result of his name being connected with the oil scandal the Democratic party cannot afford to have him as its standard bearer.

The New York World further believes that the group of McAdoo boosters who met in the Great Northern Hotel in Chicago had doubts of his availability and do not expect to "put him over" at the New York convention, but simply wanted to maintain an organization for bargaining purposes. Quite a plausible explanation!

The opposition of the New York World to McAdoo's candidacy is significant. It represents a powerful section of the Democratic party. The World is a consistent supporter of the Democratic party, nationally. With that opposition to contend with and the machine in New York, Illinois, Indiana and the Boston Post, with half a million circulation in New England, it looks as if Wilson's heir might need more than a radio station and a good publicity agent to bring him the nomination on July 4th.

What the railroad brotherhoods, who are backing his candidacy, may do in the event of their "favorite son" becoming "unavailable" is an interesting subject for speculation.

"Adjustment" in Coal

When the coal wage negotiations began in Jacksonville and the capitalist press manifested practically unanimous approval of the Lewis demand for a four-year contract, we ventured the assertion that a long term contract was but the first step in eliminating some 200,000 unemployed miners from the industry.

Our suspicions are confirmed. The negotiations have ended with the acceptance of a three-year contract by both sides ad from the operators come announcements that the elimination process is to begin immediately.

One metropolitan paper which covers labor news closely says: "Both operators and miners agree that one result will be the wiping out of many mines and mining communities."

Quoting an operator who took part in the negotiations the same article continues:

> In my territory, where the veins are poor, some towns will pass out like the ghost mining cities of Colorado. Others will survive by going non-union and cutting prices.

Please remember that the officialdom of the United Mine Workers of America has announced time and time again that it is its policy to co-operate with the larger operators in bringing the industry back to normalcy and we have now a perfect example of what that conception of normalcy is.

This is labor leadership that no employer will quarrel with and it is little wonder that the capitalist press and the rotary club platform performers are delirious with delight over this evidence that "labor is returning to sanity."

In England the dockers' union is confronted with exactly the same problem, but the dockers are on strike and there is no talk of the elimination of several thousand dockworkers because there is an oversupply of labor in the industry. Even the MacDonald government, with all its desire for respectability and its middle class leanings, dare not advocate such an infamous piece of business as the deliberate starvation of unemployed workers as a remedy for unemployment. This is what the Lewis proposal amounts to, this is what the three-year agreement is for and this is the reason why the Lewis program was seconded so enthusiastically by the operators and other employers.

We have here the spectacle of a head of one of the world's largest unions consciously encouraging and fomenting the struggle between the employed and unemployed workers in the union, a struggle whose existence is a constant menace to the solidarity of labor organization and which, when encouraged by officials, can end only in the destruction of the union.

We are going to venture one more prediction. It is that if an attempt is made to carry out this policy with the Lewis machine remaining in control of the union the end of the three-year contract period will see the United Mine Workers, not only weakened numerically, but with less mines under union control than they have today.

Mellon's Allies

The power of great corporations to exert an undue influence on public policy comes to light in an issue of the weekly leaflet distributed to passengers via New York Central lines. Under the title "Food for Thought," this leaflet reproduces tables containing all the sugar coating by which Secretary of the Treasury Mellon hoped to win the support of the middle class for his scheme to reduce the high surtaxes on the idle rich.

According to this railroad's propaganda leaflet the greatest blessings a la Mellon tax cutting are to fall upon the incomes under $6,000. Next in order of magnitude are the blessings to be meted out to people with incomes between $7,000 and $10,000. While only after all lower incomes have been duly satisfied are the incomes over $50,000 to get what blessings are left.

Of course, the appearance of a bias in favor of lower incomes is created by a trick of statistical grouping. For all that the table shows, no one would guess that there are some incomes in the United States that run into the millions of dollars a year and that the savings to these incomes will be out of all proportion to the savings of the smaller fry. Nor is there particular mention of the fact that wage earners with family incomes under $3,000 a year, will receive no important benefits from this scheme. They will continue to bear the heaviest indirect tax burden in the high prices which they pay for the necessities of life purchased from protected industries.

No! The leaflet is obviously designed to win the support of the people of moderate means who predominate in Pullman traffic. It is skillfully designed to that end and it contains the suggestion that the reader write his congressman urging support of Mellon's program.

But when all is said the most significant point to note is the power which such a medium for reaching the public places in the hands of financiers. Thru their contact with the traveling public these few men of great wealth can weigh more heavily in determining national policy than hundreds of thousands of ordinary citizens. This shows just one of the many ways in which private ownership makes a farce of political democracy.

Free the War Time Prisoners

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE.

THE Chicago Tribune has launched a campaign for the release of Federal prisoners now in jail for war-time offenses. This is not a joke—it is really so. The prisoners who have excited the Tribune's pity at this late day are not "conscientious objectors" or economic and political opponents of American militarism. The Tribune is aroused on behalf of the boys who have been committed for crimes ranging up to murder and rape. "Wobblies, traitors and slackers have been allowed to go while these poor boys, many of whom fought for their country, are still behind the bars," says the Trib, and even intimates that perhaps the Army courts-martial did not always do justice either. Such sedition!

We are surprised to find a question on which we can see eye to eye with this organ of reaction. But here it is. We see no justice whatever in teaching a man to kill in wholesale and then punishing him for applying his knowledge retail. If anything he should be commended for his restraint and finesse.

The soldier boys were taught the supremacy of the uniform over all things on this mundane sphere. We should not be too harsh with the poor privates who mistakenly applied this doctrine to attractive members of the civilian population—even when citizens of an allied and associated power.

A number of the prisoners are poor black boys who were imprisoned for life in connection with the race riots in a Texas army camp. They had been taught that Fritz Schmidts and Hans Schmals were human vermin even if they were white. They believed, because they had been told, that the Schmidts of Prussia were enemies of the black boys, but they knew for themselves that the land-lord-Schmidts of Texas were just that. It does not matter who started the Texas fracas, the black privates proved themselves efficient soldiers tho poor geographers.

Sure thing. Free the poor piker "criminals" of the late war. The big criminals, the fellows who started the wholesale murder have never been caught—yet. But free the heroes too—real heroes. It took no particular courage to follow the mob into the barracks when faced by the draft law, backed by every form of force known to the capitalist dictatorship. It did take "sand," however, to stand by opposition principles at that time and a goodly number of those who did so are still in the jails thruout this country. Those are the men that we want freed.

To the Tribune and its ilk murder and rape are childish pranks in comparison with the offense of fighting the sacred capitalist order. It's all in the point of view. But we are entirely willing to support the move for the freeing of the Tribune's brand of heroes. Will it support the move for liberating ours?

LEWIS MACHINE AGAIN BETRAYS NOVA SCOTIANS

Miners Get "Raise" that Is Really Cut

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GLACE BAY, N. S., Feb. 21.—The gang of Lewis appointees and international representatives who have been negotiating a new wage scale with the British Empire Steel Corporation has signed an agreement with the corporation which has met with the bitterest opposition from the miners who went on strike. The contract gives the following increases to the miners:

Underground day men—30 cents a day.

Surface day men—25 cents a day.

Shooters and loaders and contract men, including helpers—7 cents per ton.

This mean that the seven cents extra is to be split up among all of them.

Handpick miners—8 cents per ton.

Miners working on local contract—6 per cent.

The day men working on the surface received last year $3.25 and will now receive $3.50. The day men working underground received five cents a day more than this and under the new scale will receive $3.65.

Coal Costs Miners More.

To compensate itself for this "raise" the corporation has increased the price of coal to the miners from $2.25 to $3.60 a ton! Recently the corporation also announced its intention of raising the rents of the company houses! Thus the "increase" actually will be turned into a cut.

Negotiations with the corporation have been going on since last November. Last 15th of January the corporation broke off negotiations and posted notices of a 20 per cent cut in wages and the increase of coal to the miners to $4.75 a ton. Despite the fact that the provisional officers and the international representatives were so confused at the action of the corporation that they did not know what to do the miners struck as one man. It was some days after that the gang finally decided to declare a "suspension of work." Later on negotiations were again started but ended in no decision. The negotiations which have just ended started after Steel ("poisonal" representative of Lewis) had made a special trip to Indianapolis to drink at the fount of wisdom. These negotiations ended in the signing of the contract which the Lewis gang dares to call a victory for the miners.

Since last July this gang has been declaring to the miners that they would at least get the 1921 rates for the miners, and assured the miners that now that the "reds" were out of office the corporation would be forced to raise wages.

At Indianapolis Lewis declared that the international union was behind the miners of Nova Scotia in their strike. Today Lewis wired a local which asked him if he supported this contract, ordering it to follow the instructions of the provisional officers. Lewis incensed the miners here by calling them scabs because they worked in 1922 when Lewis knew that it was his own men who told the miners to work on and make the best bargain possible with the corporation. The miners now have Lewis on record as supporting this contract when the miners oppose it and wish to continue the struggle to secure the 1921 rates.

Will Expel Strikers.

The provisional officers have ordered the miners back to work. Relief has been cut off,—tho many of the miners around Glace Bay have worked only a few days since September last year. Silby Barrett, the provisional president, threatened expulsion if the miners do not return to work. The miners are solid in their opposition to the cut, and the contract will never be accepted in the referendum vote.

Conservative miners who followed Barrett and Co. are very disappointed with the result of the "leadership" of the Lewis appointees. Now they are advocating that the miners should quit the U. M. W. of A. But this is being fought by the radicals. The slogan of the majority of the miners of the district still remains: The 1921 rates, and the ousting of the Lewis appointees from the district offices. This contract has helped to stiffen the determination of the miners to get rid of the "provisional government" and put into office miners who will fight the corporation.

By PROJECTOR.

SCARAMOUCHE.

HERE is THE picture of the French Revolution. I thought that Pola Negri's "Passions" and Griffith's "Orphans" were worthy of that title. "Scaramouche" makes them look cheap little program pictures in comparison.

Here is Revolution with a capital "R." First the background, starving people more pathetically hideous than the famine victims in "Russia Thru the Shadows." And an arrogant, corrupt, cruel nobility, ruling brazenly with force and violence. Then the day of reckoning, the people unchained, wiping out the oppression of the centuries in a mad orgy of blood letting. The revolution is not a pretty thing. Revolutions are that way. Great bonfires are made of fine furniture, paintings are ripped from their frames, neither age nor sex is spared in the revenge upon the aristocrats, heads are carried around on pikes. Blood and dirt and rage! I wonder what the Pennsylvania censors did with some of these scenes—and with the fat priest?

The picture has an intensely interesting love theme as well as plenty of "action," both mob and individual. A beautiful heroine (Alice Terry), and a gloriously handsome revolutionist hero (Ramon Navarro). The women who pay their way in will rave as enthusiastically over him as did the paid extra girls in the mobs.

Direction is almost flawless, altho one does wonder how the windmill managed to turn so industriously without any sails on its wings. Suspense is kept up, not merely to the tenth scene from the last but actually until five seconds from "The End." One has the feeling that it must come out all right but just how is cleverly concealed.

To tell the story would take too much space—and be unfair to every WORKER reader who is going to see it. Suffice to say that I paid my way in and shall do so again—and again.

School Super Lets Chicago Plutocrats Hear His First Talk

William McAndrew, the new superintendent of schools, wants to know, "How the schools of the city can more directly serve the city, the state and the nation." So he went to a luncheon of the Chicago Association of Commerce in the Hotel La Salle recently and asked the assembled business men. Thru them he hopes the question will get to every citizen in Chicago.

His talk to the Association of Commerce was his first speech in Chicago since being appointed superintendent of schools.

"We want the schools to function for the good of all," he said. "We hope you will tell us how we can serve you. Write down your suggestions and send them to me. We want and need them."

The Chicago Association of Commerce thru its committee on education recently published a pamphlet on "Public Education Costs," in which they advise men of superior financial and executive ability (business men) to get themselves appointed to positions on the board of education so that they might help to keep the costs of education down.

SOVIET CO-OPS WILL BE PUT ON VOLUNTARY BASIS

Big Inducements Offered Workers to Join

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Feb. 22.—Russian co-operatives, which have been one of the chief instruments in carrying out the New Economic Policy of the Soviet government are to become strictly voluntary organizations thru a decree that will shortly be issued.

Consumers will be free to withdraw from the great "Union of Consumers' Co-operatives" or to join it.

Formerly State Organs.

Before the New Economic Policy went into effect two years ago the co-operatives were merely the organ that carried out the instructions of the state and depended on the resources of the state for their work. With the introduction of the New Economic Policy co-operatives had to depend largely on themselves but every citizen was connected with the movement thru affiliation of unions or other governing bodies.

The decree now coming will do away with the last bit of compulsory affiliation but membership is encouraged by the advantages the co-operatives will offer. Workers and the poorer peasants will be provided with special exemptions, the details of which have not yet been announced. The number of shares any member may purchase is limited

Exploiters Given No Vote.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is preserved in the co-operatives, the report declares, by granting the vote in the organization only to those members who have the right to participate in the elections to the Soviets under the laws of the Soviet Republic. This bars employers of labor, and other non-proletarian elements from a voice in controlling the cooperatives.

What sums the co-operatives will receive from the government will be announced when the new decree is published. The organizations will be freed from the payment of industrial taxes.

Had Successful Year.

The co-operative societies had a successful year in 1923 but it is believed that the voluntary system will make for greater efficiency. Co-operatives' sales prices last year were well under regular market prices.

Flax, hides, fur, hair and hemp were among the articles exported thru the co-operatives. Cavaire was exported for the first time since the war.

Domestic trade in grain, textiles, meat, silk and silk cocoons, harvest machinery was carried on actively. Agricultural machinery is sold to the peasants in exchange for grain thru 400 stations, to which 600 more stations will be added this year.

They Get a Ford Without Duty.

MOSCOW, Feb. 21.—The Immigration Committee of STO (Council of Labor and Defense) has permitted the American Agricultural Commune, "Echo," to import from the U. S. a Ford duty free. The Ford has been donated to the Commune by American comrades.

A NEW FARM SAVIOR

NEWS of proposed measures to relieve the distress of the farmers is dinning our ears ever more oppressively.

A new Messiah has been born for the suffering farmers of the Northwest. This savior is none other than the unknown and unnoticed J. P. Morgan. We are now told that Mr. Morgan is ready to subscribe $500,000 to $10,000,000 to the corporation that Coolidge is planning to organize to relieve the difficulties of the farmers in the Northwest.

At this time, in view of Morgan's entry upon the scene, it would be especially appropriate to recite some of the outstanding hardships endured by the rural masses. Farmers were 47% of all the persons adjudged bankrupt in Idaho in 1922. In the states of Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana, the farmers were from 32% to 18½% of all the formal bankrupts. Secretary Wallace has found that "a preliminary report indicates that the bankruptcies of farmers for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, will materially exceed those of 1922." This report is not yet ready.

In 1922 the net shift from farms to cities and towns was 1,120,000, or approximately 4% of the rural population. The percentage of deserted, habitable farm houses almost doubled from 1920 to 1922. This abandonment of the land was observed in all sections of the country, but was greatest in the region west of the Missouri River and the Pacific northwest.

The latest reports of the Department of Commerce indicate a heavy loss to American agricultural exports. 80% of America's exports are agricultural. Of this amount 80% is taken by Europe.

Under these circumstances it is plain that the crisis in which our agricultural population finds itself today cannot be relieved even by the hurried arrival of Mr. Morgan to save some of the hard hit bankers of the Northwest at the cost of exorbitant interest rates which only the farmers will have to pay. Mr. Morgan is a false Messiah like all the other bankers and big business agents sent in to the Northwest by the Coolidge administration.

President M. L. Burton, of the University of Michigan, states that the four outstanding Americans of the twentieth century are Theodore Roosevelt; Henry Ford, Thomas Edison and Orville Wright. Teddy owes his leadership to his comprehension of the social problems of his time; Ford for his proficiency in turning out flivvers; Edison for his inventions, and Wright for his work in heavier than air flying. Dr. Burton could find no literary man to place on his list. What about Walt Mason or Calvin Coolidge? They turn out some funny stuff.

Samuel Gompers is holding down his rising gorge. That portion of his anatomy experienced an upward trend when he learned that the German embassy in Washington failed to honor Woodrow Wilson by placing its flag at half mast. Sam had a good time while Wilson was in the White House. His son got a good job in one of the federal departments. Sam will not bite the hand that fed him even after it is cold.

* * * *

Gompers referred to the officials of Germany as "jackasses" because such an insult was offered to "our" people. There was no indication of national indignation except what was visible in the capitalist press and on the faces of the flunkeys who sold themselves for a consideration to the capitalist class of this country during the war. "The German workers thought I would not move to their aid because I fought them so vigorously during the war, but they forget that I am a trade unionist." That is just why the simple minded Germans cannot understand him. In Germany carrying a union card does not give a "brother" license to murder his fellow worker. No, Sam, they didn't forget. That's the cause of the misunderstanding.

Samuel Gompers is not a columnist but he is a great help. But for people like Sam who say foolish things a columnist would be obliged to rack his brains for unusual incidents worthy of notice. As it is the speeches of Gompers, Coolidge, Beatrice Fairfax, Billy Sunday and William J. Burns are a constant source of inspiration to columnists, poets and cartoonists.

It is rumored in Washington that the Prohibition Department of the Treasury intends to issue a daily casualty list. This would have been done long ago but for the fear that a panic might seize the nation and the people of this country who have been celebrating the armistice might feel they were suffering from a terrible nightmare since 1918. The list of dead and wounded resulting from the efforts to make bootlegging a profitable tho hazardous business would if published make the European war look like a Finnish picnic.

Since the shooting of Senator Frank L. Greene, of Vermont, while walking in the vicinity of the Capitol by a prohibition agent for no reason except perhaps that he did not appear to be under the influence of liquor, senators are talking quite seriously of purchasing coats of mail and wearing bullet proof helmets. Southern senators are talking of fortifying the senate chamber. Owing to the presence of oil, senators are not allowed to carry flame throwers else the upper house could beat off attacks with some degree of success.

The resignation of Otto Branstetter, former national secretary of the Socialist Party of America, has set the rumor mills going in the Windy City. It is reported in quarters generally considered authentic that Otto drew the last dime in the treasury and then handed in his resignation with a recital of his sacrifices for the cause. In departing from the office he filled so well, Mr. Branstetter declared that the illness of Eugene Debs rendered it almost impossible to keep the party in a functioning condition as Gene's unavailability for lecture tours robbed the organization of its only visible means of support. Branstetter distinguished himself during his term of office by giving the department of justice every possible assistance in discovering literature published by the American communists while they were living in a state of enforced illegality. Otto is a painter and succeeded admirably in changing the color of the S. P. from pale pink to deep yellow. The question now is, "Where does he go from here?"

REPUBLICAN MACHINE BACKS DAUGHERTY

DOCKER RANK AND FILE TO REJECT PACT

Port Strikers Rebel at Official Compromise

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 22.—Dockers' delegates who met here today to ratify the agreement ending the nation-wide strike that has paralyzed British ports adjourned today without deciding one way or the other.

They all meet again Monday. Meanwhile the strike continues.

The men's leaders and employers reached a settlement yesterday, but the delegates have to agree before the strike can be called off.

Between now and Monday the delegates will return to their home districts and put their terms before the members.

The latter are reported generally determined to insist upon obtaining the full two shilling increase immediately. The employers offered a shilling raise now and another next year.

The meeting yesterday showed that the rank and file of the strikers are in open revolt against their leaders and the compromise offer of a shilling raise now and another after a period to be settled by further negotiation.

Strikers Suspicious.

The rank and file delegates take the position that the present offer is for the purpose of getting them back to work and demoralizing the strike after they have demonstrated their power to tie up transportation completely.

The demand that the employers be required to furnish the men with a full week's work or pay the equivalent has not been agreed to by the stevedoring companies but has been referred to a commission to be appointed by the minister of labor.

Union members from London and the northern ports are strongly against any compromise whatever as their employers have signified their willingness to pay the two-shilling increase. The absolute tie-up and the feeling that the Labor Party government can interfere for the employers only at risk of losing its whole left wing labor support gives the dockers greater confidence in the strength of their position.

Government Makeshifts.

If the settlement is rejected by strikers, and this is regarded by those who attended the conference here as a foregone conclusion, the government will institute a permit system for the unloading and transportation of food. No food will be taken from warehouses except on permits that are ratified by the strike committees of the union. The cold storage warehouse owners have already agreed to this proposal. Prices will also be fixed by the government.

The employes of the cold storage houses in London and Liverpool struck yesterday, further increasing the difficulty of food deliveries. In Liverpool they returned to work after receiving an increase of 7½ shillings per week.

More Labor Trouble.

The entire labor situation is becoming more delicate as more agreements expire. The miners federation will meet the operators on March 6 and has called a delegate conference for March 12 to consider the offers made by the operators. It is agreed in all quarters here that unless the operators grant handsome concessions a strike will be called.

The colonel spoke on "Practical Patriotism," and according to him this could only be exemplified by loud and insistent demands for the biggest and best army and navy in the world.

Following the meeting of which Captain Hopkins was chairman, Maneck K. Anklesaria, an Indian student at Northwestern, and formerly one of Mahatma Gandhi's active assistants, approached Colonel McCloskey and expressed a difference of opinion, announcing himself as opposed to militarism. Western culture was shown in its finest flower immediately. Captain Hopkins, in the best swashbuckler manner, declared that "you shall not have the honor of shaking hands with Colonel McCloskey." He denounced everyone from Lenin down to Jane Addams and told Anklesaria that he was not a citizen of this country and would never become one "because I shall send your name to the British Embassy and they will take care of you."

Anklesaria is a soft-spoken young Parsee, who participated in the great non-cooperation movement under the leadership of Gandhi which shook British rule in India to its foundations, and which culminated in Gandhi's arrest and sentence to six years' imprisonment.

His Pacifism Strained.

Anklesaria carries a scar under his chin caused by a British policeman's baton and according to his description of the incident his pacifist beliefs were strained almost to the breaking point. He is specializing in journalism at Northwestern and intends to start a national Indian newspaper on his return to his native land.

TRIBUNE STORY OF DELAYED STRIKE BRANDED FALSE

Ladies' Garment Workers Ready for Action

The settled policy of the capitalist press to take liberties with the labor movement and falsify news with the obvious intention of injuring the workers in their efforts to secure better conditions was again demonstrated yesterday when the Chicago Tribune published a yarn to the effect that the threatened strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers in Chicago was postponed for a week.

The DAILY WORKER was informed authoritatively by leaders of the union that all necessary steps had been taken to set the strike machinery in motion when the word to quit was given in the shops, but that the date for the strike, altho set, was kept secret for tactical reasons.

The DAILY WORKER reporter, after seeing the fable in the Tribune, immediately got in touch with the local office of the Ladies' Garment Workers and was informed by Manager M. Rappaport, of the Joint Board, that there was no truth whatever in the Tribune yarn, "but that nothing better can be expected from the capitalist press."

There is no let up on strike preparations according to information given to the DAILY WORKER. Halls are engaged for meetings, leaflets are ready for distribution, chairmen are appointed, but the date of the strike is known only to the strike leaders and the rumor appearing in the capitalist press that the strike will be called on such and such a date are only guesses. Of course, if they keep guessing long enough they may hit it right sometime.

The DAILY WORKER, however, is concerned with helping the union to make a success of the strike and not with competing with Old Moore's Almanac in prophecy or mind reading.

Adams, G. O. P. Head, Says Its Absurd to Fire Oily Attorney

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Republican National Committee thru its chairman today came to the defense of Attorney-General Daugherty, whose resignation Senators Lodge and Pepper, administration leaders, and Senator Wheeler, Montana democrat, are seeking because of his connection with the oil scandal.

John T. Adams, chairman of the committee, in announcing that he would issue tonight a statement defending Daugherty, said:

"It is absurd to talk of dismissing a man who has not had a full hearing and an opportunity to defend himself."

Feel Whole G. O. P. Attacked

Adams was urged to issue the statement by George B. Lockwood, secretary of the National Committee, who in a recent editorial in the National Republican, a party paper, said the attacks on Daugherty were unfair and unjust.

Rallying of the party organization's spokesmen to Daugherty's support caused a great stir among politicians today for two reasons:

1.—Because it aligned Adams, as committee head, in opposition to Pepper and Lodge, two of the party's most influential senators.

2.—Because Daugherty in his letter to Pepper yesterday said the attacks were not directed at him alone but at the whole republican administration. Adams, it was pointed out, apparently agrees with Daugherty in this view of the matter.

Strolls Into Senate Chamber.

Attorney General Daugherty, who is at sword points with senators who are trying to oust him, strolled into the Senate Chamber shortly after the session opened today.

Sitting alone on a couch in the rear, he listened to the reading of Washington's farewell address by Senator Willis, Ohio, a friend.

"I promised a month ago to come up today to hear the reading," Daugherty explained. "I am not going to talk to anybody, see anybody or confer with anybody. I just came up for the reading of the address."

Wheeler Stares at Him.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, democrat, who bitterly denounced Daugherty in a speech and is author of a resolution to investigate the Justice Department, passed in front of the attorney general. They stared at each other but there was no sign of recognition.

Senator Elkins, West Virginia, who speculated in Teapot Dome stocks, came up after a bit and sat down with Daugherty, who is charged by Wheeler with oil stock speculations. They smiled and talked.

IT'S TOUGH JOB OUSTING DAUGHERTY

LaFollette and Wheeler Join Forces for Monday's Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Senator LaFollette today took command of the Senate effort to oust Attorney General Daugherty from the cabinet.

At the same time, the belief grew in administration circles that if President Coolidge does not yield this week to the Senate's pressure on him to dismiss Daugherty, the President will stand by his attorney general until Daugherty has had a full hearing before the Senate committee.

LaFollette's first step was to arrange with Republican leaders for adoption on Monday of the Wheeler resolution to investigate Daugherty and for appointment of a committee to conduct the investigation.

Wheeler Writes to Pepper.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, author of the resolution and the others leading the investigation scoffed at the defi the attorney general issued yesterday in a letter to Senator Pepper, Pennsylvania. In that letter Daugherty said he would carry his case to the country in a speaking tour. LaFollette believes Daugherty will "not have much time for campaigning when the senate investigation gets under way the middle of next week."

Wheeler will present the report of the New York investigator who, he stated yesterday, discovered that Daugherty had speculated in oil stocks. The substance of this report has already been given President Coolidge.

The investigating committee will be headed by Senator Brookhart, Iowa, republican. Brookhart is chief aide to LaFollette.

Daugherty Pleads for Time.

When Daugherty was urged last Sunday by Senator Borah to resign at a conference in the White House with President Coolidge, he is reported to have taken the attitude that he desires to obtain the opinions of his colleagues in the cabinet. However, so far as is known, he never has consulted with the other cabinet members and the investigation was not discussed at the cabinet meeting last Tuesday.

Daugherty has made no statement concerning Senator Wheeler's charge that he speculated in oil stocks. Beyond his formal reply to Wheeler's charges and his letter to Pepper yesterday, he has said nothing.

In the Pepper letter, which was a reply to a note from Pepper urging Daugherty to resign because he was on the wrong side of the issue in the public mind, the attorney general said if he quit it would be a confession of baseless charges.

AIR PILOT GAINS NEW ALTITUDE

MacReady Climbs 41,000 Feet In Two Hours

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DAYTON, O., Feb. 22.—Lieutenant J. A. MacReady, army air pilot, today broke the world's altitude record by climbing 41,000 feet. His time was 2 hours and 3 minutes.

The previous record was 36,745 feet, set by Lecointe, French flyer, on October 30, 1923.

MacReady's record was unofficial, but the flight was held under the regulations of the Federated Aeronautic Internationale, with Orville Wright as chief observer.

In Spiral Climb.

MacReady used his famous Lepere plane for the flight, which started at 9:27 a. m.

When only nine seconds from the ground, the veteran pilot swung the nose of his ship upwards and started his spiral climb.

The weather was ideal for the test.

MacReady was dressed in a costume which left no part of his body exposed. He was covered from head to foot with a feather lined quilted flying suit, his regulation uniform, a heavy suit of woolen underwear and fur lined moccasins.

The big plane was equipped with special oxygen tanks and other special equipment to supply the pilot with life-giving air. He did not use the oxygen tank until 20,000 feet above earth.

Terribly Cold.

"I cannot tell how cold it was," MacReady said. "My thermometer broke with the mercury registering about 60 degrees below zero. It may have been much colder, for the instrument went to smash before I reached the height of my flight."

Engine Gave Trouble.

The small gathering that witnessed the start was increased to more than a thousand after the flyer had been in the air an hour.

"My engine started to giving me a little trouble, or I would still have been going upward," Macready said as soon as he could free himself to speak.

If the unofficial figure of 41,000 feet is unchanged after official calibration, MacReady will have attained his goal.

The bureau of standards in Washington will make the decision.

Victims of War Lords May Be Freed as Sop to the Jingoes

LEAVENWORTH, Kans., Feb. 22.—War department investigators today began hearing the stories of 177 men serving sentences in the federal prison here for war time offenses.

Major James Stanfield and Major Frank R. Ross, who are conducting the inquiry to determine if sentences passed on the men are too severe, said each of the prisoners sentenced for violation of regulations said that recommendations for leniency will be made in cases of men who may have been unjustly punished.

The investigation is expected to take a week.

Gives Excuse for Shooting.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 22.—Her husband started beating her two weeks after they were married last July and kept it up ever since, knocking her down and kicking her last night.

That was the explanation Mrs. Billie Wolcott, 31, gave to police today for shooting to death her husband, Frank B. Wolcott, 40.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 22.—President Obregon today approved application of Article XXXIII of the Mexican constitution against John Frederick Wright, correspondent of the Chicago Tribune for sending out alleged false information.

An official bulletin issued by the secretary of the interior refers to Wright as an enemy of Mexico.

It is understood from the bulletin that the correspondent is to be expelled from the country.

SINCLAIR MAY NOT APPEAR AS WITNESS

Also Refuse to Give Fall Chance at Immunity

(Special to The Daily Worker)

THEY CHANGE THEIR MINDS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The senate Teapot Dome probers today decided to issue subpoena at once for Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome.

The decision was reached at a conference between Senator Lenroot, Wisconsin, chairman of the committee, and Senator Walsh, Montana, chief investigator for the committee, who returned to Washington today from a brief vacation.

IT OUGHT TO BE TAKEN.

Before the conference it was intimated Sinclair might not be permitted to testify, on advice of the President's special counsel, Atlee Pomerene, and Owen J. Roberts. Walsh and Lenroot said, however, that they agreed Sinclair's testimony ought to be taken.

"We will have Sinclair on the stand within a week," said Walsh.

A subpoena will be served on Sinclair in New York today calling for his appearance early next week when the committee resumes public hearings. He will be questioned regarding stock transactions in Sinclair oil and a reported $1,000,000 "slush fund" raised by oil interests for use in Washington.

DOCUMENTS NOT MISSING.

Committee members said they had not been advised about reports that Sinclair would decline to testify as did Albert B. Fall, former interior secretary, who leased Teapot Dome to Sinclair.

Senator Walsh today denied published reports that important documents bearing on the oil case prosecutions are missing. He said the committee had the original or a photostatic copy of every document that has figured in the investigation.

EARLIER IN THE DAY.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, may be excused from testifying before the Senate committee on advice of the President's special counsel in the oil leasing cases.

Tho Sinclair is tentatively scheduled to appear Monday, Senator Lenroot, chairman of the committee, said no subpoena has been issued for him. Lenroot has talked with Sinclair by telephone, but declined to say what arrangement was made with him.

Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts, the special counsel, are understood to have suggested it might be better not to permit Sinclair to testify. They advised the committee to excuse Albert B. Fall, former interior secretary, so he could not claim immunity in court.

Return to Washington of Senator Walsh, Montana, chief investigator of the committee, is expected to remove a lid of secrecy which has covered the committee's plans since he left Washington.

Senator Walsh returned today from his brief vacation in North Carolina and immediately went into conference with chairman Lenroot and other members of the committee.

It is expected that one of the first witnesses to be heard when public hearings are resumed Monday will be the New York investigator who reported on stock transactions by attorney general Daugherty. This investigator has other evidence also.

E. B. McLean, owner of the Washington Post, is under subpoena to tell more about the $100,000 Fall got from him and later returned. McLean also is to be asked whether he knew of a $1,000,000 "slush fund" reported to have been raised by oil interests for use in Washington.

Sinclair Loses Italian Leases.

ROME, Feb. 22.—Harry F. Sinclair loses, for the time being at least, the Italian oil leases he sought here.

The Teapot Dome scandal found an echo in the Italian press, a strong section of which attacked Signor Corbone, minister of national economy for granting Sinclair's company a monopoly to drill for oil in all Italian possessions.

Signor Corbono accordingly decided not to sign the convention and to submit the matter to the personal consideration of Premier Mussolini, who is inclined to favor the Italian oil interests.

Report Wheeler Resolution.

The audit and control committee today decided to report favorably the Wheeler resolution calling for investigation of the administration of the Department of Justice.

Because of prior agreement by the Senate not to transact any business today, the resolution will be formally reported tomorrow and acted upon Monday.

MABEL COREY, STEEL KING'S DARLING, MAY BE BOURBON'S BRIDE

PARIS, Feb. 22.—"I admire Mrs. Corey greatly, but I appreciate my freedom, at least for the present," said Don Luis Ferdinand, bourbon prince and cousin of King Alfonso of Spain, referring to rumors that he is engaged to marry Mrs. Mabel Gilman Corey of New York.

Friends say the romance between the divorced wife of the former United States Steel head and the youthful prince has been ripening for 15 years, since they first met when Mrs. Corey came here on her honeymoon. Luis was but 19 in those days. He has paid discreet court to the former actress ever since, friends said, usually while dancing in Chic restaurants.

reading of Washington's farewell address in the Senate, the following statement was given out at his office in the Department of Justice:

"The attorney general went to the Capitol today to hear Senator Willis, of his own state, read George Washington's farewell address. He had suggested, when it was some time ago, that Senator Willis was to read Washington's address, that he would come up and hear him.

"The attorney general occupied a seat in the Senate Chamber. He discussed nothing pertaining to the matter which constituted the basis of his letter to Senator Pepper which was published this morning. Immediately after Senator Willis has completed the reading of the Washington address, Mr. Daugherty left the Senate Chamber, shaking hands with Senator Fess on the way out and at once departed from the Capitol without "discussing any subject with anybody."

It was understood at the Department of Justice that the attorney general will remain at his hotel apartment the remainder of the day.

Wallace May Quit; Disagrees with Cal on Farmers' Relief

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Secretary of Agriculture Wallace today refused confirmation or denial of reports that he was about to resign from the cabinet as a result of differences with President Coolidge over the administration's farm relief program. Wallace's only comment on the report was this statement:

"I have not resigned."

The reports grew out of a split which developed during the recent conference here of northwest bankers and farmers' representatives on relief measures for wheat farmers and for banks affected by depression in the wheat growing states.

President Coolidge endorsed the Norbeck-Burtness bill providing for a fund of $50,000,000 to lend to farmers to enable them to diversify crops. Wallace and some of the northwestern farmers thought he should also have approved the Norris-Sinclair bill creating an expert corporation to dispose of surplus farm products abroad. His failure to do so caused a "rump convention" of supporters of the Norris-Sinclair bill in which Wallace joined.

Poincare Saved by Narrow Margin in French Senate Vote

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 22.—By a bare majority of 16 votes, Premier Poincare has cleared the last dangerous hurdle which threatened to bring down his government. The cabinet is safe for the time being.

There was tense excitement in the senate chamber last night as the vote on electoral laws was carefully verified before being announced. Poincare was palpably nervous. He had staked the life of his cabinet on the issue that the senate must not change the electoral law as voted by the chamber of deputies.

The senate had been inclined to vote certain changes following a report of its committee. The Premier had said he would resign if the laws were not passed as they stood. By a vote of 150 to 134, the laws were passed.

What saved Poincare was the fact that the senate did not wish to precipitate a cabinet crisis at the present time, with the reparations situation at a delicate stage and renewed downfall of the franc threatened.

The vote leaves Poincare with free hands to push his financing projects and proceed with the reparations question after the experts report.

Texas Booze Agent Slain; Was Too Hot on Officials' Trail

GLENROSE, Texas, Feb. 22.—Richard Watson, prohibition enforcement officer and a star witness in the prosecution of 88 alleged liquor law violators here, was shot to death from ambush early today. Five men are held in jail in connection with the killing.

Watson had just returned from Cleburne where he had testified in the trial of E. L. Roark, former prosecutor of Somervell county.

The liquor cases were the most sensational in Texas, high officials, including a former sheriff, being accused of accepting bribes. Watson was the chief witness against the sheriff and others.

Portable Schools Must Go, Declares Chicago Council

With election time only a little way off the committee on schools of the city council of Chicago has decided to go on record as being against the use of portable schools. The board of education should also practice more economy and then they could build more schools by spending less money, say the aldermen.

"During the campaign we told the people every child should have a seat in a school house," said one alderman, with his eye on re-election. "We have not kept our promises. We have done nothing."

Alderman Lyle called the portable buildings being erected by the board of education "unsanitary makeshifts."

T. J. Bowler, alderman from the 41st Ward, was very much worried because the board of education had said that he requested that portables be erected in his district.

50 Cents a Vote, Is All Politicians Will Pay in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 22.—Price of votes in Kansas City has been cut 50 per cent, political workers charged today following registration for the city elections in April.

Police arrested a score of men who they charged with registering more than once under different names. Confessions of four of those arrested were made public. They said they had been paid 50 cents to register under assumed names and give fake addresses in "workers' hotels."

In former years the price paid by the underworld for fake registrations was $1, police said.

Poisonous Gas from Defective Furnace Causes Two Deaths

Carbon monoxide gas from a defective furnace, not ptomaine poisoning, caused the death of William I. Howland, 77, retired Chicago tea importer, and Mrs. Herta Orne, his sister-in-law, a postmortem examination today revealed.

Howland's wife and daughter, Virginia, found unconscious in another part of the Howland home, will recover, physicians said. Both were suffering from the effects of gas poisoning.

The bodies were found by Howland's son, William, Jr., on returning from a party. All four were stricken following the evening meal.

Dirt Farmers Are for May 30

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GRAND ISLAND, Neb. Feb. 22.—The small conference here of farmers and railway workers is a reflection of the political chaos that obtains in a state where Charlie Bryan, the governor and other democrats are filing in the coming primaries on both the democrat and progressive party tickets.

The state secretary of the Conference for Progressive Political Action and some of the railway union delegates are here to capture the meeting in the hope that they can hold a balance of power in the two old parties. They want to put it on record for a program of endorsing of candidates on the old party tickets.

The dirt farmers here are hostile to this attempt to steal a conference that was not called by the progressive party officially but by many individuals active in its ranks.

These delegates are heading now or in the immediate future for a farmer-labor party and participation in the May 30th conference.

This is understood by the C. P. P. A. crowd and it is making them all the more active in attempting to prevent the logical development of the Nebraska movement.

Germany Must Pay Millions in Awards for Lusitania Claims

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Germany today faced a bill of $841,000 as part of the cost of sinking the Lusitania during the war.

In making the awards in 57 cases in the Lusitania group, Judge Edwin B. Parker, umpire of the German-American mixed claims commission, denied 40 claims.

The cases came to Judge Parker as a result of disagreement between Charles P. Anderson, American commissioner, and Wilhelm Kisselbach, the German commissioner. His decision followed the decision in the Lusitania cases handed down in November, 1923, when nearly $23,000,000 was awarded to 278 claimants.

You're Greater Man Than I Am, Says Calvin to Dempsey

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—President Coolidge today conceded the nation-wide popularity to Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion.

Meeting Dempsey at the White House offices, by special arrangement, the president said he was pleased to greet a man probably more widely known than himself. The president added that Dempsey had been before the public longer.

Told by his secretary, C. Bascom Slemp, that Dempsey could knock a man out with a two-inch punch, the president remarked that was two inches more than he cared to experience.

Magnus Urges Prof. William Schaeper for Trade Commission

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Candidates for the vacancy on the Federal Trade Commission, which President Coolidge must fill as result of his withdrawal of the nomination of George B. Christian, secretary to the late President Harding were being suggested today.

Senator Magnus Johnson, Minnesota, asked the President to appoint Professor William Schaefer, formerly of the University of Minnesota.

Albert J. Oerns, advertising man of Chicago, also was indorsed in messages received at the White House.

Snow Avalanche Buries Trolley Plow and Automobile

STROUDSBURG, Pa., Feb. 22.—An enormous avalanche of snow entirely buried a trolley snow plow, its two occupants and an automobile with Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Baird, of New York, while the automobile was following the plow along the road between Delaware Water Gap and Portland, according to word received here today.

A road gang saw the slide cover the trolley and machine and rushed to the rescue. Mr. and Mrs. Baird were nearly suffocated.

Mellon Hammered by Farmer-Labor Man in Congress

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Representative Wefald, Farmer-Labor, of Minnesota, denouncing the Mellon tax plan during the house debate, said that only 131 taxpayers in Minnesota were rich enough to benefit more by Mellon's scheme than by the high surtax plan of the Democrats. Of the 124,501 income tax payers in his state in 1921, 124,370 would gain more by the Garner schedule of rates.

"Who is Secretary Mellon?" asked Wefald. "He is the man who fixes the rate of interest to be paid on government securities, of which there are outstanding $21,500,000,000. The law has given him the right to do this. By fixing the interest rate on the whole crushing burden of interest-bearing securities upon the backs of the American people. Interest is tax. He has the power to increase the tax load on the poor. If interest is placed one-half of 1% higher than it ought to be, that increases the interest load thruout the land more than $500,000,000.

"Mr. Mellon sits on the federal reserve board. They fix the discount rate and regulate credit.

"It is natural that one of the richest men in the world, having been placed in such a position of political and economic power, will try to conquer the one world that is yet left to be conquered . . . to lighten the load of the rich. That is what the Mellon bill intends to do, and nothing else."

Farrell, Pa., Police Loot W. P. Hall in Lawless Raid

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK.—Charging that the raid on Workers Party headquarters by the police of Farrell, Pa., is part of the attempt to "stop organization among the steel workers," the American Civil Liberties union announced its intention of backing the fight to recover the property confiscated by the police. The confiscated property included $176 worth of literature.

"This raid," Harry F. Ward, chairman, Civil Liberties union, declared, "is further evidence of the pressure brought to bear on local officials by the federal department of justice at the dictation of employers and other interests in West Pennsylvania to stop organization among the steel workers."

Longworth Hopes to Jockey Surtax Below 44 Per Cent

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Negotiations on a new compromise were in progress today between House republicans and progressives in a final effort to reverse House action and defeat the Garner income tax plan in the new revenue bill.

Republican Leader Longworth has offered to accept a cut in normal income tax rates from three per cent to two per cent on incomes less than $4,000, if the progressives will accept the six per cent rate on incomes above that amount, as proposed in the Mellon plan. The maximum surtax rates would be fixed at 37½ per cent under the proposed compromise. The Garner plan as adopted fixes maximum surtaxes at 44 per cent.

Longworth conceded that the plan must win at least ten additional votes to put it over.

Bosses Attempt to Clean Up Laundry Drivers' Union

After locking out the laundry drivers, the laundry bosses in Brownsville, N. Y., are doing everything possible to force the laundry drivers to give up their fight for the right to form a union. The bosses are lowering the price for laundering, but the housewives, the wives of workers, are in sympathy with the laundry drivers, and are refusing to send their wash to the scab laundries. The bosses are having a hard time finding scabs, as the laundry drivers are noted for their fighting spirit and no "gorillas" can frighten them in the fight they are making against bosses and scabs.

The DAILY WORKER carried a news item on February 15 giving Painters Local No. 631 credit for the donation of $430 to the relief of the German workers. Now it happens that no such local exists but the last figure in the local's number should be "7" instead of "1". The credit belongs to Local No. 637.

PHILA. WORKERS MOVE TO RESTORE OUSTED MEMBERS

Call on Garment Officials to Stop Disruption

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 22.—Resolutions calling on the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union officials to reinstate without conditions the expelled members were passed here today at a conference of labor organizations presided over by Chairman Neistein of the Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Sixty delegates representing twenty-eight unions and fraternal organizations were present.

A resolution was also passed calling upon Brothers Hirschberg and Birch, president and secretary respectively of the Central Labor Union and State Organizer Golden to act as a committee to help bring about the reinstatement of the expelled members.

The controversy in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union affects the entire labor movement in Philadelphia and is leading it into a serious crisis.

An executive committee was elected to continue work of conference and carry on propaganda for reinstatement and the collection of funds.

Business As Usual.

SEATTLE, Feb. 22.—Failure to read Presidents Coolidge's latest statement that the country is in a prosperous condition may have been partly responsible for the death of W. C. Nogler here. Anyway Nogler got discouraged.

Penniless, out of work, and unable to borrow money, he ended his life by turning on three unlighted gas jets and going to bed.

ASHLEIGH AGAIN DEPORTED; NOW FROM GERMANY

'Socialist' President Did Honors This Time

LONDON—(By mail)—Charles Ashleigh, who will be remembered by many American workers as the I. W. W. writer and speaker who served two and a half years in Leavenworth, and was subsequently deported, has arrived in London. He was deported by the German government from Berlin. I went to interview Ashleigh for the DAILY WORKER.

"Why did they deport you?" I asked.

"Because they did not relish having the truth written about Germany, I suppose," said Ashleigh. "I was living in Berlin, gathering material on the German situation, with the intention of compiling a series of articles for the working class press in America and Britain. I was in Germany ever since the abandonment of passive resistance in the Ruhr—I came there from Russia—and saw the swift growth of the capitalist dictatorship in Germany; and the intensification of the suffering and hunger of the workers. I had already begun to write some stuff about it, and I suppose they read it somewhere, and so swooped down on me."

It Was Quick Work.

"How did they treat you there?" I asked.

"Not particularly well. You see, they suddenly descended upon me, when I was with some friends, and packed us all into a motor truck. We were then driven, under guard, thru the daylit streets, to jail. It was an open truck, and we were in full view of the passers-by. It quite reminded me of the old Wobblie days, and made me homesick for the States!

"I was kept in jail five days—alone in a cell. They fed me a slice of black bread in the morning and another at night. For dinner I got a bowl of liquid ironically called soup by my captors. I was provided with no soap or comb, and had, of course, no change of clothing. So, when I got out, after the five days, I rather looked as if I had just made the trip from Denver to Frisco on the 'blind,' without a stop!

"They gave me a few days in which to make my preparations for leaving, and then I came to England, via Holland."

"You are used to being deported, aren't you?" I enquired.

"I ought to be!" said Comrade Ashleigh, with a laugh. "This is my third deportation. In February, 1922, I was deported from the United States. Then, in September, 1922, the authorities expelled me from India, whither I had gone to write about the native problems. And now from Germany. But I expect to go back to Germany pretty soon."

"But won't the government prevent you?" I asked.

"Not when I go back," said Ashleigh. "It will welcome me. Because it will then be the workers' Soviet Government of Germany!"

"And when are you coming back to the States?" I asked.

"Ah," said Ashleigh, "that will probably take a bit longer!"

Jurors Trying Union Upholsterers Forbidden To Read Daily Worker; Labor Paper Had Romano's Goat

The DAILY WORKER has become a part of the impressive setting surrounding the important trial of the five workers now going on before Judge Hosea Wells, in the Cook County Criminal Court, as a result of the "conspiracy" charges hurled at the Upholsterers' Union by the bosses.

The jurors must not read the DAILY WORKER, for fear that they might become prejudiced on the side of the workers. The dignified court has so ordered them. The court had not previously considered that the jurors might read the yellow press of the bosses, and become prejudiced on their side.

It all happened at the end of the noon recess Thursday when the judge asked the defendants and the lawyers in the case to come to the bar and express any objections they might have to his permitting the jury to go to their homes until the case again came into court Monday.

Labor Paper Alarms Romano.

Assistant State's Attorney Michael Romano the chief prosecutor, certainly had some fears, if not objections, to register.

"I call upon your honor," began Romano, pulling a copy of The DAILY WORKER from his pocket, "to instruct the jurors not to read The DAILY WORKER during this trial. I do not know who is responsible for this paper, or what papers the jurors may read, but I feel that the jurors ought to be warned against reading The DAILY WORKER while they are serving in this trial."

"May I see your copy of The DAILY WORKER?" asked the court, and the prosecutor handed his copy to the judge, who perused it carefully.

Nelson Attacks Tribune.

Attorney Oscar Nelson urged for the defendants that the jury be instructed not to read the Chicago Tribune.

"I will instruct the jury to refrain from reading all papers till they come to this court again Monday morning," said the judge.

The bailiff was instructed to call the jury and the next witness and the case continued on its regular course.

Poor Scab—Couldn't Work.

Earl Harris, one of the state's witnesses, testified that he had been stopped from working by union men who objected to working with scab upholsterers. He said later that he had discussed the matter in the office of Dudley Taylor with Taylor. When asked if he knew what connection Taylor had with the case of the men on trial Harris said none that he knew of only Taylor was in charge of the case as he understood it.

Louise Bernhart, a carpet sewer, said that for 17 years she had worked for Marshall Field and Company and at the end of that time she was earning $12 a week. Then she joined the union about a year ago and is today earning $30 a week. She said that she had not been interfered with when she attempted to work during the strike.

Bosses Tale of Woe.

Stephan A. Mollato, the owner of a building at Catulpa avenue and Broadway, testified that while the building was in the course of construction union painters had refused to work on the job unless non-union upholsterers left and that McKenna, who is on trial charged with conspiring with the other defendants to ruin the business of the boss upholsterers, had asked the painters to return to work with the non-union upholsterers.

John Glyn, Harry Harvey, and Harry Achinkian, all testified that they had seen stickers which asked union building employes to ask upholstery workers to show their union cards. They all admitted under cross-examination that they had been to the office of Dudley Taylor and told him all about it.

E. A. Cummings, a carpet layer, testified that he had been brought here as the result of seeing an ad in a Denver paper asking for non-union carpet layers. He secured a job thru Bronson, he said. On one occasion he was prevented from working on a job by the refusal of union men to work with him as long as he did not have a union card and was guarded by two deputy sheriffs.

During the questioning of William Boelter by Romano the judge found it necessary to stop him from asking leading questions of the witness.

The history and philosophy of boycotts and boycotting is something that a jury charged with trying labor men indicted for conspiracy to boycott should know nothing about, according to Romano, who became angry with Defense Attorney Oscar Nelson who was cross-examining James Mulcahey.

Nelson asked Mulcahey if he knew what the defendants were charged with. He said that he did not. He was asked if he knew what a boycott was. He said that he did not. He was asked if he had ever heard of the famous English landlord in Ireland named Captain Boycott who treated his tenants so cruelly that they refused to speak to or work for him. He said that he had not. Romano jumped to his feet and asked Nelson if he wished to discuss the history of Captain Boycott any further with the witness. Nelson said that his examination had closed and Romano asked the witness if he had ever heard of Captain Kidd. He said that he had not.

Several of the state's witnesses admitted under questioning by the defense lawyers that they had been active in the early part of the upholsterers' strike and that they had done picket duty. They all said that they had not been indicted for their part in attempts to make the strike successful.

Rudolph and William Boelter who had been at the meeting immediately preceding the strike where the report of the wage scale committee was read said they did not know if they had or had not heard the report and did not know if they had voted to accept the report.

All the state's witnesses admitted that before they were given jobs by the employers' association they were asked if they intended to continue their membership in the union and were given jobs only after they said they did not.

Romano indicated that he did not consider the case he had made against the five unionists on trial a very good one when he asked one of the defense attorneys if he intended to put up a defense.

Embroidery Workers New York to Open Organizing Drive

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—On Thursday, Feb. 28, there will be a mass meeting of embroidery workers in the Forward Hall, New York, as the first step in a big organization campaign which the Amalgamated Knit Goods Workers' Union has decided upon in order to organize the embroidery workers.

The conditions in the non-union shops where embroidery workers are employed have become unbearable, as the unorganized embroidery workers are working 50 hours a week, while their wages have been cut 50 per cent. The workers are living on a hunger-wage. They have appealed to the executive board of the embroidery union to take up the matter of organizing the non-union shops, and the campaign which is planned is in response to these appeals on the part of the unorganized.

Galli-Curci Makes Last Appearance in Chicago, Sunday

Galli-Curci's' last appearance in Chicago for the next two years will be Sunday evening, Feb. 24, at the Auditorium theatre, where she will give her farewell performances to the city in which she has scored such a success.

Following the close of her successful concert tour of the United States this season, Galli-Curci will sail for Europe and appear on the concert and operatic stage of the Old World for the next two years, returning to America again for further concert work.

Since her remarkable debut with the Chicago Opera Company in 1916, when she appeared as Gilda in "Rigoletto," Galli-Curci has won an enviable position in the hearts of the American people, and especially Chicago, for Chicago considers Galli-Curci as its own. No artistic success of the country has been so spectacular as the rise of the noted coloratura.

FUR FLIES AT FURRIERS' MEET; FAKERS ADJOURN

Sluggers Attack Gold, Radical Worker

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—At a meeting of Finishers' Local 15 of the Fur Workers' Union held recently in Manhattan Lyceum, New York, the workers present expressed their bitter indignation against the officers of the union who tried to whitewash the latest case of slugging. A few weeks ago the officials of Local 15 published a white-washing statement in the "Forward" and the "Fur Worker" concerning the murderous attack made by sluggers on B. Gold, a member of this local. Gold was beaten and stabbed by the sluggers. This is just another case of slugging in the Fur Workers' Union where Kaufman, the president of the union, has been making pogroms on radical members of the union.

This has been going on for a long time, and yet the criminal policy is allowed to continue. The gangsters in control of the Fur Workers' Union disregard the protests of the masses of fur workers and they are going right ahead in their assaults on those who show any kind of opposition to their terrorist rule.

The indignation at the meeting of Local 15 was so much the greater in view of the fact that those who signed the statement in the press were not present when the attack was made upon Gold.

When the chairman saw that the membership was in no peaceful mood, and when the indignation of those present grew to high tension, he declared the meeting adjourned, to save the officials from the ire of the workers.

German Fascisti Prohibit Workers' Relief Mass Meeting

The conference of the German section of the International Workers Aid that was to be held publicly in the city hall of Berlin, Germany, Jan. 27, was prohibited by the military authorities.

Frau Mathilde Wurm, Socialist member of the Reichstag, and one of the leaders of the relief work, took the matter up with the District Army Commander who finally agreed to allow the regular delegates to meet in the Berlin office of the International Workers Aid, but kept the ban on the public meeting.

Willi Munzenberg reported substantial progress in feeding hungry working class children and stated that contributions were coming in from England, France, America and other countries.

Frau Dr. Schumann who was a delegate to the conference of the International Workers Aid in England which was recently held, reported that 25 official representatives of the Labor Party took part in the conference. A resolution protesting against the police interference was adopted.

DINNER PAIL EPICS

By BILL LLOYD

THERE seems to be a lotta news about the oil in Sinclair's cruse. It yusta be in Teapot Dome, before A. Fall improved his home and took an aim at the main chance by stocking up his cattle ranch. We've surely got, it seems to me, a awful dose of normalcy.

There's Denby, he has quit his post, well browned and scorched by senate's roast. And McAdoo, who took a fee that otta paid, it seems to me, for all the old and modern law that the supreme court ever saw, finds he is richer but much sadder, and hurries to kick down the ladder by which he climbed, and bolts away, but absent-mind'ly kept the pay. He's sorry for Doheny's sin but don't disgorge Doheny's tin.

There must be money in oil deals, especially when a feller steals what's in the ground for naval use, while Fall and Denby make excuse. There must be money in the pot when oil kings hand out such a lot. The Denver and Chicago Posts were lined up with the other hosts who didn't let their right hand know how full the left one wuz of dough. Of course they tell the guys what's dense it didn't buy their influence. It is a thing we've oftun told, that editors aint boug'ht with gold.

If I'd been justis of the piece, I might of got in on the lease. Like Creel, I am a writing guy, and yet somehow they passed me by.

The Lord regards each falling sparrow; I've oil enough for my wheel-barrow. If short of oil, why need be sore? Our army's rigged to fight for more.

JEWISH WORKERS HOLD BAZAAR FOR RUSSIAN ORPHANS

Half Million Orphans Left in Russia

A bazaar and exhibition for the orphan institutions of Soviet Russia will be held at the Ashland Auditorium on the dates of March 20, 21, 22, and 23, 1924. It will be held under the auspices of the Jewish Workers Relief Committee.

There are about half a million orphans left in Russia and the Ukraine after the bloody pogroms, counter revolutions and interventions. The workers in Russia have built institutions for them, where they find shelter and food and clothing.

The Jewish Workers Relief Committee of America has sent to them tens of thousands of dollars to support them and strengthen their hands in this wonderful work. To continue this work the Jewish Workers Relief Committee of Chicago is arranging the bazaar and exhibition and appeals to every worker to support them in this undertaking.

Our Railroad Empire

In the welter of political recriminations and charges now burdening the governmental structure of the country there is coming to the surface a great contest against powerful Western railroad interests that should receive the undivided attention of the workers and farmers of the country.

The Departments of Agriculture and Interior are challenging the right of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to acquire approximately three million acres of Government land in Idaho, Montana, and Washington, claimed by the rail magnates under the provisions of the land grants made by Congress in 1864 and 1870. The demand of the company is further strengthened by a decision of the Supreme Court in 1921 that "the Government could not reserve as against the railway company any of the land" within certain specified limits. Much of the land in dispute is heavily forested and the Government has spent vast sums in protecting and administering it.

These lands were given away to the "builders of the continent" to help them construct railways. The Northern Pacific has received more than 136 million dollars from the sale of these lands, tho the cost of the road's construction has not exceeded seventy million dollars to date. Besides, the railroad has failed to build 1,507 miles of its line within the time specified by the grant. Thus, if the Government were really anxious to enforce its own law the granted lands would be subject to immediate forfeiture.

But let no one have any misgivings as to what the Government will do. The belated attempts of Wallace and Work to save this vast tract of land from the railway kings is in all likelihood an eleventh hour political gesture to help the Administration "make up its record" for the coming election campaign and counteract some of the oil stench.

The story of the development of American railways is a story of the government's giving away tremendous areas of land to the railroad capitalists. The free land gifts, thru Federal and Texas grants, total 312,000 square miles—an area in excess of the six New England States, the five Northern Atlantic States, the three Southern Atlantic States, and the District of Columbia. The land given away to the railway corporations by the Government is 100,000 square miles in excess of the area of Germany or France before the war.

Today, these gigantic empires of land are part of the investment of the railroad capitalists. Today, the workers have to pay the capitalists high tribute in low wages, huge dividends, intolerable working conditions in order to guarantee these captains of transportation a "fair" rate of profit. Today the farmers must pay exorbitant freight rates to save the capitalists from losses on their heavily inflated investments, a large portion of which is this very land belonging to the masses of the country and given away for nothing to the railway barons.

And today the Government of the United States is putting at the disposal of these capitalists who have looted the country as no other employers have in the history of the nation all its military, judicial, and financial power to guarantee fabulous profits to the rail corporations and to perpetuate unbearable freight rates for the farmers and open-shop conditions for the workers.

Revealed in the light of these facts the suit of the Departments of Agriculture and Interior against the Northern Pacific does not bring much hope to the working masses.

Church and Court

The church is one of the bulwarks of capitalist society. Another is the judiciary. Both are looked on with contempt by the class conscious elements among the workingclass, with suspicion mingled with awe by a still larger section and with awe mixed with terror by the great majority of the workers.

The confidence which the church and the courts once enjoyed among the workers is being constantly shaken by incidents in which both are shown up as hollow mockeries of religion and justice.

The church is ostensibly established and supported for the purpose of maintaining the spiritual atmosphere at the proper degree of temperature in order to render the people eligible for entry into the celestial kingdom when they depart from this mundane sphere.

The courts cloak themselves in the robes of respectability, claim they are above temptation and hold the scales of justice evenly, for rich and poor, clerical and lay.

As to the church and its piety. During the past decade clergymen have supplied the yellow press with the snappiest copy. These soldiers of the Lord have added hundreds of thousands of copies to the circulation of the salacious journals that specialize in news with a sex flavor.

It has not yet developed that they were urged on in their amorous adventures by circulation managers with a touch of originality, but certain it is that those gentlemen whose business it is to secure new readers have slept easier of nights thanks to the gay activities of the servants of Jehovah.

The case of a local clergyman with a wealthy congregation was one of the most enticing tid bits of scandal arising out of the sex relationship that the good citizens of this country had the pleasure of reading for many a day. The good preacher bears a saintly look. He also has a wife. So had a certain Mr. Leland. Mrs. Leland had Godly thoughts so she sallied forth to one of the Deity's lieutenants for consolation.

And this is where the party began to get rough if we are to believe the testimony of Mrs. Leland given in court before Judge Foell. She was definite about the history of the case, the details of which were given as much space in the capitalist press as the testimony of Edwin Doheny of Teapot Dome fame. The man of God was at least as human as any man could be and perhaps more so than many. Mr. Leland was justifiably angry when he heard of it and sued for divorce.

And here is where it resembled the oil inquiry in Washington. As soon as the first stone was cast at Dr. Case, the alleged culprit, outraged husbands began to appear with bricks which were hurled with vigor at the holy man. It looked like a clear case against him. There were plenty of bricks.

Yet, the judge, instead of granting the injured husband a divorce, got quite angry and threw the case out of court, exonerated Dr. Case, and declared that Mrs. Leland was suffering from delusions, or words to that effect.

The Chicago Tribune, organ of militant imperialism, congratulated Judge Foell on the decision. The reputation of the preacher could not survive an adverse decision and clergymen are too valuable to the capitalist system to allow half a dozen illicit love affairs to impair their usefulness. In this instance—and it is only one of many—the court and the church put up a united front against the common enemy. Capitalist courts and capitalist churches, both live on the system. They must hang together or hang separately.

The Roosevelt Name

Frantic efforts are being made by the Elder Statesmen of the Republican Party to salvage the name of Roosevelt from the wreckage of the present administration.

Old "Teddy" had a taking way with him. Perhaps no more ignorant mountebank ever appeared on the stage of American political life and succeeded in attaining the highest office in the power of the bourgeoisie to give, than Theodore Roosevelt, unless it might be the present president incumbent by the Grace of God and poisoned shell fish.

While Theodore Roosevelt was a dyed-in-the-wool faker and reactionary, but by the clever use of buncombe and the personality of a bartender he was able to fool a considerable portion of the American workingclass and that vague element known as the "people," that he was a progressive. He had even the bosses scared for a little while but not for long. He was their useful and willing tool.

Roosevelt is dead but his progressive reputation lives after him. The master class cleverly nourish it. Besides leaving a reputation as an asset to the Republican Party he also left a few sons, who appear just now to be more of a liability. On account of the name they have been taken care of by the G. O. P. Teddy's namesake, young Theodore was planted in the navy department as Assistant Secretary. He was groomed for a higher position and kept primed for use in the event of some great emergency.

But tho chance was kind to young Theodore nature was cruel. He is not gifted with brain or brawn and did not even have the sagacity to keep his skirts clear of the oil that has squirted its evil way over the White House and ruined several reputations, already rather shady it is true. Roosevelt had he been a chip of the old block could jump out of the Teapot, grind his teeth, wave his club and go after the evil doers like one of his jungle ancestors, scouting around for his breakfast.

Alas, instead of the Terrible Teddy, there comes forth from the pen of the political cartoonist the picture of a puny weakling, marching toward the cabinet exit in the protecting shadow of the towering and burly grafter Harry M. Daugherty.

It can be truthfully said that Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. had a bright future before him in the Republican party but he sold his birthright for a paltry oil can.

If the attempt of the British dockers' union officials to end the strike can be taken as evidence it appears that the motto of officialdom is: The more successful a strike the more reason we should compromise on demands. As in this country, the membership is having more trouble with their officers than with the employers.

It is an interesting commodity conflict that is presented by the spectacle of Lodge, senator for the textile interests, and Pepper, senator for the steel interests, demanding the resignation of Daugherty, attorney-general for the oil interests.

Why doesn't Attorney-General Daugherty get out an injunction restraining the senate from taking his job away from him?

CANDLING THE C. P. P. A.

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

THE round of investigation halts for the week-end and as the dust settles and quiet impends it is possible to estimate the casualties suffered and the terrain lost or gained by the fire of charges, counter-charges, accusations and denials that the press reports to a palpitating public.

Outside the immediate zone of the struggle, a non-combatant within every meaning of the term, the Conference for Progressive Political Action has suffered vicariously but severely. Its spiritual leader, Wm. G. McAdoo, venturing into the combat area, received the fire of both forces and retired in great disorder, blood and oil dripping from a thousand wounds.

Gathered in St. Louis, to rally the faithful to the McAdoo standard, the Conference for Progressive Political Action found the name of its leader on the casualty list. Prepared to serve under no other banner, it met, mourned and went home after calling another meeting for Cleveland for lack of something better to do.

In the meantime, careful nursing had restored McAdoo to activity if not to health.

Hope Revives.

The more obvious oiliness of others whose love for lucre had brought them to the edge of the Teapot and into which they slipped, gave encouragement to the McAdoo clan. Perhaps the chieftain was not so badly wounded after all.

The spark of hope, almost extinguished, began to glow again in the breast of the Conference for Progressive Political Action. To what unkind critics referred to as the McAdoo candling conference in the Great Northern Hotel, came the still downcast but more hopeful spokesmen of the railway unions.

The candling completed, it was discovered that the McAdoo albuminous content was somewhat addled by oil; undeterred by this discovery leaders of the Conference for Progressive Political Action present made a few quick comparisons and announced that addled or not McAdoo was not addled to the extent that other candidates were.

It was a noble decision and tears were in the McAdoo voice as he referred to their loyalty in accepting the "command" to serve, delivered by leaders of organized workers, rallying to an open and avowed supporter of the blackest labor-hating interests in America.

McAdoo Messiahs.

What term is too approbrious to characterize labor officials like B. M. Jewell, head of the railway employes department of the A. F. of L., Ryan, head of the Railway Carmen, Franklin, head of the Boilermakers Union, Manion, head of the Railway Telegraphers, Sheppard of the Railway Conductors, Flojadal of the Maintenance of Way Brotherhood, Fitzgerald of the Railway Clerks, Healy of the Firemen and Oilers, Wharton of the International Association of Machinists and others who sign a resolution expressing confidence in McAdoo with the full knowledge gained from his own statement that he was employed by Doheny to foment a war against the workers and peasants of Mexico, so that his paymasters could seize the Mexican oil lands?

What of Wm. Johnson, head of the Machinists Union, who issues an apology because some newspapers quoted him as saying that McAdoo was unavailable as a candidate because of his oil connections?

What of this whole crew of labor officials who control the Conference for Progressive Political Action in the interest of the parties of American capitalism and who, when their chosen candidate in the democrat party is found to be on the payroll of oil companies in a particularly vile capacity, apologise for his actions, stall for time and finally end by endorsing him on behalf of the organized workers.

Some Illusions Shattered.

It has been said by persons more charitable than discerning that these labor officials were honest in their convictions; that in good time, when the opportunity presented itself, they would lead their followers into a political party independent of the capitalist parties; that they moved slowly because they felt the weight of great responsibilities. It was even said that these labor officials would themselves launch a great mass party of the workers and farmers of America.

They have been the petted darlings of American liberalism; the intelligentsia who hang about the fringe of labor movement and write their collected impressions have been greatly impressed of late with the new spirit that animates labor union officialdom.

The Chicago conference which renovated McAdoo gives the lie to all these statements.

The officialdom of the Conference for Progressive Political Action has been shown to belong to the right wing of the democrat party; its officialdom has announced to the world that its policy is the Gompers policy of getting something for labor officials in the shape of appointments to fat jobs while the rank and file fights injunctions issued and wars declared by the successful candidates whom their officials fawn upon.

The endorsement of McAdoo has shown the Conference for Progressive Political Action to be part and parcel of the Gompers machine, its progressivism to be a sham and its inner infamy to exceed anything hinted at by the most bitter critic of the American Federation of Labor.

Previous Servitude.

We say here and now that the crimes perpetrated upon the American workers during the world war by the Wilson administration of which labor union officialdom was a part were of such an atrocious character, their connivance in the gigantic looting schemes so flagrant, their betrayal of the active unionists in cooperation with the department of justice so infamous, that they dare not, unless confronted by a greater danger, desert the parties of the employers.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action since the McAdoo endorsement stands convicted before the American workers and farmers as an agency for sabotaging the farmer-labor party movement; an organization dominated by officials whose stomachs are so strong that the crudest of crude oil does not act as a purge; an organization whose mission is to confuse, demoralize and finally sell out to the lords of oil, steel, coal, transportation and credit, the men and women who pay their salaries.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action waits now for payment for its treason. It hopes that one or the other or perhaps both of the capitalist parties will incorporate planks in their platforms or nominate candidates that can be held up as concessions to labor.

They join with the employers and bankers in slandering the organizers of a farmer-labor party and in whitewashing the spokesmen of American capitalism at whose names the American people spit.

What Must Be Done.

There is one thing that may force these capitalist party politicians in the labor movement to acknowledge their attempts at betrayal and discontinue their efforts to sabotage the formation of a mass party of workers and farmers. If the May 30 Farmer-Labor convention in St. Paul is a great demonstration of the disgust with and distrust of the parties of American capitalism on the part of great sections of the workers and farmers the Cleveland meeting of the Conference for Progressive Political Action may be swung into the movement.

Only mass pressure can accomplish this.

For the organization of a great mass convention on May 30 that will launch a great party of workers and farmers every nerve must be strained by those who understand that the time for such a movement is here and is prevented only by the treason of ignorant and corrupt officials.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action must not be allowed to consummate its open and obvious plans for wrecking the May 30 convention and making the Cleveland conference a ratification meeting for McAdoo or some other representative of oil, steel, transportation and banking.

Original Director Uses His Hat as Well as His Head

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Musical education of the finest sort is contained in the programs of the children's concerts of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, one of which was played on the afternoon of February 21, at Orchestra Hall. For these concerts a screen is erected in back of the orchestra, and pictures of the composers and notated excerpt of the music to be played are projected onto it. Mr. Stock acts as teacher and musical director and general factotum, saying a few words before the performance of each number, and making the children sing the musical phrases on the screen before them.

The concert last Thursday opened with the stirring rythym of Chopin's "Military Polonaise." Following this was the light-hearted and jovial overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart.

To acquaint the children with the more serious forms of orchestra music, Mr. Stock has been playing at each concert of past months one movement of Beethoven's fifth symphony. By February the joyous and triumphant last movement had been reached. Stock then threw on the screen the theme of the very first bars of the symphony and asked his audience if they recognized it. Immediately there chorused from all over the house the words "I lost my hat." The explanation is that, in order to enable the children to remember certain themes, the director frequently gives them a profoundly foolish verbal text with which to sing it. And with these texts they probably never will forget the phrases to which they are set.

Then came a bit of jingoism, when the orchestra played and the audience sang "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." One cannot help but think that "A better world's in birth" is a better line for children to sing than "The Army and Navy forever."

Two lighter works of modern composers, Grainger and Sowerby, followed, "Molly on the Shore" and "The Irish Washerwoman," and the concert closed with the tarentella from Rubinstein's suite, "The Costume Ball."

For the next children's concert, which will be played on March 6, and repeated on March 20, at Orchestra Hall, an all Saint-Saens program is announced. The French composer's "Carnival of Animals," a suite in fourteen movements, descriptive of all sorts of beasts from pianists and fossils to elephants and royal lions, will be played, and the march from his Algerian suite, and the tone poem "The Spinning Wheel of Omphale."

FORGET THOSE DEBTS

By SCOTT NEARING
(Federated Press Staff Writer.)

Many an American farmer and worker worries about his debts. He cannot pay them. He cannot shake them off. They dog his steps and drive him mad. Is there no way out?

Yes, there is one perfectly simple way—the Russian way of 1917; the German way of 1923. He can forget them!

"Another matter of great significance is the disposition of Germany's debts," writes Nicholas Roosevelt in the Annalist for Feb. 4, 1924. "There appears to be no doubt that all government, state and municipal debts have been wiped out, thus leaving Germany free from bonded indebtedness. The small sums required to restore the nation's finances will, therefore, be the only debt charges on the government besides the reparations.

"There is obviously a great advantage for the Germans. There is also little doubt that the majority of private debts have been wiped out. . . . Debts, mortgages and loans of all kinds have been wiped off the slate, so that German corporations and individuals, like the German government, will be able to start work with a clean slate."

"This is obviously a great advantage for the Germans." And for the Americans?

What are debts, but the means whereby the owner of property is able to live, without work, on the labor of some fellow man?

In this respect, government bonds do not differ in any way from private mortgages. The bondholder draws his interest and lives on the fat of the land. The farmers and workers produce and pay.

Germany seems to be starting over again. The debts are forgotten. A new leaf is turned. Will it take another world war to teach equal wisdom to the people of the United States?

Workers Blown to Bits by Locomotive; Investigation Begun

MOROCCO, Ind., Feb. 22.—An investigation of the explosion of a locomotive on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad near here yesterday, which cost two lives, was started today by Silverton Breed, a government inspector.

Work Daily for "The Daily!"

World Language Movement Injured by "Ido," He Says

To the DAILY WORKER:—The article in Tuesday's number of the DAILY WORKER, entitled "To Provide the World's Workers with Common Tongue," needs a little correction. In the first place there has as yet been no working class congress of Ido. The Ido congress at Cassel last August rallied all Idists, workers and capitalists, and numbered only 160 delegates. True enough, there were special sittings of the so-called Communist Ido Federation, but there were only 35 or 40 persons present, and many of them call themselves anarchists in their own country. The Communist Ido Federation exists mainly on paper.

The article ignores the fact that in the same city of Cassel was also held an exclusive workers' congress of Esperanto with 252 delegates present. This was the third official congress of the Proletarian Esperanto Association, called "Sennacieca Asocio Tutmonda" (Nationless World Association), having three thousand members and publishing the monthly 20-page magazine, "Sennacieca Revuo," with a circulation of 8,000. The Ido workers cannot show half as much.

In the second place, the statement that the Ido Federation does not work for any special system of language but only for the idea in general is false on the face of it. For the Idists are for their own language.

It is evident that we can have only one international language. Now we have at least half a dozen different schemes. How will the average worker know the difference? No, these rival schemes have no right at all to exist, unless they can prove two things: First, they must prove that a perfection of Esperanto is necessary; second, they must prove that Ido (or some other scheme) is such a perfected language, more perfect than Esperanto. The first will be impossible to prove in face of the great amount of literature we possess in Esperanto, of all kinds, even scientific, philosophical and poetry. The second will also be impossible to prove, for the same reason. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, there is no use of discussion.

Protect the Foreign Born!

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

Doubts are expressed in England that the Prince of Wales will ever ascend the British throne. If the lad keeps on descending from his horse at the present rate it is only a question of time until he meets with an accident. Aside from that Miss Minnie Pallister, who was the election agent to Ramsay MacDonald in Aberavon in the recent general election, declares that the improbability of the Prince's filling his father's chair was not due to any hostile sentiment against him so much as to the fact that the country is growing up and sloughing off the old institutions, including the monarchy.

* * *

In the meantime Ramsay MacDonald dines with the king and queen to prove to the satisfaction of the royal family that yellow socialism does not eat its soup with a knife or wipe its nose with the tail of its coat. British yellow socialism is quite respectable. It believes in evolution. Perhaps King George may join the British Labor Party and turn over the palace to the labor ministers for use during week ends.

Japan is learning fast. Just as Harry M. Daugherty is getting ready to put on his hat and coat and go back to his wigwam the Daugherties of the Mikado's realm have discovered a Communist plot to overthrow the Empire. The "plotters" are a group of college professors. Perhaps a little more radical than Nicholas Murray Butler. The Japanese sleuths discovered that the young lad who made an attempt on the life of the Crown Prince was the dupe of those professors. They have not yet been accused of being responsible. No doubt that will be developed during the trial. As William J. Burns would say, "startling disclosures will be made, revealing underground plots, financed by——" That was a real underground plot. The plot was "nipped in the bud." Almost word for word the description given by the "Great Defective" of his squelching of several attempts to topple the White House before the republican administration had a chance to sell it out. They are learning in Japan. We may look forward to a Teapot Dome scandal in Nippon.

McAdoo will be held to a strict availability by his friends' general opinion to the contrary. Some of them still call him McAdoo, others McAdid and still others McAdone. Among the latter is Otto Branstetter, former secretary of the treasury in the bankrupt socialist party. This was his comment on McAdoo's connections with Doheny: "There seems to have been nothing illegal in McAdoo's service to the Doheny interests, but there is a question of the propriety of a former cabinet officer, after leaving his post accepting employment with such interests and then asking to be nominated for President." Well said, Otto! Just like a yellow socialist. There is nothing illegal in selling one's ability to bribe the Mexican government to violate the constitution in behalf of American oil interests! It seems the big blunder that McAdoo was guilty of is, that he did not make a donation of part of the Doheny dough to the socialist party.

Labor fakers are the same all the world over. When General Hell and Damnation Dawes, head of the Central Trust of Chicago, went to Germany to investigate the practicability of making a loan to the capitalists of that country he called into his presence Peter Grassman, vice-president of the German Federation of Trade Unions. He talked with the labor leader over the German workers attitude toward the eight-hour day. When the inquiry was over Dawes gave Grassman a hearty handshake. We wonder if anything stuck to the labor faker's mitt!

* * *

Grassman told Dawes that there was no chance for Communism in Germany as the rank and file rejected Sovietism. He believed that the existing vestiges of radicalism in Germany would disappear with the improvement of social conditions. How sweet this language must have sounded to the ears of the head of the Minute Men of the Constitution, the famous open-shop organization! Now, this man Grassman is of that political tribe known as socialist in Germany. Is it any wonder that the working class of Europe are losing faith in those traitors and are turning to the Communists for leadership? Grassman prefers the capitalist system that has brought the German workers to the brink of starvation, to Communism, because under the former he can sell the workers to the capitalists.

The Russian Soviet Republic is adopting new tactics, observes the Chicago Tribune in an editorial. The statement was elicited by the signing of the Italo-Russian treaty in Moscow under the watchful eye of a camera. The Russian Communists are charged with using the occasion for propaganda purposes. Well, what of it? The Tribune periodically publishes fifteen-year-old pictures of riots under new date lines and new titles showing that a revolution has broken out in Moscow and that the Red Army is shooting up the Kremlin. Why not tolerate a little truth once in a while, worthy organ of capitalism?

For Recognition of Soviet Russia!

The First Time In History

The First Time In History. Two Years of Russia's New Life. By Anna Louise Strong, with Introduction by Leon Trotzky; published by Boni & Liveright. $2.00.

* * * *

SO MANY books are being written and published about Soviet Russia and the Russian Revolution that one tends to pick up each new arrival on the book market with a sort of suspicion that this is merely another rehash of the same old stories, the same old yarns.

We must admit that we were pleasantly surprised in the book just written by Anna Louise Strong. "The First Time in History" is especially valuable because it is one of the few authentic analyses of the recent developments in Soviet Russia. Miss Strong mainly deals with Russia's efforts at reconstruction. The new economic policy, the numerous difficult problems of rebuilding the country after years of war and counter revolution, the complicated social issues arising from the Soviet government's inheritance of a people degraded and oppressed for centuries, these are the subjects which weave the story of "The First Time in History."

As Comrade Trotzky says in his preface to this book, "Under the prose of the Nep (New Economic Policy), as well as under the dramatic events of the civil war, she was able to see, or perhaps at the very beginning, merely to feel—the intense, stubborn, uncompromising struggle against age-long slavery, darkness, barbarism for new higher forms of life."

Anna Louise Strong deals with her difficult subject matter in an admirable way. The approach is most realistic. "In the nations of the West they speak of the new economic policy as Russia's return to capitalism. In Russia they call it 'the new road to Communism.' It is a road that they know will take them many years. Already in two years they have advanced farther than they hoped when they began." This is the spirit of Miss Strong in her treatment of the period of August, 1921-December, 1923—two of the most trying years in the life of the Soviet Republic of Russia.

Anna Louise Strong has had an opportunity to see Soviet Russia at first hand. Her findings and conclusions are based on her own careful observations.

Among the subjects dealt with in "The First Time in History," are the role of money in Russia, "The Story of Russian Oil," the housing and agricultural questions, "The War with Alcohol," "Do the Jews Rule Russia," "The Church Revolution," and "Education in Soviet Russia."

The significance of Soviet Russia's holding the balance of power in the present world struggle cannot be over-estimated and the author has fortunately taken full cognizance of it. The vital point of difference between the Soviet method of dealing with the oil situation and the imperialist capitalist method is made very clear by Miss Strong. The author shows how Soviet Russia has gotten out of the stage of stocks and bonds in oil and into the realm of workingmen and engineers.

The treatment of the agricultural situation in Russia is especially enlightening. The author presents a most interesting reaction of a group of American agriculturists led by Harold M. Ware to the effect that the farmers of Russia had the best chance of all the farmers to pull out of the great international agricultural crisis that has followed the war.

Soviet Russia's terrific struggle with illiteracy is treated in a very vivid manner and the incomparable difficulties confronting the first Workers' and Farmers' Republic are brought home in the citation of many facts about Russia's educational conditions. We need but mention the fact that schools in Russia are conducted in no less than sixty languages.

In closing, we present the author's fundamental attitude in order to give the reader the message of the book.

"There have been many revolutions in history, each with its tragic dignity, its cruelties, its power released. But never has there been a great organization, in control of the economic as well as of the political resources of a nation, planning steadily thru the prose of daily life a future embracing many lands and decades, learning from mistakes, changing methods but not aims, controlling press and education and law and industry as tools to its purpose. . . . This is the common consciousness in action, crude, half-organized and inefficient, but the first time in history."

Thruout her story Miss Strong maintains the reader's interest unflagging. The book is a worthwhile contribution to the literature on Soviet Russia. It is particularly valuable as bringing up to date the most recent phases of reconstruction in the Soviet Republic.

The Changing Political Situation in the U. S.

By EARL R. BROWDER

ALL political forces in the United States have been maneuvering for position in the coming presidential election. But within the past few weeks unforseen events have thrown confusion over the scene, bringing well-laid plans to grief and many hopeful candidates heartache. Graft exposures, with ramifications in the various departments of the government, including the Treasury and Cabinets of two administrations hitting republican and democratic parties almost equally, are having political effects that, without touching fundamental issues, are reaching wide and deep. Complicating the situation, a halt in the downward trend of industry of a more or less temporary nature, is definitely making itself felt.

The Economic Situation.

Without doubt the United States is headed towards a deep-going industrial crisis. The analysis upon which this judgment is based has been gone over many times and is doubtless correct. It would be a mistake, however, particularly in judging the effects of this trend upon the political events of this year, to conclude that it will be fully felt in the next few months. Statistics for December and January indicate that this development is being halted by a temporary counter-movement upward.

Evidence that the financial interests, with an eye to the political situation, are stimulating this upward tendency, is seen in the increase in the unfilled orders for steel reported in December and January, and in the production of pig iron, while the railroads are still undecided upon the proposed extension and replacement program of from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. The Ford industry announces plant extensions for 1924 amounting to $150,000,000; building permits issued in January, according to a report of S. W. Straus & Co., of Chicago, authorities, show an advance of 10 per cent over a year ago, altho the forecast for the entire year is 10 per cent below 1923. The general trend is still downward, but at a decidedly slower pace, and in view of the development in steel and building may turn upward and stand at the present level until next fall and winter. The effect of the stimulation of the basic industries is to buoy up production of general consumption, check the threatening unemployment, slow down the wage-cutting campaign, and relieve the financial pressure upon the middle class (outside agriculture) which is an important factor in the "third party" movement in the present political struggle.

The Political Situation.

Thirty days ago the political line-up seemed to be crystallized in fairly definite directions. The republican party was tightly in the grip of finance capital, with Coolidge as the anointed standard bearer; the LaFollette group faced the alternative of complete submission or a split. Within the democratic party a labor-progressive group was campaigning for McAdoo, son-in-law of the late Woodrow Wilson, with hopes of capturing the democratic nomination. The Socialist party (or what is left of it) was in alliance with the Conference for Progressive Political Action, supporters of McAdoo, afraid to cut loose from this last port of refuge, and hoping against hope that the C. P. P. A. would break with the capitalist parties. The Farmer-Labor party forces, including its extreme left, the Communists in the Workers Party, and its right, the followers of LaFollette outside the republican ranks, had agreed upon a call for a national convention on May 30th.

Under pressure of the severe agricultural crisis and the threatening breakdown in industry, the likelihood was present of a serious split in the republican party, with LaFollette leading the discontented agrarians, petty bourgeoisie, and the Farmer-Labor Party mass movement, in a "third party." Should McAdoo then have been defeated in the democratic convention many of his followers would have swung over to the LaFollette movement, even including the C. P. P. A. (led by the railroad union officialdom) if the democratic nominees proved to be distinctly reactionary. LaFollette was playing very carefully, quite evidently with such a development in mind.

During the last half of 1923, and early in January, this was the trend of political development. The economic upturn, described above, was promising to slow it down a bit, but no major changes were in prospect, until the rapid succession of graft exposures broke in Washington. There were the disclosures of $800,000 "winnings" of General Leonard Wood's son on the stock exchange thru transactions carried on by cable from the Philippines; the uncovering of huge graft in the Veterans' Bureau; the partial disclosure of forgery of millions in Liberty Bonds in the Treasury Department; and the culmination, the Teapot Dome naval reserve oil scandals, with revelation of wholesale purchase of cabinet members and a thousand rumors of shady transactions in all parties and circles of the bourgeoisie. All political alignments were thrown into confusion and a mad scrambe began.

Political "prophets" in many camps, from the liberal Villard, and the socialists, Berger and Hillquit, to labor leaders in the Farmer-Labor movement, hailed the storm as a signal for the LaFollette split in the republican party. The "third party" was inevitable, so they thought; only a miracle could prevent it. One and all they put their hopes upon LaFollette leading all the forces of revolt to Armageddon in November.

But politics is not so simple, and the men who lead various sections of the labor and farmer forces are not so courageous, that a large breakaway from the republican and democratic parties can be prophesied safely. LaFollette did not announce his adhesion to the May 30th Convention in St. Paul; on the contrary he inspired a move to postpone that gathering. The Conference for Progressive Political Action did not endorse McAdoo, because of his newly acquired oil taint, but neither did it commit itself either to LaFollette or to May 30th, and its vague talk of a "third party" was evidently but a stop-gap to fill in a lack of any policy.

The net results of the Teapot bomb seem to be: McAdoo was seriously damaged, and his labor following is now wavering uncertainly between him and LaFollette; his chances of the democratic nomination are not so good as they were. LaFollette has received new hopes of becoming the republican nominee, and thus a republican president, thru the blow delivered Coolidge by the scandals; the chance of his splitting has been reduced to the extent that the republican machine has been demoralized by the shake-up. LaFollette is directing all his forces toward obtaining the republican nomination in June; or failing in this to get concessions in the shape of platform planks that will satisfy his followers, he is the one candidate in the capitalist parties that gained strength from the Teapot being spilled.

Within the Labor Movement.

Until February 12th, the Farmer-Labor Convention agreed upon for May 30th, at St. Paul, was the only rallying center for the organizations wishing to unite for the presidential election against the republican and democratic parties. The elimination of McAdoo, who was slated for the endorsement of the Conference for Progressive Political Action on that date in St. Louis, created the situation that forced the "progressive" leaders on February 12th, to talk of a "third party" and call a conference in Cleveland, for July 4th, "to consider the question of presidential candidates."

Critical Situation.

This has created a dangerous situation for the Farmer-Labor movement. Both the LaFollette and McAdoo forces are now out to knife the May 30th convention, wishing to use the threat of a later split to force consideration for their old-party conventions, and hoping to split the Farmer-Labor forces and drag away sections for the republican or democratic party if LaFollette or McAdoo obtain nomination. There is little guarantee that July 4th will be anything but another great betrayal of the farmers and workers, and there are many new reasons to expect that it will be such a betrayal.

Dangerous as the situation is for the Farmer-Labor movement, it forces one development that is favorable for the left-wing. All the class-conscious elements among the workers and farmers can be made to see the great danger and to fight for the holding of the May 30th convention as the only safeguard and guarantee of the Farmer-Labor movement against betrayal, while the door to July 4th can still be left open for the possibility of that gathering breaking with the old parties. Thus we are now witnessing, in the line-up for and against May 30th, the beginning of the true class division between the representatives of the Farmer-Labor class party on the one hand, and the petty-bourgeois and capitalist-lackey elements on the other.

The struggle for a class party of the farmers and workers in the United States has thus, due in large measure to the effects of the Teapot being upset and dripping oil over the political landscape, becomes a fight against postponement of the May 30th convention in St. Paul. The date, fortuitously selected last November, becomes a historic one in the political history of Labor.

THE VOICE OF TOIL

By WILLIAM MORRIS.

I heard men saying, Leave hope and praying,
All days shall be as all have been;
Today and tomorrow bring fear and sorrow,
The never ending toil between.

When Earth was younger mid toil and hunger,
In hope we strove, and our hands were strong;
Then great men led us, with words they fed us,
And bade us right the earthly wrong.

Go read in story their deeds and glory,
Their names amidst the nameless dead;
Turn then from lying to us slow-dying
In that good world to which they led;

Where fast and faster our iron master,
The thing we made, forever drives,
Bids us grind treasure and fashion pleasure
For other hopes and other lives.

Where home is a hovel and dull we grovel,
Forgetting that the world is fair.
Where no hate we cherish, lest its very soul perish;
Where mirth is crime, and love a snare.

Who now shall lead us, what god shall heed us
As we lie in the hell our hands have won,
For us are no rulers but fools and befoolers,
The great are fallen, the wise men are gone.

I heard men saying, Leave tears and praying,
The sharp knife heedeth not the sheep;
Are we not stronger than the rich and the wronger,
When day breaks over dreams and sleep?

Come, shoulder to shoulder, ere the world grows older!
Help lies in nought but thee and me;
Hope is before us, the long years that bore us
Bore leaders more than men may be.

Let dead hearts tarry and trade and marry,
And trembling nurse their dreams of mirth,
While we the living our lives are giving
To bring the bright new world to birth.

Come, shoulder to shoulder, ere earth grows older!
The Cause spreads over land and sea;
Now the world shaketh, and fear awaketh,
And joy at last for thee and me.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedants allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue the comrades have been called to arms and sent thru the city to collect the bourgeoisie and idlers for the wood-getting expedition. It fell to Martuinov's lot to go into the aristocratic home of the girl he would have married if the revolution had not divided them. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

He bowed to her. . . . "What for? . . . there was no need to do that" something said in the bottom of his soul, but no, he had already bowed. She leant over her mother and whispered something in her ear and her mother also looked in his direction.

And who was that by her side, so tall, so good-looking, with a bold look in his clever grey eyes? Stalmakhov was carefully examining his documents. . . . Perhaps her betrothed? . . .

"What, Vladimir Sergeivitch, or do you not know us?" came the proud, slightly lisping voice of her mother. "See, Andriusha, here is Vladimir Sergeivitch," she turned to her husband.

Martuinov felt a sneer in these words. There was a mixture of annoyance and fear on Rostovtsev's face; surprise and amusement on those of the comrades. . . .

But he shook Rostovtsev's dry hot hand, and the passive fingers of his wife, and replied to their questions, what news from his relations, what news from Siberia, and he was holding out his hand to Nadya, raising his eyes to hers, meeting her burning glance. . . . A fugitive smile ran across her face, quickly replaced by a grimace of tears, and she went swiftly out of the room.

Martuinov heard at his ear the insistent voice of Stalmakhov. "Get done quickly . . . we are already going." And, leaving the house Martuinov confusedly explained that these were old acquaintances of his. . . . "A very reactionary family. . . ."

"Yes, I know," broke in Stalmakhov. "Last Spring a son of theirs was shot, Lieutenant Rostovtsev. A suspicious crowd. You saw just now some sort of Military Specialist was sitting with them. Repin was his name. But his papers were all in order . . . they had been countersigned by the Commandant of the town. And you had relations who ran off with Kolchak?"

Martuinov explained with discomfort. For he was of bourgeois family. His father was a capitalist, the owner of the local leather factories. His family was now in Kharbin, but he, of course, had broken all connection with them.

Stalmakhov said nothing and smoked. They went into the next house, and were met again with frightened questions, "What do you want?" And, mechanically examining greasy documents, Martuinov thought how now all was finished with Nadya, but that he had stood the test and was worthy to be a Communist. But why then should Stalmakhov be scornful of him.

And in the Rostovtsev's houses there was peace again, and all were sitting once more round the tea-table—all but Nadya—when Repin, handing an empty glass to the mistress of the house, asked:

"That Communist who was here do you know him?"

"Yes," she replied. "He is of good family, passed thru the Gymnasium, and often used to visit us formerly, but now, of course. . . ."

"A self-opinionated, bumptious fellow he always was," sharply replied Rostovtsev. "And now he has taken up with that filth. And to have the insolence to come to our house! For formerly he was not indifferent to Nadezhda . . . that's why she ran off. Nadezhda," he shouted loudly, "come here."

"Andriusha," said his wife reproachfully, "leave her alone."

Before she slept Nadya prayed for Volodya more fervently than ever—not for that Volodya who many years ago had kissed her lips on the skating rink, whose letters were even now lying in here jewel-box, not for the handsome lad with blue eyes, healthy red cheeks and a merry loud laugh, but for the present-day Volodya, somehow new, thinner, big-eyed, such as she had met one day in Winter at the entrance of one of the Soviet Institutions, when she had noticed that his boots were falling to pieces and the soles tied to the uppers with bits of new thread.

She prayed, remembered and wept. She wept because she loved him and did not understand that strange force that bewitched him and took him away from her. She wept because she wanted his love, wanted a real, young, joyous existence, but her eyes were bound and she could not enter the bright road by which he had gone away, and she prayed for the soul of the sinful Volodya, and prayed also, desperately, that his life might be spared.

In the sleeping town the merry work of several hundreds of Communists went on. Pickets stood in in the middle of the empty streets; the noise of horses' feet sounded thru the town, the directors of the search riding round the districts; everywhere comrades, three together were disappearing into the houses for ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, and then, as a result, were bringing out of the houses frightened men, and handing them over to the pickets, who convoyed them to the central staff of the searchers, where Gornuikh, who had not slept for three days and three nights, registered and questioned them, establishing their identity.

The young, cheerful sun was rising when Martuinov wearily walked home to his lodging. His head ached and it seemed to him that he had grown somehow dirty from plunging into other peoples' dwellings, and a kaleidoscope of the rooms he had visited during the night kept flashing in his eyes.

Close by his lodging he saw a poster: a Red Army soldier in a red shirt defending a mouzhik in bast shoes. The mouzhik was sowing an impossible green field, and Martuinov caught himself in a motion of disgust at the primitive picture, the coarse colors and vulgar drawing.

In Prison

By WILLIAM MORRIS.

Wearily, drearily,
Half the day long,
Flap the great banners
High over stone;
Strangely and eerily,
Sounds the wind's song,
Bending the banner-poles.

While all alone
Watching the loophole's spark,
Lie I, with life all dark,
Feet tether'd, hands fetter'd
Fast to the stone.
The grim wall, square letter'd
With prison'd men's groan.

Still strain the banner-poles
Thru the wind's song,
Westward the banner rolls
Over my wrong.

Chicago Boy Scouts Hard Up.

Every once in a while the boy scouts all over the United States get hard up. But that state of affairs does not last long. Along comes a gang of Rotarians or some similar Babbits and shell out several hundred thousand dollars, and then the boy scout leaders are assured of a steady job organizing the young kids in the spirit of militarism and patriotism for capitalism and hatred for working class organizations.

Despite the backing of all the church organizations, irrespective of denomination, the support of all the capitalist papers—even some trade union journals—even in spite of congressional sanction, only 10,000 boys were organized in Chicago out of a population of 3,000,000.

With the whole-hearted backing of the Chicago Federation of Labor, the Chicago Young Workers League could do better than that with all other forces against it.

Anyway, from Feb. 15 to 22 $150,000 was to be raised for the boy scouts. Here's the way these campaigns usually work. The misdirected kids are bamboozled from office to office, from shop to shop, and from store to store, collecting the lesser amounts, and then the petty business men donated a few more dollars; and when the campaign looks like a failure some big banker proves that the American people are behind these future soldiers by donating say $139,000 to make up the $150,000; and the scout leaders are secure in their jobs; and capitalism is assured of the proper kind of teaching that will be disseminated amongst 10,000 to 100,000 boys in this city, and from 500,000 to 1,000,000 all over the United States.

Horse Laugh Greets Legion Bonus Meet

WHEN the horse laughs greeted the officers of the American Legion who spoke at the bonus meeting at the Garrick Theater in Chicago recently there was more than comedy in the air. The ex-soldiers were visibly disgusted with the pussy-footing tactics pursued by the so-called world war vet leaders.

The soldiers know that Andy Mellon, secretary of the treasury, is not working for their interests. They know that there is nothing to be expected from the strike-breaker president. They know that they have been buncoed, and that the brazen attempts to stage a serious mass meeting to discuss the bonus question with speakers who are definitely lined up against the bonus was occasion for sardonic laughter.

You could hear some language at this meeting that wasn't printed in the daily papers and that wasn't exactly complimentary—language that questioned the ancestry of some of the Legion officers.

What could you expect of the soldier audience when the remedy given was: "Keep your eye on Washington!" It's enough to make the thousands of American graves in Flander's Field shake with devilish laughter.

YUCATAN--YESTERDAY AND TODAY - By ARNOLD ROLLER

YUCATAN, a peninsula situated on the extreme south of Mexico, inhabited by 350,000 Maya Indians, has been a thorn in the flesh of the reactionaries and capitalists of the world for the last ten years. It is not surprising, therefore, that they are unable to hide their satisfaction over the news that Yucatan has been conquered and subdued by the counter-revolutionary army of Adolfo de la Huerta. Its Governor, Felipe Carillo, was taken prisoner with thirteen of his friends and according to the latest fashion of all the reactionary powers all over the world, was shot when "trying to escape."

The Maya People.

With the murder of Filipe Carillo an important chapter of a little nation was closed,—of a whole people, because Yucatan is historically, racially, linguistically and geographically completely different and separated from the rest of Mexico. While the Indian population of the rest of Mexico descend from Aztecs, Yaquis, Zapotecas, etc., and crossing of these Indians with the whites, the inhabitants of Yucatan are, almost exclusively, pure Mayas, of whom very few understand Spanish. They speak a language which is quite dofferent from the languages spoken by the other Mexican Indians. Their civilization seems to have been much older and higher than that of the other Mexican aborigines.

Geographically, Yucatan is separated from the rest of Mexico by impassable jungles and swamps, so that it can only be reached by sea.

Slavery Legalized.

Here, the landed aristocracy succeeded in establishing complete slavery and perpetuating it legally. In spite of all decrees of the various older constitutions, which awarded land to the peasants and in spite of the former quite extensive communal lands (the "ejidas" which corresponds to the Russian "Mir") which were worked by the peasants in common, the whole land was up to ten years ago in the hands of a few families.

Even the Spanish Conquistadores confirmed by Royal Decree the title of the peasants to these communal lands. But under the rule of the landed aristocracy under the perpetual "president." Diaz, particularly, it was declared illegal to hold land in common ownership and the authorities proceeded to distribute the land to the peasants, out of these "ejidas." This "distribution," of course, was handled by the big land owners and their tools.

Mayas Tricked.

For awarding or registering the lots such fees were charged that very few of the Mayas were able to raise the required amounts—and consequently the land sharks bought the land from the state or the village authorities at a price of $2 to $3 per acre. Then they farmed out the land to the Indians on the terms of the old serfdom, or they employed them directly as hired laborers. But no laborer or tenant farmer was allowed to produce anything else on his land than the main product of the country, namely, henequen (sisal), a kind of hemp, used largely in the United States for the manufacture of binder twine cords. All foodstuffs were consequently imported by the big landowners and sold to the peasants and agricultural laborers "on credit" at fantastic prices.

Always In Debt.

Thus, the Indians remained permanently in the debt of their masters and another law declared it a crime to leave one's working place or village, before the debts were paid. At the death of the debtor, his family or nearest relatives were liable and the debt slavery was passed on from father to son. The whipping of men for insufficient production was a daily occurrence, but was, of course, no legal reason to leave the place. The whole district of 70,000 square miles, with its 350,000 inhabitants, was the private property of about 2,000 owners.

According to other estimates, 80 per cent of the soil belonged to twenty-seven families. And this whole district paid under Diaz only $50,000 in taxes to the Central Government. There were no schools in Yucatan and except for religious teaching, it was illegal to teach the Mayas Spanish.

Carrillo's Early Career.

This changed, however, around 1915. For many years Felipe Carrillo, at that time a railroad employe and a Maya by birth, started an energetic propaganda among the Mayas, whom he organized. The constitution, according to which slavery and every system of peonage was expressly prohibited, was translated by him into the Maya language in order to inform the slaves of their rights. For this Carrillo was arrested; he escaped, however, and continued his propaganda secretly. By prearranged signals and whistles he called the peons at night, first in small groups of from six to ten men, later however, rocket signals were given for larger meetings with arms.

Effect of Madero Victory.

Madero's successful revolution against the tyrant, Porfirio Diaz, and later the second victorious revolution of Pancho Villa and Carranza against the counter-revolution of Victoriano Huerta, had naturally an immense influence on the fortunes of Yucatan. Under the new constitution a socialist administration was elected, but another revolution again, this time a workmen's and peasants' revolution, against Carranza was necessary, in order to frustrate the reactionary plans of the "liberator" Carranza, who, tho being a liberal constitutionalist, could not suffer to see that the land of the big land owners, to which clan he belonged, was being subdivided, not only by decrees and in theory but also in fact, and that social reforms were being actually realized. In 1915 we see the socialist general Salvador Alvarado as governor of Yucatan, which he became after defeating in March of the same year the army of the governor appointed by Carranza. Peonage was finally actually abolished.

Debts Voided.

All debts of the peons were declared void. Everyone who wanted to work the land by himself received forty acres each, which were cut out from the properties of the big owners. This land was partly confiscated, wherever it could be proved that the "owners" or their ancestors appropriated it unduly from the communal lands, or the land was purchased forcibly from the big owners at the values given by them for income tax purposes, which, obviously, were none too high. The amounts due to them accordingly were paid in bonds, maturing in fifty years, and bearing 4 per cent interest.

Every big landowner was compelled to reserve on his property a building for a school, so that 2,000 schools were opened, where there were formerly almost none, and the teachers, mostly socialists, were imported from all parts of Mexico. Next Alvarado undertook an energetic struggle against the church. From the few schools which formerly existed all priests were expelled and instead of the religious slogans he placed everywhere revolutionary and atheistic mottos, such as, "Flee from religion as from the plague"; "Whether God wills it or not, the revolution shall go on"; "Without God or without masters, here is the supreme aspiration of free men."

The former marriage laws were abolished and marriage declared a private contract, entered into by the common wish of both parties and dissolved by the will of one party, after due provisions for the care of the children, if any.

Publishes Daily Paper.

One of the first things which Alvarado did was to take over the largest daily of Merida, the capital of Yucatan, which was the organ of the blackest reaction, renamed it the "Voice of the Revolution" and handed it over to the labor unions.

It is certainly tragic that this same Alvarado now turned traitor to the proletariat, as so many other ex-socialists. Mussolini, Noske e' tutti quanti—and he is now one of the generals fighting for De la Huerta.

During his administration, Felipe Carillo organized all over the country innumerable "Ligas de resistencia," which were at the same time a combination of co-operative, trade union, club, educational center and socialist and political organization.

Labor Laws.

Among the laws promulgated under Alvarado, for the protection of the workmen, article 79 provides that women are not allowed to work thirty days before and thirty days after confinement, but must receive their full salary during the entire time, and their jobs must be kept open for them. According to article 80, every establishment, in which women were employed, had to have a specially reserved room, in perfect sanitary condition, in which mothers could nurse their children, every two hours for fifteen minutes, without this time being deducted from their wages or rest periods. The eight-hour working day was introduced and whenever a workman was dismissed, the employer had to pay him three months' wages.

In the whole country, co-operative stores and co-operative purchasing organizations were established.

Co-operate For Markets.

In addition to the happy combination of co-operatives and trade unions, for the purpose of improving the living conditions of the people, another important economic institution must be mentioned, which was originally founded in 1912 by the big land owners. This is the "Comision Reguladora de Henequen" (the sisal regulating commission), the purpose of which was to prevent the underbidding of prices and to form a united front against American buyers. In other words, it was the Sisal Trust of Yucatan, formed to keep up the price of sisal against the American Harvester Corporation.

With the victory of the revolution, Alvarado became also president of the "Comision Reguladora," which was then organized on a co-operative basis and administered in the interests of the whole people.

Carillo Becomes President.

After the eliminating of Carranza in 1920, who, up to his very death, was fighting against rebellious Yucatan, Felipe Carillo was elected Governor in 1921 with the enormous majority of 60,765 votes against 4,085 for the reactionary candidate. He continued the social legislation started by Alvarado and proved himself an excellent administrator in every field. Rent laws promulgated by him limited the rent to 7 per cent of the declared value of the property. The taxes were such that the owner of one house, living in it, paid practically no taxes, the owner of five houses felt already the sting of the taxation, while the owners of more than twenty houses had to pay such taxes that they were in the greatest hurry to dispose of them at almost any price, which, consequently, considerably reduced rentals. All land kept out of use had also to pay taxes, which is one of the principal tenets of the single taxers.

Carillo the Financier.

When, by a capitalist conspiracy, in order to destroy Yucatan economically, the price of sisal was depressed from 18c per pound to 3c per pound, while the actual cost of production is 4c, Carillo borrowed from the Federal Government in Mexico enough money, to buy the floating supply of 800,000 bales of sisal in the United States, which was used for depressing the price. By limiting production and by organization of co-operative warehouses he succeeded in a short time in raising the price above the pre-war value. In this way the "uneducated railroad shop hand," Felipe Carillo, saved Yucatan from economic ruin, while a capitalist government did not succeed in a similar case—namely, at the time of the sugar crisis in Cuba, which sent Cuba into bankruptcy.

Carillo's Mistake.

Now Carillo and his work have been destroyed, but Carillo himself is not without blame. His mistake, for which he paid with his life, was his pacifism. In spite of the urgent request of many of his friends he refused to arm the Maya people against a possible counter-revolution and so he and his peacefully organized people fell victims to the first armed reactionary gang of murderers.

If Yucatan had had a red army, the red flag would still be flying from all trade union and government buildings of the country. But this reaction can only be temporary. The people, who have tasted freedom and the first beginnings of economic improvements, will not submit again meekly to the ancient slavery.

Tho all trade unions and co-operatives have been destroyed, and the the land given to the peons is being returned to the big landowners, this will not assure the continuation of the old slavery but will contribute to the success of the next revolution.

Reflections on the Negro Sanhedrin

By W. H. A. MOORE

THE Negro Sanhedrin came, had its say, and time alone will be able to tell whether or not it has added anything to the sum total of human social knowledge. The forces which created it are easily seen; the elements that determined its character stand out in startling bold relief; and it must be acknowledged that the conclusions which it arrived at present an immaturity of thinking strikingly at variance with the importance of the social issues which it sought to discuss.

As I see it, it was not an impressively profound body. It may be its elements were too diverse to unite on a soundly constructed social program. This must not be construed to mean that nothing came out of the movement; that would be far from the truth. What it indicates to me is that the Negro of the Western Hemisphere has not yet waked to an appreciation of his present-day social duty.

No big central figure looms up in our consideration of the conference. The personality of Kelly Miller dominated the conference, it is true, but it was only in the alert, watchful way that so often characterizes the manner of the politicians. The delegates of the Workers Party, and the African Blood Brotherhood got a large dose of the watchfulness of this professor from the District of Columbia. But for friends at court their recommendations would have been buried as material destructive of what was at bottom the chief reason the leaders helped to promote the conference. It was not the justness of the position assumed by this particular set of delegates that was question by Dr. Miller. He followed a policy of expediency which demanded that radicalism of any sort should have little, if any, place in the social program that was to be laid down by the conference for the Negro race in America.

Chamber of Commerce Influence.

The executive secretary of the Negro employment bureau of the local Chamber of Commerce, the Chicago branch of the Urban League, was finally chosen as chairman of what Dr. Miller designated as the "Commission on Labor." Lovett Fort-Whiteman, the leader of the Workers Party delegation, protested with eloquent vehemence against what he asserted to be a deliberate endeavor to stifle the real voice of Negro Labor in the deliberations of the conference. But "Social Welfare" was in the saddle digging a sharpened spur and applying a cruel whip of disapproval whenever the conference showed even the slightest disposition to kick out of the traces. Hence the all-important issue of Labor was relegated far to the rear in the body's consideration of the big problems of the hour.

What were the big questions of the hour? "The Basic Importance of the Physical Stamina of the Race," discussed by the physicians; "Our Educational Program," discussed by a group of college officials; "The Function of the Negro Press," discussed by representative Negro newspaper men and women; "The Afro-American's Relation to the World-Wide Race Movements," discussed by a small group of writers; "The Function of Fraternal and Benevolent Organizations in Race Welfare," discussed by leading officials of secret and benevolent organizations; "The Religious Factor in Race Welfare," discussed by several Bishops of the several religious organizations; "The Effect of Religion on Race Relations," discussed by another group of distinguished religionists; "The International Co-operation in Civic and Social Betterment," discussed by welfare organization leaders; "The Function of Agitation in Race Betterment," discussed by leaders of organizations engaged in the work of procuring "Equal Rights" for the Negro; "The Woman's Part in the Race Problem," discussed by the women delegates; "The Part of the Young College-Bred Negro in Race Betterment," a discussion in which the college men and women showed off to rather good advantage; "The Place of Business in Race Betterment," discussed by several successful business men and women. Labor as a question of first rate importance has no place in this rather elaborate program. As I see it, it was a "Social Welfare" program designed to strengthen the already strong hold which the nation's Chambers of Commerce have on the economic strings of the American Negro's life.

Leaders in Panic at Labor.

I get my clue in this connection from what I saw of actual panic whenever there came a slip in the workings of the prepared program. Consternation reigned during the unforseen fight led by Comrade Fort-Whiteman for a place on the program for an unbiased discussion of the Labor problem as it affected the life of the Negro in this country. At one part of this discussion Leader Miller himself had to pledge the Workers Party delegation that Labor would be given a place in the official document that was being prepared by the several commissions as the statement of the Sanhedrin's position on all public questions affecting the life of the race. This was done by what was called the "Findings Commission," with the result that the Labor question got some consideration and position in the document given out as the general program of the Sanhedrin.

There were two odd slants given to the question of segregation at the conference. The northern elements wanted unqualified condemnation of the offenses committed in its name. The Southern elements, however, endeavored to prevent frank and open discussion of this issue. The contention of the Southerners was that an unbridled discussion of segregation on the floor of the Sanhedrin would hinder the inter-racial work that was now being done especially if the conference should take too decided a stand in this particular.

"There is no justness in pussy-footing and no common sense in side tracking this important matter," contended the Northern elements.

"Yes, we know," answered the Southerners, "but we have got to live in the South, which is a very different thing from toasting your shins up here in Chicago."

As a consequence a soft pedal was put on discussion altho there was a loud flourish of generalities in that part of the "big" documents offered for the general public's consumption.

Optimistic For Future.

I do not know what trend the next meeting of the Sanhedrin will take. I believe, however, that the outlook is upward. It must be admitted that at the conference just closed Chairman Miller's hands were held and directed by an invisible force of tremendous power—the sinister influences of capitalistic interests determined to maintain the inimical relations that have existed too long between the black and white proletariat in all the sections of the land. But the ground has been broken.

A distinct desire to break away from many of the older moorings has been shown. It was not a radical outbreak by any means. Yet it was clearly manifest that the old order of thinking and the old character of action is about to be laid aside by what, for the moment, can be named the "New Negro." Let there be no fear for the future, the Negro is now in the fight for Human Progress and will not turn back.

THEY MURDER OUR CHILDREN

SOME weeks ago a policeman told the following story whilst he was waiting in a queue for food in the north of Berlin. A boy had stolen some rolls from a bakery. He was caught and hauled before the police, and there he insisted that he had not stolen for himself but for his sick mother—"She cannot live on potato peelings alone." The policeman was instructed to verify the statements of the child. He did so and actually found a woman, thin, like a skeleton, unable to leave her bed, and apart from the arrested boy three other hungry children. It was proved that the whole five had actually been living from potato peelings.

This is a dry statement of the facts. One can imagine this woman and her children who starve even tho her boy steals. One wonders how it was possible that the woman allowed the thing to go so far, why no help came to her. Here is our mistake, this case was nothing exceptional, it was not caused by a chain of particularly unfortunate circumstances. It is one case amongst thousands of others, amongst hundreds of thousands of others. Think of the five, the eight starvation years thru which Germany has passed. Think of the horrible growth of the hunger illnesses which have weakened adults and children, think of the soldiers' widows who suffer with their orphan children and whose only consolation is a few shameful "pension" papers on which it is visibly written "you shall starve." Think of the prices. Think how the value of the money disappears whilst still in the hand. Think of the thousands of facts, each typical of this period—for instance, physicians suffer greatly from unemployment tho the whole population is sick. Think of all these things, and the individual case grows to gigantic proportions. It is the symbol for the death of an entire people!

An entire people! Everyone who works or wants to work is condemned to the ration of potato peels. If not today then tomorrow. Peels! not even potatoes. Where the starving have stretched out their hands to the potatoes, there the police have been mobilized to protect the fields. The man hunt has been re-established. They have shot into the crowds of starving people. Men and women have been murdered with the machine guns because they wanted potatoes to satisfy their hunger. They have—but let us read the police report:

"On the morning of October 25th at a quarter to seven, in the fields of the farmer Frede at Britz, rifle fire directed by the police at potato raiders resulted in the deaths of a boy of twelve years and a girl of sixteen, and in serious injury to a further girl of sixteen."

Two children are killed and one is badly wounded. Yes, but the potatoes are safe. Two children are completely and one partially satisfied, and all that was necessary—three small pieces of lead. The potatoes were saved, property protected from all damage and the basis of the Christian State remains intact, and all at a total cost of the torn bodies of three children.

Do not rail at the cruelty! The cost was not too high. For what was at stake? Is not the German economy in the greatest danger, is it not threatened by ruin? Is it not necessary to ruthlessly maintain what still stands? What would happen if the quiet enjoyment of property were no longer guaranteed? Think of the consequences! Today it is the potato fields of the big farmers and junkers, but tomorrow already it may be the gold of the citizens, the state bonds, shares, foreign currencies. Today they steal. Tomorrow they will expropriate. If property is not guaranteed what will become of trade and commerce?

Therefore, one must shoot! Up to the moment, in Britz alone two men, one woman, one boy and two girls have been shot. There are further victims in other places. Still more must be shot for the danger is great. Do you see those white hollow-cheeked faces with their sunken glowing eyes in line before the potato shops? They are an incitement by their very existence. Behind those bony foreheads there are thoughts of high treason. Nothing is sacred to these starved people. They have nothing to eat and they fill themselves with hatred against everybody who has, against everybody who amasses, bargains, speculates and plunders in the good old bourgeois manner. These starved people are capable of anything, they have nothing to lose. They are quite ready to throw away their lives, for even those no longer belong to them; they are in the hands of the Stock Exchange wolves and the barons of industry. Should they risk their lives in the last throw, they might win and there would be an end to the century old empire of capitalist happiness.

No! The rifles and machine-guns must rattle. The armed police must be mobilized everywhere. The army must be sent to Saxony to stifle the hunger there. Dead workers lie on any street in Saxony. More must join them. Men, women, boys and girls.

Yes! The starving must be murdered or capitalism will perish. Murder! The murder of men, women and children or—the victory of Communism!—J. LILBURNE.

TOWARDS WORLD DOMINATION

By JAY LOVESTONE

AMERICAN imperialists are embarking on new ventures towards domination of the world market and the sources of raw material.

Our capitalists are beating new paths towards greater spheres of influence and financial and industrial world supremacy.

The recent loan to Japan, not so much because of its size, but rather on account of its terms and intent, is a milepost in the development of the American capitalist imperialist empire.

A Gigantic Loan.

When such guiding forces in American financial and industrial life as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb and Co., the National City Co., the First National Bank of New York, Brown Bros. & Co. of Philadelphia, Lee, Higginson & Co., the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, and the Bankers & Equitable Trust Companies of New York get together with more than a dozen other big banking firms to float a loan of $150,000,000 it is an event of extraordinary significance in the development of American commercial supremacy.

The new $150,000,000 Japanese government loan is the largest long term foreign loan floated in the United States since the Armistice. In view of the high credit of Japan, the general improvement in the field of investment, and the easier money tendency in the market, the price of these bonds is regarded in banking circles as a highly generous figure—a sure sign that original purchasers will profit by market appreciation.

Since the Armistice, November 11, 1918, European loans to the extent of $1,146,750,000 have been floated in the United States. Perhaps no better proof is to be offered of America's becoming the leading creditor nation of the world than that of this gigantic sum only $108,020,900 has been paid. The balance is still outstanding. An examination of the European government and municipal loans made by American bankers since the Armistice, shows that Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and Great Britain have borrowed heavily during this period.

It is especially important to note that tho England gave the imperial Japanese government better terms, American bankers assumed $150,000,000 while British bankers lent only $107,000,000. The English bankers were allowed to draw 6% interest. The American bankers are to draw 6½% interest. At their respective maturities and terms the British financiers will receive 6.96% while the American bankers will draw 7.10%.

The money is to be spent mainly "to purchase materials and supplies for the reconstruction necessitated by the earthquake and fire of 1923" only a small portion of this big loan is to be employed to cover bonds about to mature. The government's reconstruction program provides for an expenditure of about $700,000,000. Of this sum, no less than $300,000,000 will be spent to purchase materials outside of Japan.

Significance of the Deal.

In a sense the terms of the loan indicate a highly important departure from the customary procedure characterizing American banking methods.

It has been the practice of England to make loans on the basis of the borrowed money being expended by the debtor nation in the purchase of commodities manufactured in British territory. By this method British bankers and industrialists have for a long time been tremendously aided in maintaining their role as the rulers of world finance and manufacturing.

Several months ago, there was a campaign to float an Indian loan in London. A motion was formally made in Parliament that at least 75 per cent of this loan is to be spent in England. The motion was defeated simply because it was pointed out that there is no need of such action since experience has shown that in the past at least 95 per cent of the money from British bankers borrowed by India was voluntarily spent in English markets.

America and Japan.

Not many people realize the extent to which Japan's economic relations are bound up with the United States. Forty-five per cent of the exports of Japan go to the United States. America is by far Japan's best customer. China, which is second, takes only 24 per cent of the Japanese exports. Great Britain takes only 3 per cent. Of the five commodities exported by Japan to the United States and accounting for sixty-six per cent of our imports from Japan, raw silk ranks first. Ninety per cent of Japanese raw silk is sold to the United States. This means that 36 per cent of the entire Japanese export trade is provided for by shipments of raw silk to American manufacturers. The United States purchases a third of Japanese pottery and 90 per cent of its tea. For the fiscal year ending June, 1923, we exported to Japan, commodities valued at $213,000,000 and imported from Japan commodities valued at $372,000,000. In the same period, we exported to Japan, 363,668 long tons of steel. The demand for steel by Japan will unquestionably increase steadily until the reconstruction requirements are met.

The United States supplies Japan commodities more than twice as much in value as any other country—31 per cent of Japan's 1922 imports were from the United States. Raw cotton, machinery, lumber, iron bars, rods and plates, kerosene and construction material were purchased by Japan in the last fiscal year to the extent of more than $200,000,000. Automobiles, leather, iron tubes, paper and paper pulp, railroad equipment, nails and lead, etc., were purchased by Japanese agencies in the United States last year to the extent of about $100,000,000.

American capitalists are also making heavy investments in Japan. At the close of last year, there was organized a powerful Japanese-American Construction Company of Tokio. This corporation, known as the "Japanese-American Engineers & Contracting Corporation," is capitalized at $50,000,000, is to be financed and controlled jointly by American and Japanese interests, and is to establish branches in other parts of Japan as conditions demand. Thru the organization of this company American capitalists have assured themselves the role of the dominant group in the reconstruction of Japan.

Recent months have also seen American electrical interests secure a strangle-hold on the Japanese electric industry. The Tokio Electric Company is the largest corporation of this character in Japan. It is capitalized at $111,000,000 and has recently absorbed nine competing companies. This concern has just formed a combination with the Westinghouse Electric Company of America. Likewise, the General Electric Company has concluded a combination with the Shibaura Electric Works; the Western Electric Company has formed a combination with the Nippon Dento Electric Works. The American interests are vitally concerned with the tremendous possibilities afforded them to reap fabulous profits in the electrification of Japanese railways.

The hand of American capital is also suspected in the recently announced union of flour mill companies in Japan. Thru this merger six of the biggest companies with a combined daily producing capacity of close to twenty thousand barrels united. This corporation is now planning to swallow up fifteen smaller companies and organize itself into a national federation.

Effect on Japan.

The steady encroachments of American capital on Japanese resources and the growing dependence of Japan on the American market spell events of intense complication and danger in the future relations between the two countries.

Japan is today in the throes of a serious political upheaval rocking the very foundations of the government. There is a gigantic struggle now going on in Japan for increased popular participation in the government. Besides, the country is involved in a severe economic crisis, because of the great losses suffered thru the earthquake and fire. The people are holding almost continuous mass meetings in the ruins of Tokio, demanding greater democratization of the government.

The Germs of New Wars.

The establishment of American imperialist hegemony in the Pacific is a menace to the peace and security of the working masses of the United States. The bonds bearing interest to be received by the bankers of Wall Street also bear the germs of new devastating wars.

American commerce with the Oriental countries is now three times what it was a decade ago. Our trade with the Far-East accounts for almost 25 per cent of our total foreign commerce. In the last year alone, we increased our trade with the countries of the Orient by 25 per cent.

But Europe is swiftly recovering its poise in the conflict for commercial supremacy in this theatre of world capitalism. According to the Department of Commerce reports of January 21, 1924, Europe is gradually regaining its trade with the Far-East. The government, in its anxiety to help American capitalists maintain their advantages they won during the war, is planning to organize a campaign of propaganda to win over the working masses of this country to the necessity of protecting the Far-Eastern markets against foreign competitors. The slogan of our imperialist government is "American must be supreme in the Pacific." Before the war, the German capitalists had as their battle cry, "We must drive to the Near East." Today the American imperialists have as their war cry, "We must drive to the Far-East." In view of the collapse of the European market American bankers and manufacturers are more and more concentrating their efforts at world supremacy in the Latin American and Far Eastern spheres of influence and markets.

The Struggle Against Fascism In America

By A. LOZOVSKY.

(General Secretary of the Red International of Labor Unions.)

ONE of the most important tasks of the Workers Party of America and of the Trade Union Educational League is the struggle against their own native Fascism. There are some people who think that Fascism in America is represented only by the Ku Klux Klan and the American Legion; in reality, however, American Fascism possesses something much more important—the Gompers machine.

Powerful American capitalism has in the official trade union machine the best weapon for their rule. The almighty dollar has long since subdued the labor bureaucracy, buying their various representatives just as pigs are bought in the Chicago stockyards. The tragedy is not in the fact that there are mercenary, thoroly corrupted leaders—the tragedy is that there are considerable masses of workers who still follow these defilers of the proletarian temple.

In the Iron Heel, Jack London gave a splendid picture of the corruptness and power of this labor bureaucracy, backed by the privileged groups of workers. However, Jack London over-estimated the power of capital, and its agents, and under-estimated the dormant forces of the working class. What transpires now in America is the emancipation from the ideology and practices of Gompers. The creation and consolidation of the Communist Party, the steady growth of the Trade Union Educational League, these are directly aimed against the demoralizing influence of the labor bureaucracy.

The American proletariat numbering many millions, is not yet sufficiently strong and class conscious to overthrow the mightiest capitalist system in the world and to drive out its agents; however, among the working class of America there is a sufficient number of class conscious men who took up the great historical cause, and this marks a tremendous forward step towards the emancipation of oppressed humanity.

An Advanced Step.

The revolutionary workers of America are now publishing a daily militant revolutionary organ—the DAILY WORKER. Heretofore the printing presses of the United States have been serving the interests of capital, filling the minds of the working masses with the capitalist opium. The press at the present time is one of the mightiest weapons for the enslavement of the working class. The contemporary capitalist press, like a street woman, sells herself at every street corner. The kept press of the United States, serving the financial and industrial sharks, is a model of corruption and graft. Our French comrades claim that the capitalist press of France is the most mercenary press in the world. The British Communists hold the same opinion of their capitalist press. No doubt the American Communists will claim priority for the press of their country, in the matter of corruption.

It is not easy to say which of the bourgeois press, the French, British, American, German or Italian is more corrupt, and has broken the world record. I think that the capitalist press of every country is entitled to the world record in this sphere. But can there be more than one champion in any one sphere? Apparently, yes. For each of the capitalist papers of the various countries is more mercenary, more corrupt, more bilious than the other.

You will raise the voice of the revolutionary proletariat against American capital used to enslave your class.

The Task of the Daily.

You will have to carry on from day to day a desperate struggle both against your direct class enemies and against the former members of the working class who sold their proletarian birthright for a mess of pottage. The struggle against capital, against Gompersism, against reformism, against the bourgeois reformist traditions, which demoralize the labor movement, the struggle to win over the many millions of the working masses, to create powerful revolutionary unions, the struggle against the corruption of the labor officials, the every day persistent struggle against the capitalist state, and for the creation of a mighty, mass Communist party—this will be the task of your daily.

Workers Watch America.

The revolutionary workers of all countries follow with profound interest the growth and development of the revolutionary labor movement in the United States. They are joyous over your victories and over your struggle to end the Gompers betrayal. Our faith in the ultimate victory of the revolutionary workers of America is unshakable. May your DAILY WORKER, which is the standard bearer of the revolutionary part of the American proletariat, become a ringing call for the battle to the mighty proletariat of the United States of America, which is still tied hand and foot. Let all the fakirs of the pen and the scoundrels of the press attack you, let all the Gompers valets viciously slander you, they cannot stop the approaching revolution any more than they can stop the earth from revolving around its axis. The social revolution is upon us and a few years sooner or a few years later, it will conquer the entire world.

Zinoviev, at the Congress of Scientific Workers of Russia.

At this Congress which, I am sure, will mark an important date in the history of our revolution and of our intellectual class, you will form your ranks in order to set yourselves with ardor and devotion to the task of reconstructing our country. We want to give a place of honor in the family of peoples to our Russia which has groaned for such a long time under the yoke of autocracy and which was ruined, set on fire, and its blood spilled under the rule of the capitalist class. We will see to it that there shall be no more illiterates; we will create a vast network of institutions of instruction; we will lead upon the broad road of the future our great people which was a century late in its bourgeois revolution, but which, by a combination of fortunate circumstances has been the first to make its proletarian revolution, and we will help it to occupy in the world the place which it deserves.

LENIN SEIZES POWER

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV

FOR Nicolai Lenin the question of the necessity of the seizure of power by the proletariat had been settled from the first moment of our present revolution and the question was only about the choice of a suitable opportunity. In the July days of 1917 our entire central committee was opposed to the immediate seizure of power. Lenin was of the same opinion. But when on July 16, the wave of popular revolt rose high, Lenin became alert, and here, upstairs, in the refreshment room of the Taurida Palance, a small conference took place at which Trotsky, Lenin, and myself were present. Lenin laughingly asked us, "Shall we not attempt now?" and he added: "No, it would not do to assume power now, as nothing will come out of it, the soldiers at the front being largely on the other side and would come and massacre the Petrograd workers." As a matter of fact, you will remember in those July days Kerensky did succeed in bringing over soldiers from the front against us. What became ripe two or three months later was still immature in July, and the capture of power at that time might have been fatal. At any rate, Lenin never hesitated for a moment on the question as to whether the proletariat, in our revolution, ought to seize the reins of power, or not. All his hesitations turned round the question as to whether it could not be done earlier.

You know how things developed subsequently. We passed thru a time when it seemed that everything was lost. Comrade Lenin for a moment even doubted whether the Soviets, corrupted by the compromise-mongers, could play a decisive part, and he gave out the watchword that we might perhaps have to seize power without the Soviets. But he never for a moment doubted that sooner or later the power would be in our hands, and that it was necessary to hurl the Mensheviks and the Socialist Revolutionaries to the ground.

At first, during the July days, we could not realize what was occurring. One night, on July 16th, Comrade Lenin alone came into the editorial offices of the "Pravda" to hand over a manuscript. Half an hour afterwards, ensigns were already sacking those offices. On the morning of July 16th Lieber took me to the military staff of the district to obtain redress in the matter of the sacking of the offices of the "Pravda." General Polovtseff, the head of the Staff, received me with great respect. He at that time did not know what to do with us. But an hour later the Bolsheviks were being arrested and massacred.

Then the persecutions started. Lenin and myself went into hiding. We had formerly decided to be arrested—such was still our faith in the Mensheviks and the Right Socialist Revolutionaries. But the party did not permit us to do so. We, therefore, decided to go in hiding ourselves. A week later Comrade Lenin told me: "How could we have been so silly as to think for one moment of trusting to this band and getting ourselves arrested? There is no other way but to fight this band ruthlessly."

In the same way as Comrade Lenin in July, 1917, wisely declared that there must be no attempt to seize power, so after the Korniloff rebellion—especially since the end of September, 1917, Lenin began urging the workers to seize power, or else it would be too late.

When, after that rebellion, the so-called Democratic Conference assembled at Petrograd, Lenin at first came out with an article on "Compromise." He invited for the last time the Mensheviks and Socialist Revolutionaries to break with the bourgeoisie, to renounce their policy of treason, and to come to a settlement with the working class with a view to action against the followers of Korniloff. But these two parties were rotten to the core. They had already sold their souls and could not accept Lenin's invitation. Thereupon Lenin sent a letter from his Finnish exile to the central committee of our party saying that the time had come to drop all procrastination, that it was necessary to surround the Alexandra Theatre (where the Democratic Conference was holding its session), to disperse all the scum there by force, and to seize power.

Our central committee at that time did not agree with Comrade Lenin. Almost everybody thought that it was too early, and that the Mensheviks and Socialist revolutionaries still had a large following. Lenin then, without hesitating long, left his asylum, and without consulting anybody, without considering the fears of his friends, came to Petrograd in order to preach an immediate rising. Kerensky and Avxentyeff were at that time issuing writs for the arrest of Lenin, while Lenin, from his underground hiding, was preparing a rebellion, arguing with those who hesitated, castigating those who were afraid, and writing and agitating for an early rising. And he succeeded.

At present everybody sees that Lenin was right. It was all a matter of touch and go. If we had not taken power into our hands, Savinkoff and Paltchinsky would have crushed us a month later. The question was raised by history in no ambiguous manner. Either we or they. Either the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie, mad with fear and hatred towards the workers, or the dictatorship of the proletariat mercilessly sweeping away the bourgeoisie.

Now, of course, it is all clear, but at the time, amidst the whirlpool of events it required the exact eye of Lenin, his genius or intuition, in order to declare: "Not a week later, now or never." And it also required the unbending strength of will of a Lenin to surmount all the obstacles and to start, at the appointed time the greatest revolution ever known in history. It is not that Comrade Lenin did not realize the tremendous difficulties with which the working class would be confronted after the conquest of power. Lenin knew all this to perfection. From the very first days of his arrival at Petrograd he had been carefully watching the progressive economic ruin. He valued the acquaintance of every bank clerk, trying to penetrate into the details of the bank business. He knew well the food and other difficulties. In one of his most remarkable books: "Will the Bolsheviks be Able to Keep the State Power?" Comrade Lenin dwelt in detail on these difficulties. It is true that the latter proved still more formidable than even Lenin anticipated.

But no other way was open to the working class than the one trodden in November.

Both on the question of the nationalization of the banks and on that of our food policy, as well as military policy, the decisive word was said by Lenin. He alone drew up in all its details the scheme of practical measures in all these domains long before November 7th. Clearness, precision, concreteness—such are the chief features in Lenin's work, and he alone has generalized all these individual measures in his work of the "State," which, to my mind, is the most important one after Marx's "Capital." The Soviet State has found in Lenin not only its chief political leader, practical organizer, ardent propagandist, poet and singer, but also its principal theoretician, its Karl Marx. The November revolution—insofar as even in a revolution one may, and indeed must speak of the part played by the individual—as well as the part played in connection with it by our army—are to the extent of nine-tenths the work of Lenin. If anybody could bring into line all those who doubted or hesitated, it was Lenin.

I can say this for myself, that if I shall repent in my life of anything, it will not be of the fifteen years I have been working under the guidance of Comrade Lenin, but of those few November days when I thought that Lenin was too much in a hurry, was forcing events, was committing a mistake, and that I would have to oppose him. It is now as clear as noonday that if the working class, under the guidance of Lenin, had not seized power in time, we should, a few weeks later, have had the dictatorship of the most ruthless, most unscrupulous bourgeois rascals. It is known now that it had been decided to massacre us all by the time of the meeting of the Constituent Assembly, and if the generals had had more soldiers at their disposal, they would have done so. Even after November 7th the Right Socialist Revolutionaries intended to massacre us, and one of their members, Massloff, even recruited soldiers for the purpose. He admitted very recently himself, that he had succeeded in scraping together only 5,000 champions of a very doubtful quality. There was the will, but there was not the way.

Comrade Lenin calculated the moment to perfection. He did not want to delay even for a week, and knew how to raise the question to a direct issue. He wrote article after article, publicly, over his signature, in a paper everybody could read, openly appealing for an armed rising, and fixing a definite date. And all this, while Kerensky was still in power and seemed to many to be still very strong. Lenin challenged the entire bourgeoisie and all compromise-mongers, telling them that tomorrow he and his friends would overthrow them. And everybody knew that on the lips of Lenin this was not an empty threat, that it would be followed by deed. This could only have been done by Lenin.

Turkey-Trot From Texas to New York

By J. O. BENTALL.

A TEXAS turkey has just earned a four-story heading in the New York World—earned it.

An uncouth citizen of our metropolis has registered a kick at 45 cents a pound for an ordinary ten-pound turkey and stirred up a regular fight.

This champion kicker had listened to some irresponsible "hayseeds" from the South who said that their wives were selling turkeys for 14 cents a pound in Texas. He went to the World and the World thought the stuff was good enough for a sensation, but makes the following apology:

"A Texas ten-pound turkey at 14 cents a pound gave the farmer's wife $1.40. The huckster who bought the turkey charged 1 cent the pound for transportation and 2 cents for profit. The cost of dressing was 2 cents the pound, grading and packing 2 cents the pound. The shipper who purchased the turkey charged 5 cents the pound to meet overhead expenses. The freight to New York was 3½ cents the pound. The commission man charges 5 per cent. His charges bring the cost of the turkey up to 36.05 cents to the retailer. If the retailer adds 25 per cent he will charge the consumer 45 cents the pound, which is in line with The World Fair Price of 42 cents the pound."

The World forgets to multiply and give the consumer the total as it did to show the big $1.40 that the farmer's wife got. It tells you that the consumer pays only 45 cents a pound which looks much nicer than $4.50.

The difference between $1.40 and $4.50 is about $3.10, which is the gap between the producer and the consumer.

It is a big sum to throw away on only one turkey that weights ten pounds. A big working class family cannot get a good meal out of a turkey this size. It should be a fourteen-pound turkey at least. Then see how the gap spreads. In that case the farmer's wife gets $1.96, the retailer $6.30. The gap spreads to $4.34.

This gap is about the same on every article that the farmer produces and the worker in the city consumes. Take the matter of bread. It takes a little over two bushels of wheat to make 100 pounds of flour. To be exact, one bushel of wheat makes 47 pounds of flour so that two bushels make 94 pounds. The bran, shorts, middlings and other by-products more than pay for the grinding and packing so that the 47 pounds of flour are net from the bushel of wheat that weighs 60 pounds.

The farmer gets on an average less than 90 cents a bushel for his wheat. From this must be taken the dockage and grading which reduces that apparent price very materially. But we will say that for his two bushels he gets $1.80. And these two bushels make nearly 100 pounds of flour.

To furnish "capital" to the farmer is a mere mockery. It is merely a surer way to get his land away from him. Even at the lowest possible rate of interest it is impossible for the farmer to carry on his operations. Even if money were loaned to him free, with no interest, he would go under in the long run.

If the Farmer-Labor senators want to serve the farmers they must go deeper than to merely send money to the banks in the farming regions. The farmers do need money—not mortgages.

Moreover, that pay must not be followed by a higher price to the consumer. That pay must be taken out of that big figure that constitutes the profit of the useless middleman. To add to the burden of the consumer will not help. He is hard pressed already.

That one point to tackle is the capitalist. Not one of the senators or representatives dares to tackle him. In fact, these liberals and near liberals do not understand the situation. They flounder around with no clear knowledge of the problem.

It is the task of the Communists to explain this whole wasteful method of handling the necessities of life, and to show that the two main factors, waste and exploitation, must go before we can have a social order worthy of its name.

"We will make out of the Russian political revolution the prologue of the European socialist revolution."
—Lenin, in 1905.

Communist Education--A Pressing Need

By REBECCA GRECHT

RECENT discussions at party conventions and membership meetings have evidenced some differences of opinion as to the functions of a communist party; differences which express themselves primarily in the relative emphasis placed upon the organizational and political aspects of party work, and therefore has a special bearing upon the subject of this article.

On the one side we find a group of comrades who stress the need of building the party organization itself, maintaining that at the present stage in the development of the communist movement we should concern ourselves principally with methods of strengthening the existing forces of the party. Believing communist education to be by far the most important method, these comrades stand out as the chief agitators within the party for educational work amongst the membership. Before we engage ourselves in combat, they say, let us be sure our battalions have been given intensive training behind the trenches. It is therefore our first duty to furnish members of the party with that knowledge of communist principles and tactics without which we cannot develop efficient fighters and so assume leadership of the working class.

The Other Position.

Opposed to this point of view are those comrades who, in their eagerness to show that communists do not fear the realities of the class struggle, have become absorbed in the political problems of the party, and attach primary importance to the science of political tactics. To map out plans of strategy, to enter into large campaigns—these are aims and tasks besides which the problems of party organization are decidedly of secondary consequence. Such questions, therefore, as the intensification of educational work thruout our ranks, from the lowest to the highest units, are relegated to the background. For we do no want a party that spends its time discussing the theory of surplus value, and prides itself on educational forums and lectures; we want a party of action.

Now the impression has often been created by comrades arguing on one side or the other that these two views are mutually exclusive. And each group appears to be equally convinced that to follow the policies of the other means the deterioration of the party. The fact is, however, that the real growth of the movement depends not on either policy alone, or on a compromise between them, but upon an effective utilization of both.

Emphasis on Organization.

Those who harp constantly upon organization, who maintain that only a policy of systematic education of the party membership along the lines of Marxist science, can build the party, fail to grasp the significance of communist tactics—that "the development of the Communist parties can only be achieved thru a fighting policy." That is, not thru mere education and propaganda, but thru participation in the struggles of the masses, thru taking the lead in organizing them on the industrial and political field, thus gaining their confidence. Besides, soldiers become good fighters not alone thru training behind the trenches, but by actual combat—which for a communist movement means practical activity.

It is true, however, that the importance of educational work has been underestimated by some of those whose care is the formulation of political and industrial policies. Only a party sound in theory can be sound in action. We may not be afraid, as has been expressed, to venture out into the stormy sea of reality; but if we are to steer a straight course, then we "must be entirely certain of the way we are going and have a firm hand on the rudder." As concerns the party, this certainty, this firmness, can be acquired largely thru a knowledge of the principles underlying the movement, and an understanding of their concrete application. It must not be forgotten that a communist party is not an entity in itself, but is composed of individuals. Their job it is to put thru the party policies. Considering that, it is without question one of he main tasks of the party to see that the membership is trained to carry on the work of communist agitation and organization.

Need For Trained Workers.

Never in the history of the communist movement in this country has the need for such education been so apparent as now. The party has initiated and participated in campaigns which, during the last year, extended its influence considerably. The left wing movement in the trade unions has been appreciably strengthened thru our industrial policy. On the political field as well, thru our general labor party agitation, we have gained ground. But this very absorption in making the communist party of action has produced this situation—that we are not fully prepared to take control of the militant forces our work developed. We lack trained comrades to undertake executive offices. We lack even comrades who have a theoretical background sufficient to do the minimum of communist propaganda necessary amongst those whose sympathy we have aroused thru our campaigns.

A Concrete Situation.

This has been particularly evident in certain local unions in New York, where a left wing sentiment had developed strong enough to put us in power, but where we were unable to take advantage of this in several instances simply thru lack of trained comrades. The complaint is frequently heard that our comrades do not know how to take the floor at union meetings to discuss union problems; that they do not have even such elementary knowledge as is necessary for the taking of minutes. Undoubtedly a similar condition exists in other party centers, as is often impressed upon us when such centers as Boston, Cleveland, Philadelphia are compelled to turn to the National Office for speakers. In other words, we have not enough skilled party workers to consolidate our political gains by organization.

Such conditions hinder the growth of our movement, and must be remedied if we are to reap gains in membership and communist control. Communist educational work should be an integral part of the general activities of the party. The Central Committee of the party should adopt a clear-cut educational policy. It should recognize that to train comrades for special functions such as executives, organizers, speakers, etc., and to make the membership at large effective communist propagandists in their contact with other workers, is as much the task of a party of action as participation in the Labor Party campaign. To appreciate this task merely in theory, however, is not enough. The Central Executive Committee should give the problem practical consideration and, indeed, consider the furtherance of educational work an essential item in its budget. It should also actively support and encourage local educational ventures.

Beginning Made.

A few months ago there appeared in The Worker a plan for the establishment in Chicago of a Lenin College for the training of party members. Such a project, tho very desirable, is yet a scheme for the future. What we need is a plan that can be put into effect right now. And at the present time we must look to local centers to start educational work with the assistance of the national organization.

The New York District has already made a promising beginning. Early last fall a school was organized and several classs started in history, Marxism, English, etc. For a while these ran along with some degree of success, but to make the school more effective it was found necessary to reorganize it, systematizing its work and placing it more directly under the control of the District Executive Committee. This was done, and at the present writing a Board of Directors is working on the details of reorganization.

Must Be Centralized.

With all the enthusiasm and energy that the District itself may put into the venture, however, its success depends to quite an extent upon the support given by the Central Executive Committee. We must recognize that education is an essential phase of party organization and development. Intensive educational preparation of our members must therefore proceed concomitantly with the practical work of the party. One does not exclude but rather complements, reinforces, the other. We do not become a party of theory by emphasizing educational training. On the contrary, such emphasis increases the possibilities for activity because it puts more qualified comrades into the field. Having developed a left wing sentiment, we must train men and women to guide and organize it. To the extent that our movement is young and inexperienced, this task becomes more significant. We are confronted with its need at every step in our work. Every worker who is a member of the party is in a way a pioneer. He is blazing the trail that will lead ultimately to the seizure of power by an organized, class-conscious body of workers. To equip him, to arm him, is a pressing duty. And that must be the function of our educational efforts.

Education For Activity.

Let those comrades who dread a return to the old aimless, unproductive theoretical spouting lay aside their fears. We are not concerned with education for the sake of education. In recognizing the inter-dependence of educational training with practical activity we infuse life and purpose into the teaching of communist scence and world history. The party, it is true, cannot grow merely by establishing classes in historical materialism and the development of the American labor movement. But neither can it be built exclusively thru political manoevres unless those wth whom we carry on our work are able to plant the seeds of communist principles and aims in the ground we plough. In other words, education of the party membership must be made an instrument for increasing party activity and strengthening our influence as a party of deeds, not of words.

ROTTEN TO THE CORE

IF the bombardment of the Teapot investigation would only permit anything else to be heard, there would resound thruout the country a barrage about a scandal afflicting the President's Tariff Commission.

The Tariff Commission is now in the midst of a controversy among its own members. This row has reached a serious stage. The fear entertained by some of the personnel because of the recent disclosures in Washington, has inspired several members to insist that one of their number immediately quit "sitting in a hearing that relative to the sugar duties". The charge is made that this tariff expert's wife owns shares in a Louisiana sugar company.

President Coolidge who has been proclaiming so vociferously to punish the guilty wherever found, has not made a single move to force the resignation of Commissioner Glassie from the Tariff Board. Coolidge has not even found it advisable to urge Mr. Glassie to disqualify himself during the determination of the effect of the tariff on sugar. Mr. Glassie is showing no signs if willingness to withdraw and vigorously contends for his right to continue as an expert on sugar duties.

It is only the Senate's preoccupation with the Teapot steal that has prevented a sensational expose of this condition in the Tariff Commission. This incident reminds one of the fact that it was the sugar interests, led by Smoot in the Senate, that had secured a raise on the tariff on sugar from $1.60 to $1.84 a 100 pounds bectuse the Cuban growers refused to reduce their crops. The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act thus enabled the sugar capitalists to clean up close to $100,000,000.

The principal significance of this conflict in the Tariff Board is simply another straw indicating that the whole capitalist system of government in the United States is rotten to the core and that the government in all its subdivisions is owned body and soul by the employing class.

I must make something of myself.
Older now
I walk back streets
Admiring the houses
Of the very poor:
Roof out of line with sides,
The yards cluttered
With old chicken wire, ashes,
Furniture gone wrong:
The fences and outhouses
Built of barrel-staves
And parts of boxes, all,
If I am fortunate,
Smeared a bluish green
That properly weathered
Pleases me best
Of all colors.
No one
Will believe this
Of vast importance to the nation.

DAUGHERTY-BURNS REGIME UNDER FIRE

CHARGES PLOT TO CUT FUNDS FOR SCHOOLS

N. E. A. Head Attacks Effort To Cripple Education

There is a national, organized campaign to cripple education in the United States thru cutting down funds for the public schools.

This charge has already been made by Prof. J. W. Crabtree, secretary of the National Education Association, meeting here this week. Plans for carrying on an organized fight against Anti-Education Propaganda will be taken up by the educators assembled here.

Just who is back of this campaign to cripple the public schools has not yet been revealed, but the facts will probably come out during the sessions of the N. E. A.

"America spends more for candy, soft drinks, and ice cream than for education," says Prof. Crabtree.

"It cost about $1,500,000,000 last year to have good schools," Crabtree estimated, and then compared this figure with the money spent for pleasure.

"How small that amount is compared to $2,111,000,000 for tobacco and $1,800,000,000 for candy, soft drinks, and ice cream!

"It cost only $1,500,000,000 for education for a year, but more than $3,000,000,000 for joy riding and pleasure."

Professor Crabtree said despite these startling figures, there was organized propaganda against spending so much money for schools.

The five-day convention of the N. E. A. opens this morning at the Auditorium Theater with an address of welcome by Mayor William E. Dever of Chicago.

The National Education Association is composed of about 125,000 members, most of whom are ordinary school teachers. A few years ago the superior superintendents formed a separate organization of all supervising officials of the schools and they are the people who really decide the questions that are of any importance.

Will Hold Separate Gathering.

The superintendents will discuss and make plans on such subjects as vocational and part time education, the education of the immigrant, the platoon system, shortening the elementary school course of study and other subjects that will touch the entire educational system of America.

The department of class room teachers who are the real backbone of the national education association and which contains the real teachers and the rebel elements will hold a conference during the course of the convention. They will maintain headquarters at the La Salle Hotel, far away from the main body of the convention.

Such "liberals" as John J. Tigert, commissioner of the United States government bureau of education of the department of the interior, who advocates the execution of all persons who are red enough to vote even the socialist ticket, will be among the speakers.

Fire First: Try Afterwards.

Fred. Hunter, superintendent of schools in Oakland, Calif., will speak on the "Major Objectives of Education." On the coast, Hunter is known as a reactionary of the deepest dye. He wanted to fire a school teacher because of liberal tendencies. She insisted on a trial. Hunter was willing that she be given a trial if she would consent to being fired first.

Carl Ormond Williams, of Tennessee, a democratic political leader among women and field secretary of the N. E. A., will speak on "School and Community Possibilities."

Josephine Corliss Preston, former president of the N. E. A. and state superintendent of public instruction in the state of Washington, will talk on "Teacher Training." In 1922 the friends of public education in Washington were trying to have a law passed that would make the big corporations in Washington pay their just share of the school taxes. Mrs. Preston lined up with the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, the central committee of the republican party, the kept newspapers and the lumber interests to defeat the bill.

Workers Party In Call to All Sections of Party to Celebrate CI Anniversary

Hailing the organization of the Communist International as an event of the greatest significance to the workingclass movement of the world, C. E. Ruthenberg, National Secretary of the Workers Party of America, has sent a communication to all District organizers and City Central Committees urging them to arrange meetings on March 5th in honor of the fifth anniversary of the launching of the Communist International. The statement follows:

• • • •

February 21, 1924.

The fifth anniversary of the founding of the Communist International comes on March 5th of this year. The Communist International issued a manifesto urging all parties in sympathy with it and following the leadership of the Communist International to arrange anniversary meetings.

The founding of the Communist International is an event in the history of the working class movement of the greatest importance. With the coming into existence of the Communist International, the workers' organizations for the first time found a leadership which could apply Marxian principles in action in the struggle of the workers for freedom.

Since March 5th, 1919, when the Communist International was organized, it won the support of millions of workers scattered over the entire globe. Today the workers in every country where there is a revolutionary struggle, look for the guidance and leadership to the Communist International. Its program, its principles, are the hope of the workers winning the struggle against their oppressors and exploiters, and their own emancipation.

The fact that the Communist International has over 5 years held the place at the head of the revolutionary working class movement, and from year to year its supporters and power has increased is best guarantee that the revolutionary movement will go forward and win its goal—The World Proletariat Revolution.

Our party must on March 5th demonstrate its loyalty and support to the Communist International as will the Communist Parties all over the world. On that day every party organization in each city must arrange a great mass meeting to celebrate the anniversary. All our Party papers are instructed to issue special anniversary editions on March 5th.

The whole party must mobilize its strength at once for these anniversary meetings. The time is short, but we must make them a great demonstration of the American workers in support of the leading body of the world revolution—THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL.

Executive Secretary, Workers Party.

OUSTED GARMENT UNIONISTS OFFER STRIKE SERVICES

With Fellow Workers Against Employers

Despite their expulsion from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union by Meyer Perlstein, self-appointed dictator, the sixteen expelled members of the Chicago locals have offered their services to the Joint Board in any task assigned to them during the threatened strike.

Holding the victory of the garment workers over the bosses as of greater import to them than their grievance against the autocratic methods of the reactionary union officialdom, the outlawed progressives yesterday sent the following letter to the local headquarters of the union:

Chicago, Feb. 22, 1924.
Joint Board of the I. L. G. W. U.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs and Brothers: In view of the impending strike action in the ladies' garment industry, we, the undersigned expelled members of the I. L. G. W. U., wish to state again our determination to do everything in our power to make the cause of the workers victorious over the employers, and to this end we again declare our willingness to undertake whatever tasks the organization may assign to us.

We state, at the same time, that the action which will do most to solidify and encourage the members of the union, and render the best fight possible, will be the complete reinstatement of the expelled members in full rights within the union.

Fraternally yours,
The Expelled Members.

Ugly Rumors Heard As Coolidge Aid To Daugherty Is Made Plain to All

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Senator Robinson's charge that Attorney General Daugherty is remaining in office to use the machinery of the department of justice against the senators forcing the oil investigations and the probable effect of Senator Wheeler's resolution calling for an investigation of the department of justice are the two topics of conversation here today.

They overshadow even the new disclosures concerning the contingent fee of $1,000,000 that E. L. Doheny was to have paid the law firm with which McAdoo is connected in the event of their Mexican oil negotiations being successful.

It is hinted openly that "legal services" is a euphemism disguising the use of McAdoo's influence with Bainbridge Colby, the last Wilson secretary of state, to withhold recognition of the Mexican government until it had met the terms of Doheny and other oil operators.

The announcement of leading members of the senate investigating committee that they from now on will strive to lay the basis for criminal prosecutions has added to the tension in official circles as has the endorsement of Daugherty by Coolidge as delegate to the republican convention from Ohio.

The ugliest rumors yet heard in connection with the administration are now afloat as the result of the defiant attitude of Daugherty towards demands for his resignation.

"What has he got on them?" is the question asked and as yet unanswered in every center of political discussion in the capital.

D. OF J. HEAD TO TERRORIZE QUIZ BACKERS

Says Senator Robinson; Sticks To Control Sleuths

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Senator Robinson has charged that Daugherty is remaining in office over the protests of some of his own party leaders, in order to keep control of the investigating agencies of the government during the proposed investigation of his department.

W. J. Burns, head of the secret service, had been summoned to Washington to direct service agents in "investigation of the investigators," Robinson said.

"He has characterized those responsible for this investigation as 'blackguards and scandal mongers' while he holds up Secretary of the Navy Denby as a martyr."

Impeachment proceedings against Attorney General Daugherty were suggested by Senator Borah.

Borah said that "the only way this investigation can go forward is by impeachment."

"For my part I am willing to take my part in laying the foundation for such proceedings."

Borah asserted that present conditions in the government demanded above all else a man at the head of the department of justice who "had the full confidence and respect of the people."

"If the attorney-general remains in office, President Coolidge must accept the full responsibility and he must answer to the people for that responsibility," said Borah.

"The people have come to doubt the efficiency, competency and cleanness of the government at Washington."

Borah said he agreed with Robinson that it was not proper for a man to remain at the head of a great investigating agency of the government at the time his administration of that agency was to be investigated.

Coolidge Endorses Daugherty.

President Coolidge approved Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty as one of the Coolidge delegates to the Republican convention, the full slate of which will be submitted to the Ohio electorate in the April primaries.

The public endorsement of Daugherty, regarded at the White House as "perfunctory" caused a political stir, as it constitutes Mr. Coolidge's first open expression of his attitude towards Daugherty whose removal from the Cabinet leading Republican senators are seeking on the grounds that he has lost public confidence.

Mr. Coolidge personally signed a "consent slip" bearing Daugherty's name as a delegate. In the same manner he approved the entire slate

FARMER-LABORITES TO HOLD PRELIMINARY MEET ON MARCH 10

ST. PAUL, Minn., Feb. 24.—Conferees planning the organization of a National Party, have been summoned to meet in St. Paul again March 10 and 11.

They met here last November 15 when it was decided to issue a call for a national convention in the Twin Cities on May 30. Since then various developments have prevented issuance of the call.

William Mahoney was chairman of the November 15 Conference in St. Paul. He issued the call today for a second meeting of the conferees, who will decide what course to take in view of the calling of the Cleveland Convention.

Indications are that they will insist upon the convention in the Twin Cities being held as there is a fear that the Cleveland Convention may develop into a movement for the indorsement of W. G. McAdoo, should he get the Democratic nomination. This would have the effect of heading off a third party movement in the event an earlier convention was not held.

Klan Agrees to Bounce Glenn Young

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 24.—Four of the five Illinois national guard companies on riot duty in Williamson county today were ordered to entrain immediately for their home stations.

Company I, Salem, will remain at Herrin for the time being.

The Mt. Vernon, Carbondale, Cairo and Paris companies were ordered home. They will leave tonight or early tomorrow.

Governor Len Small ordered the removal of the four companies at the suggestion of Sheriff George Galligan of Williamson county, who assured the state executive that plans have been made to prevent further trouble.

Klan and anti-klan leaders have agreed to park their artillery on condition that Glenn Young was fired and anti-klan deputies commissioned by Sheriff Galligan.

DAUGHERTY FEARS BARING SPY SYSTEM

Wheeler Resolution Has Labor Baiters Scared

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Determination on the part of Senator Wheeler to expose the alliance of the Daugherty regime in the department of justice with industrial thuggery and spies in the labor and radical movements, is one of the chief reasons why the old guard in the senate is fighting with its back to the wall to prevent Wheeler from getting a genuine investigation into the scandalous lawlessness of Daugherty's activities.

Skeletons in the administration closet will be dragged out into the daylight, if a fair hearing is given his evidence.

The country will learn how Daugherty happened to try to break the railway shopmen's strike by his injunctions and propaganda; why he threatened the coal miners when they went on strike in 1922; why his stool pigeons were discovered here and there and everywhere in American industry, plotting and intriguing with big corporations.

The gunmen in industry will be reviewed, and their relations with Daugherty's office will be traced.

Important to Labor.

This is only one of the many features of Daugherty's rule that must be examined if the public gets a square deal from the inquiry that Wheeler has demanded. It is not yet so sensationally appreciated as Daugherty's connection with the oil gang, or his failure to prosecute war frauds or criminals at the Veteran's bureau, or thieves pointed out by the federal trade commission. But it may prove more significant to the development of the American labor movement than any of these other offenses. The old guard senators know it; Coolidge and his panic-swept cabinet know it. They wish

Food Prices Up 3 Per Cent Since Last Year, 52 Per Cent Since 1913

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Lower food prices brought a decline of 1% in the cost of the wage earner's budget, according to the January report of the U. S. department of labor. But the cost still remains 3% above that in January, 1923, and 52% above January, 1913.

A seasonal drop in the prices of oranges, eggs, and dairy products was chiefly responsible for the lower cost in January as compared with December. Meats, vegetables and canned goods all increased in price.

In the course of the year the following cities, chiefly of the middle west, reported more than the average increase in the cost of a food budget: Springfield, Ill., 8%; Peoria, 7%; Cincinnati, Columbus, Milwaukee and Omaha, 6%; Chicago, Dallas, Denver, Louisville, Pittsburgh and St. Louis, 5%; Atlanta, Birmingham, Houston, Indianapolis, Jacksonville, Kansas City, Memphis, Mobile and San Francisco, 5%.

VANDERLIP URGES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE PROBE

Hammers Failure to Prosecute Graft

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—"The department of justice, itself, obviously now must be investigated," Frank A. Vanderlip told the Masonic Club in a speech at Ossining last night, continuing his campaign against corruption in the government.

Vanderlip said that "no such statements about the department of justice as have been made in the senate can be allowed to go unchallenged."

The banker, who last week brought the name of the late President Harding into the oil lease scandal by urging an investigation of rumors that the Marion Star had been sold for far more than it was worth, reviewed the whole series of investigations in Washington and declared the government is proceeding in the wrong way.

"The machinery of justice," he said, "not the courts but the machinery back of the courts, has failed to bring forward for trial men whose guilt appears clear from prima facie evidence."

Vanderlip described his taking a hand in bringing publicity to bear on the scandals as a "moral war." PIK UP

VANDERLIP IN BAD.

By Laurence Todd

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Frank A. Vanderlip simply couldn't understand the short-range vision of the senate oil scandal investigating committee, when they called him down here from New York to ask him—a giant of finance and big business and war patriotism—what he had meant by making a "common rumor" speech of scandal and alarm to the Rotary Club of Briarcliff, near Sing Sing.

He Ought to Know.

Hadn't he, the great Vanderlip, been president of Standard Oil's National City bank, head of the American International Corporation, grand poo-bah of the crusade to make the world safe for democracy and foreign concessions, and general shining light of the high temple of the cult of gain?

These machine politicians, with a sprinkling of mild progressives, were calling him to account for having repeated, in a loud and fiery manner of complete righteousness, a grist of rumors involving the shipping board, the Veterans' bureau, the Alien Property Custodian, and the price paid for Present Harding's newspaper, out in Marion, O. And while most of them were ready to admit they had heard the rumors, many many more, they were shocked that Vanderlip had come forward in a public meeting and "broadcasted" the suggestion that Harding received for his newspaper twice what it was worth, from a mysterious source and for an unknown consideration. They demanded facts from Vanderlip, and he assured them that he had no facts. On the contrary, he said he had done a patriotic thing, in bringing "these scandalous rumors to light, so that the memory of my friend Mr. Harding may be cleared."

Vanderlip Juggled.

When he was questioned by Pittman as to what caused him to speak of the Harding newspaper deal and to ask "Where did the money come from?" and then to charge that the senate committee had let Fall go because it was afraid Fall would confess on higher-ups, the banker denied that he had had any thought of involving Harding in the oil scandal. He also admitted, when informed that the committee had let Fall go because his forced testimony would give him immunity from criminal prosecution, that he had been wrong in charging the committee with cowardice.'

But it was clear, nevertheless, that Vanderlip could not understand why he had been blamed for warning the country that the good old system of commercialism was in need of an inspection and repairs. What if he had been sensational? In his memory must have stirred a hundred after-dinner speeches by just such bankers as himself, and just such politicians as these who now glowered and shouted and hammered the table at him—speeches denouncing German atrocities in Belgium that never happened, and nationalization of women in Russia that never occurred, and over-throw of Porfirio Diaz "civilization" in Mexico that proved a blessing to mankind. Why had he never been called to book for lying about these more serious things?

Traitor to His Class.

He had no evidence; he had merely said that rumors were going around; those rumors would keep on going, unless somebody had "the courage to speak out."

And the senators, each in his own degree, showed disapproval of Vanderlip. He had turned on his class. He had spoken ill of Harding, in effect, and he had created a panic among the Standpatters.

A carbon copy of a telegram from one Mosely in Philadelphia to Senator Willis of Ohio was sent along the press tables. It charged that Vanderlip had "made addresses in support of the soviets"—a discovery that will much surprise the friends of Russia.

Firemen Caught in Blaze.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 24.—Five firemen are in the hospital, three more are believed to be trapped in smouldering ruins and the Marx Isaacs department store with three adjacent buildings is a total loss as a result of an early morning fire here.

Get unity thru the Labor Party!

Senator Davis Elkins has admitted that he gambled in Sinclair oil. He not only admits but boasts of it.

Senator Elkins is among the five richest of the twenty-one millionaires in the senate.

He is a member of such aristocratic and plutocratic organizations as the Metropolitan Club of Washington, the Harvard Club and the Tennis and Racquet Club of New York.

He inherited immense business interests from his father from whom he also inherited a seat in the senate—the Elkins West Virginian dynasty.

He is president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Morgantown, W. Va., Vice-President of the American National Bank of Washington, and Vice-President of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railroad.

The principality of this oil-smeared potentate is the "sovereign" state of West Virginia, where the Guggenheims are overlords, anti-union coal magnates find a paradise, the Baldwin-Felts gunmen find steady employment and the workers are ruled by the Colt automatic and machine-guns.

Senator Elkins is one of the last of the old school of industrial lords who believe in doing the dirty work in Washington themselves instead of hiring lawyers for it.

Criminal Prosecution Is Now Objective of Senate Committee

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—"Get facts that will make legal cases for prosecution."

This is the purpose of Senator Walsh, as he completed today his program for next week's probings of the Teapot Dome Committee.

Walsh, who has just returned to Washington after a week's absence to study the scope of the inquiry, is bent upon getting the investigation out of realm of gossip and fancy and return it once more into channels that will dig at the fundamentals of the scandal.

After a series of conferences designed to develop a new line of inquiry in the oil investigation, Senator Thomas J. Walsh notified Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, to appear before the investigating committee.

Slemp will be the first witness and strong indications were given that he will be questioned closely about certain stock transactions.

Walsh made this announcement after conferring with Senator Adams and Senator Kendrick, democratic members of the committee.

Criminal Cases Object.

First off, Walsh would turn the committee on the trail of the "inside story" of the entire deal for leasing the naval oil reserves. This story, it is said, will yield the grounds for criminal prosecutions, because it is claimed if it can be drawn out, it will show actual criminal intent.

The man who is said to know the story and to be willing to tell it if his own interests are protected, already is under a committee subpoena. He wants to protect himself, but the committee has met his advances to this end with no promises.

Under this new trend of the case, the plan for this week calls for a getting "back to basic facts." Walsh had a clearly defined program of procedure which got out of hand when extraneous matters began to be thrown into the hearings in order to confuse its operations. This reached a climax when Frank A. Vanderlip was called in to explain about rumors he had heard regarding the sale of President Harding's paper, the Marion Star.

Sabotage by Officials.

It was at this juncture that Walsh decided it would be a good time to suspend hearings so that he could revamp the program. That is what he has been doing during his absence this week.

Meantime he points out that it is a singular fact that the committee, of which he is the prime moving factor, is "going it alone."

No aid is being contributed by any of the government agencies which might well be expected to be functioning in cooperation with the committee—the department of justice, the navy department and the secret service. All these are leaving the whole probe to the senators.

Here is the schedule as desired by Senator Walsh:

1.—Call Edward McLean, Washington newspaper publisher, who was an intimate friend of President Harding, and other leaders in the administration, to learn what he knows or is willing to tell about the inception of the scheme to lease the naval oil reserves and who was in on the play.

2.—Call C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, for questioning about conversations he is supposed to have had with McLean and certain government officials.

3.—Call Harry F. Sinclair, for questioning about various phases of this lease of Teapot Dome naval reserve in the hope that indirect evidence now before the committee may be obtained in form permitting its use in criminal prosecutions.

Fall Balks Committee.

The committee admittedly ran into a stone wall when former Secretary of Interior Fall refused to take the stand and tell his story. It is feared Sinclair and even Edward L. Doheny—the two lessees of the naval reserves—may now decline to testify further and that the only hope of tearing the lid off lies in obtaining the inside story from the source already mentioned.

Slemp was in Palm Beach, Fla., about the same time as Fall and McLean. It was at that time McLean said he had "loaned" $100,000 to Fall and later retracted his statement to the effect that the checks had never been cashd. Officials of local Washington banks are to be asked if they have any definite information regarding the transaction.

Connections Sought.

Walsh did not make clear what "stock transactions" Slemp might be questioned about. Other members of the committee are interested in asking the presidential secretary just what moved him to go to Palm Beach in December when former Secretary of Interior Fall and Edward B. McLean, purchaser of the Washington Post, were there.

They also desire to ask him about conferences he has had with Attorney General Daugherty, but Walsh indicated he has some questions to ask beyond these.

Chairman Lenroot of the Teapot Dome committee has conferred with an accounting expert who has been surveying books of Washington brokerage firms. The survey probably will be completed by the middle of the week, Lenroot said.

Denials were made by all members of the committee that the names of any additional officials had been found on the brokerage books.

Some results of the brokerage inspection may be made public when the committee resumes in open hearings on Monday.

Bank Official Summoned.

Milton Ailes, president of the Riggs National Bank of Washington, has been summoned to appear Monday in connection with the so-called million dollar slush fund which is rumored to have been sent down to Washington by New York financiers to cover stock losses of certain government officials.

Ailes will be asked if any such fund was deposited in his bank.

No communication has been received by Walsh or Lenroot from Harry F. Sinclair, who leased the Teapot Dome naval reserve from Fall. Walsh said a subpoena had not yet been issued for Sinclair because the committee had not yet decided the exact time when his appearance would be required.

After Slemp leaves the witness stand on Monday Walsh intends to call Ailes and other local bank officials.

McLean has not been requested to appear Monday because Walsh desires first to lay the basis for McLean's testimony by Slemp and other previous witnesses.

Doheny Is Wroth.

Lenroot announced he would lay before the committee Monday a letter from Edward L. Doheny, lessee of California naval reserves who loaned $100,000 to Fall on a personal note, the signature of which has not yet been produced before the inquiring committee.

Doheny in his letter suggested that Senator Wheeler be made to prove a charge that Daugherty, Doheny, Sinclair and McLean were intimate friends and often met in the apartments of the attorney general. Lenroot said he would leave to the committee as to whether Wheeler should be asked to appear. Wheeler laughed at the Doheny letter.

"Red Herring," Says Wheeler.

"Mr. Doheny is attempting to draw a red herring across the trail," Mr. Wheeler said.

"What the people want is an investigation of Attorney General Daugherty. That is the main issue. After that they can investigate me or anyone else."

Subpoenas for some additional witnesses may be issued later today.

No subpoena will be written for Slemp. Walsh notified him indirect late yesterday that his appearance was desired.

He called him on the phone and told him to be present.

A report also is expected from the accounting experts who have been running down the written report obtained by Senator Wheeler, Montana democrat, "indicating Attorney General Daugherty speculated in oil stocks."

Judge Defeats Woman's Effort to Escape Gallows

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 24.—Mrs. Ida May Hughes, sentenced to hang March 14 for the murder of her mother-in-law, lost a new fight for her life here today.

Judge G. H. Howard, in superior court, refused a motion setting aside the verdict and sentence on the grounds that the jury's decision was read while the defendant was absent from the court room.

The motion was designed to free Mrs. Hughes from prison and all charges in connection with the murder.

Lithuanians In Stock Yards.

The Lithuanian Workers' Alliance will hold a mass protest meeting Friday, Feb. 22, on this particular issue. The stock yards workers, of which a large percentage are of Lithuanian birth, are taking active part in the arrangements.

The Southslavic workers of Chicago, who have succeeded in uniting a total of some 25 organizations, comprising nearly 5,000 members on a united front for their mutual interests, have gone on record to do everything in their power to launch an effective protest against the proposed finger-print laws. Literature is being published to make clear to the workers just what these measures mean, and preparations are being made for mass protest meetings.

The provisional committee of Jewish workers established on the initiative of our Party units, to take part in this campaign, has now become definitely crystallized into a council for the protection of the foreign-born workers. Over twenty organizations were represented at the first conference held recently, inclusive of local unions of the Amalgamated Clothing workers, Cap Makers, Workmens' Circle, Branches of the Workers Party and others.

Those branches of the Workmens' Circle, who in the past have followed the general policies of the Jewish Daily Forward but became embittered at the action taken by the bureaucrats in control of this paper, in excluding the left-wing branches from a conference held nearly two weeks ago, have also joined in and became part of the present established council. Effective steps have been taken to bring all the Jewish workers of Chicago into the campaign for protection of the foreign-born workers.

Scandinavians Organizing.

The Scandinavian population, who furnish a great part of the industrial army of this city, are scattered in colonies mainly on the North, South and West sides. Upon the initiative of our Party units central organizations are being formed within each of these colonies to take up this vital issue. Even the churches have become interested, realizing that the workers following their particular creed are endangered.

The conference to be held on March 2 will unite the efforts of the many thousands of workers, no matter what other political differences may exist, in an effective protest against the endeavors to convert the foreign-born working class population of this country into available material for strike-breaking purposes and wipe out every vestige of labor organization.

Chicago Meeting Tomorrow.

A general Party membership meeting has been called tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. at Imperial Hall, 2409 N. Halsted Street. In order to consider all the vital questions arising out of the Party campaign in connection with the Teapot Dome scandal. Leading these issues is the Labor Party movement, made more prominent by the St. Paul convention on May 30.

The campaign for protection of foreign-born workers, as well as the Daily Worker subscription drive will also be discussed at that meeting. Every member should be present. Membership book will admit.

Industrial Accidents Increase.

SEATTLE, Feb. 24.—A life a day is the toll of industry in the state of Washington, according to the state department of labor and industry. Industrial accidents during January mounted to 3,163.

Of 32 men fatally hurt in this state during the month of January, 20 were killed in the logging and lumbering business, four in general construction work, and two in coal mining. The total of injuries for the month of January exceeded the total of the same month last year by 39 per cent.

Daugherty War Graft Report Kept From Public By Senator Friend

(By The Federated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The American people must not be given too much light on these war fraud cases, all at once. It might hurt them—or somebody.

Senator King of Utah, rising in his place on Feb. 19, moved to rescind the order of the previous day under which Attorney General Daugherty's report on the war fraud litigation was to have been printed as a public document.

"My attention has been called", he said, "to some matters connected with the report, which, in my judgment, indicate that perhaps that order was improvidently issued."

Inasmuch as the report from Daugherty had been demanded at King's suggestion, his willingness to turn the material over to the Senate judiciary committee for its careful scrutiny was welcomed by Senator Willis, spokesman for Daugherty, and the Senate agreed to that course.

of Ohio delegates submitted to him by George B. Harris of Cleveland. This step is required under Ohio law of a candidate in the primaries there in April, at which the delegates will be formally chosen.

Political Endorsement.

While the President's approval of Daugherty as a delegate has of itself nothing to do with his attitude towards Daugherty as attorney-general of the United States, such a political endorsement, in the face of the attacks upon Daugherty by three of the most influential Republican senators—Lodge, Pepper and Borah—held great significance for politicians here.

It was pointed out that if Mr. Coolidge had declined to approve Daugherty that would have been accepted at once as an indication he was no longer standing by the Attorney General. Conversely, the fact that he did accept Daugherty as one of his delegates was regarded as equally clear indication that he is standing by him.

President Coolidge is courting political ruin by keeping Attorney General Daugherty in the Cabinet, Senator Robinson, Arkansas, Democratic floor leader, said in a speech to the Senate.

Robinson's speech was delivered just after it had been announced at the White House that Mr. Coolidge had endorsed Daugherty as a "Coolidge delegate" from Ohio to the next Republican national convention. This step by the President followed within less than 24 hours a defense of Daugherty by John T. Adams, chairman of the Republican Committee, who said the assaults on Daugherty were being conducted by "political blackguards and scandal mongers."

"It must be clear to everybody," Robinson said, "that so long as the President retains as his intimate political adviser a man who has lost his confidence and the confidence of the people, it is calculated to work out the political ruin of the executive."

Fear Exposure of Spy System

To the Point.

Wheeler's speech in the senate on Feb. 19, demanding that Daugherty be forthwith put under examination before a special committee, was blunt and ominous. He had shown how Fall and Doheny and others had admitted their guilt in the oil deal sufficiently to warrant prosecution, and that Daugherty had done nothing.

"Thruout the entire investigation," he said, "not one scintilla of evidence has been offered to the senate committee by any of the investigators for the department of justice. Here the congress has appropriated a million dollars for the detection and prosecution of crime. We have employed the Burns detective agency, one of the most renowned detective agencies in the world, and we find that the department of justice, instead of trying to detect the greatest crooks and those guilty of the greatest crimes against the nation that have ever been perpetrated—we find the department of justice protecting them all during this time; we find them protecting them tonight, because I am reliably informed that only last Sunday that attorney general of the United States held a conference with Ed McLean.

Daugherty and McLean.

"Then what do we find? We find the attorney general going down to Palm Beach and there consulting with McLean. When the newspapers carried the story that McLean was about to testify as to his connection with the oil scandal, and that it would expose Mr. Daugherty, we find Mr. Daugherty immediately getting in touch with Mr. McLean again.

"This is only a small portion, an extremely small portion, of the testimony that will be produced before the committee, showing, beyond any question of doubt to my mind, that the attorney general of the United States, the highest law officer in the nation, instead of prosecuting crime has been protecting crime and criminals."

Blocks Doublecross.

Because he has made this charge, and because he knows that the majority of the old guard are alike afraid of keeping Daugherty and of seeming to join in kicking him overboard, Wheeler boldly blocked the trick of Willis of Ohio, messenger boy for Daugherty, who had slipped into the hand of Senator Cummins, presiding over the senate, a list of senators who should make up the special committee to try the case. Willis, as Wheeler promptly told the senate, had just come from a conference with Daugherty, and this list must have been suggested or approved by the accused.

Meanwhile everyone around the capitol had learned how "Cautious Cal" had staged Borah's visit to the White House; had dramatically summoned Daugherty into the room; had listened in silence for two hours while Borah told Daugherty that not even Coolidge had any confidence in him, and that he, Daugherty, ought to resign; how Coolidge had just twiddled his spectacles in both hands, and said nothing, even at the end, and how Daugherty stayed in the cabinet—for the perilous present.

The Machine Workers' Dreams Puzzle Dr. Read, and Others Too

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—"What kind of a dream do you dream while you attend your machine—if you attend a machine—or while you do whatever mechanical work is required of you in this age of specialization?

"The machine is run to the accompaniment of human revery."

That is not a line from a modern poet, but a quotation from an address made by Dr. Thomas T. Read, Chief of the Bureau of Education of the Bureau of Mines, before the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers here.

The mental make-up of the individual, he said, is determined far more by this habitual reveries than his concentrated thinking. And . . . "by way of habitual revery comes scientific genius at one end of the scale and mental obsession of melancholia at the other.

"It is important therefore to discover what reveries habitually dominate the average individual and why. This is especially important, since in all machine operation, once the individual is habituated to his task, the mood of revery is necessarily dominant. The worker does not need to concentrate on his work, but he cannot concentrate on other things. The machine is therefore run to the accompaniment of human revery."

That is to say day-dreams. . . . What are the machine tenders dreaming about? A great many people in this big market town, besides scientists like Dr. Read, would give a lot to know.

LEGION HEAD NOW ADMITS BIG BIZ GOT WAR PROFITS

Says Dough Was Used to Fight Bonus

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Feb. 24.—Defeat of bonus legislation up to date has moved John R. Quinn, national commander of the American Legion, to launch an attack at Big Business for its opposition to the bonus.

In an address to American Legion representatives from Southern states he demanded that in the next war money and means must be drafted as well as men.

War profits were used to fight the bonus bill, he declared, and President Harding was led to veto it by an "astounding miscalculation" of treasury statistics by Secretary Mellon.

"And so it goes on; Mellon juggles figures and big business spends a few hoarded war profits to fight against the passage of obligations which are pledged to us by the republican party. I say that taxes can be reduced as much or even more than Secretary Mellon contemplates without hardship to any person, and you have heard the figures that prove it. I leave the issue to your conscience."

Teapot Was Losing Proposition, Says Harry, The Spoofer

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 24.—Harry Sinclair is glad to get rid of Teapot Dome. All the scandals of the oil investigations in the U. S. Senate are part of a baleful, machiavellian, master-mind plot of Harry himself because he couldn't find any oil in the Teapot, didn't know how to get rid of it, and so hit upon the plan of investigating himself thru the Senate. He knew the psychology of the American people so well that he reckoned that they would cancel his worthless lease, if graft were hinted, and he would thus get rid of the burden.

Harry himself admits all of the above. At least, that's the kind of propaganda he sends down to Mexico. Read the stupendous confession word for word as it appeared in the English section of Excelsior down here. But take a sedative before you begin, 'cause it's exciting. All ready? Here goes:

Special Staff Telegram from Excelsior's Office.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 24. (Delayed.)—The Harry Sinclair teapot dome revelations are being read here with the greatest interest as Sinclair is well known here. There is more than a suspicion that Sinclair brought about the investigations himself in order to get the teapot dome leases cancelled and part of his expenditures returned

It is believed here that the government possibly made a good deal so that it would get fuel oil at a very low price and provided the teapot dome had been highly prolific Sinclair would have a made a good thing out of it in spite of the stiff terms, but it is a colossal failure as compared to the expectations. Sinclair has obligated himself to drill a certain number of wells and if he goes thru with his contract he will suffer a tremendous loss. It is now the logical conclusion that he is going to get out of the affair as best he can which is to have the government cancel the whole business and reimburse him for money already spent. He knows the public mind well enough to understand that the public will insist upon the cancellation.

Consumer Must Pay Thrice What Farmer Gets; Coolidge Told

By LELAND OLDS,
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Exploitation of farmers at the hands of modern commercialism again comes to light in the attempt of Railroad Financier B. F. Yoakum to educate President Coolidge to an understanding of the farm problem.

Yoakum pointed out to the president that the consumers are today paying $22,500,000,000 a year for food products for which the farmer gets only $7,500,000,000 out of which to pay all the expenses of producing the foods.

This leaves nearly $15,000,000,000 for the distributers or approximately twice the amount paid the farmer. Yoakum expressed his conviction that national prosperity will be restored only when the figures are reversed, the farmer getting the $15,000,000,000 and the middleman getting the $7,500,000,000.

But he is not reported to have called the president's attention to the fact that the problem can be solved only when distribution is under the joint control of the wage earner consumers and the farmer producers.

Banker, Grateful to Policeman: Will See That He Is Buried

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 24.—Glen Bond, slain police officer, will not be buried in a pauper's grave.

Bond, a new patrolman, was killed Wednesday by bandits attempting to rob the Merchant's National Bank branch, which he was guarding. Because he had not been on the force a year, his relatives are not entitled to the $1,000 paid following death in service. Neither he nor his cousin here possessed funds.

But the bank which the officer died protecting, will see that Bond is properly buried, officials of the institution have announced. The body will be placed in a fine casket and shipped to the family in Casey, Ill. for burial there.

United Council of Working Class Women Is Initiating Big Movement To End Housing Evils in Metropolis

By JAY LOVESTONE.

Because of the increasing cost of rent, the serious congestion and the do-nothing policy of the government in the acute housing crisis that prevails in New York and other industrial centers of the country, the masses, particularly the women of the working class, have begun to organize themselves to put an end to the present dangerous state of affairs.

Tenants' Associations

No sooner had the United States entered the World War than the landlords launched an organized campaign to raise rents. Soon the rentals became so oppressive that the tenants could no longer bear them.

Many rent strikes were organized by the women of the working class in order to stop the landlords from continuing their exorbitant rentals.

This discontent took on an organized form in various associations of tenants in the different sections of New York. Similar demonstrations were occasioned by the rent situation in other cities of the country.

Typical of such tenant organizations existing in the big cities are the following societies of Greater New York. The Audubon Community Council, the West Harlem Tenants' Association, The Washington Heights Tenants' Association, the Manhattanville Community Council, The Federation of Tenants' Association of Greater New York, the Mount Morris Community Council and Civic Organization, The Tremont Tenants' Civic League, the various Consumers' Leagues, the different Mothers' Leagues, and the United Council of Working Class Women.

Except for the United Council of Working Class Women these organizations are in the main controlled by small business men or local assembly district politicians of the Democratic and Republican parties or their agents. It was prior to the appointment of the New York State Housing Committee by the Governor in 1920, that the height of tenants' organizations was achieved by the working class in New York. Since then the organization amongst the most hard pressed, the poorest tenants, has been dwindling to insignificance.

The reason for the failure on the part of these tenant organizations to achieve strength is obvious. As soon as the various tenants' leagues stopped their vigorous fight against the landlords and against the government officials who were helping the landlords continue their policy of rule and ruin, the organizations simply died of doing nothing. They atrophied. Their program was based fundamentally on the continuation of the present system of landlord domination of the housing facilities of the country.

The United Council of Working Class Women

Recently there was an attempt made by women in the sections of the city occupied by working class tenants to revive the tenants' organization movement. It was natural for the women to assume the initiative in this field since they are the first to suffer the effects of high rents, poor housing and unsanitary living conditions.

On October 28th, 1923, at the call of the Consumers' League of the Bronx, there was held a conference in the Forward Hall. At this conference there gathered representatives of the Workmen's Tenants' Leagues, the United Hebrew Trades, the Socialist Consumers' League, the Socialist Party, and the Woman's Committee of the Local Workers Party. This conference constituted itself for further action and arranged to call a larger gathering on Dec. 23, 1923.

The December convention was attended by 78 delegates. Amongst the delegations represented were the following: Seven local trade unions, the Joint Board of the Socialist Consumers' League, the Workmen's' Tenants' Consumers' League, the Workers Party, the Lithuanian Women's Progressive Alliance, the committee of action of the Mother's League, the African Blood Brotherhood, and branches of the Socialist Consumers' League.

The conference elected an executive committee consisting of Kate Gitlow, Rose Barron, Mrs. Bourgin, Mrs. Yeshkevitz, Nevin, Citrin, Mintz, Pastor, Sonia Diamond and Mrs. Touroff. Mrs. Kate Gitlow is the secretary-treasurer, and the headquarters of the United Council of Working Class Women—for the protection of working class interests—has its office at 127 University Place. To date 46 working class bodies have endorsed the rent conference and elected a central committee with one representative from such body attending the conference.

Preparation are afoot to have another conference at an early date. Plans are also being developed to organize a big demonstration of working class women against the present unspeakable housing conditions from which the poor are now suffering in New York. Already four successful meetings have been held under the auspices of the Committee of Action.

First Real Mass Movement

The Committee of Action in charge of the work of this body has been given full power to take effective steps to bring together all working class organizations and especially the women of the working class regardless of what political or other organization they are members. A united fight against high rents and houses unfit for habitation is the objective of the organization.

The full significance of the United Council of Working Class Women lies in the fact that this is, practically speaking, the first and the most conscious effort on the part of the mass of tenants to approach the housing problem in a realistic manner. This organization properly views the housing question not as an isolated problem, the solution of which is possible by some peculiar brand of legislation or thru the good favor of some capitalist politician. This organization considers the housing crisis as one of the evils inherent in the whole system of present class capitalist property relationships. We quote in part from the official program of this League to show its practical character and the redeeming feature distinguishing it from most of its predecessors: "Tho we know that at present the rent problem is the burning question of the day for the workers and while we carry on the fight for lower rents and better conidtions now, we know that the workers in the future also have to face problems from time to time that vitally concern them. There are even more problems to combat at present, especially for the women, such as, better and more schools and playgrounds for the children, the open shop which is of great concern to the working class, and unemployment which is threatening the workers from time to time."

"Therefore in order to carry on an effective struggle at present and to take care of future problems concerning the workers, a united working class is needed."

This Organization Will Grow

The outlook for the future of this organization is good. With such virile constituent bodies as the Consumers' League of the Bronx, the the Consumers' League of Harlem, the Lithuanian Progressive Women's Alliance which alone has a membership of more than 2,000, the Socialist Consumers' League, and the Women's Circle, there is every reason to believe that this organization will grow.

Some of the immediate slogans of the United Council of Working Class Women have already met with a splendid response from the workers in New York. Among the practical proposals put forward by the Council we find a demand for an increase in taxes on costly private homes and apartments and that the city and state administrations build and rent apartments to them at cost in order to relieve the present unbearable housing conditions.

The housing crisis is not limited to New York. Every city and industrial community in the country faces difficulties in securing adequate housing facilities that the working class can afford to pay for. Essentially this problem is the same thruout the country except only for some variation in form.

What is necessary is a nation-wide organization of strong tenants' leagues of the working class on the basis of a practical program to end the present acute distress.

Mathematicians Get Busy.

DAYTON, Ohio, Feb. 24.—McCook field officials today are awaiting the result of the official calibration of Lieut. John A. MacReady's altitude flight, which terminated yesterday after his altimeter had recorded a height of 41,000 feet.

Calibration made by local observers fixed his unofficial height at 34,893 feet. MacReady was out to beat the record of Sadi Lecointe which is 36,745 feet.

SENATOR ANGRY WHEN HIS FOE IMPUGNS MOTIVE

Cynical Spectators in Spasms of Mirth

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 24.—Vaudeville houses are practically empty these days. Their patrons attend every session of the Senate and find that august chamber more exciting and interesting.

The efforts of pompous senators to explain actions that look suspiciously like good business, as being motivated by the highest considerations of patriotism, bring forth peals of laughter that would make Al Jolson turn pale with envy.

A few days ago a very interesting altercation took place between Senators Phipps and Ashurst, republican and democrat, respectively, of Colorado. The House committee appropriated the sum of $250,000 for an electric plant in which Senator Phipps is stockholder. The Senate committee voted to lop off the quarter million. Senator Phipps was the only member of the committee to non-concur. This was meat for his democrat opponent.

Let the gentlemen talk. This is what they say to each other:

"Here comes the Southern Sierra High Power Company and one of its stockholders sits on the committee. I want to ask him how he voted on this item."

"I voted to cut this item out," replied Senator Phipps.

"Voted Money in Pocket."

"That is what I thought, and thereby you put money into your own pocket," Ashurst replied in a loud voice.

"But——" interrupted Mr. Phipps.

"There is no 'but' about it," replied the Arizona senator. "When you voted to cut it out you voted to put money in your own pocket, and to deprive the farmers of the valley there of the right to have a high power plant. You should have said, 'I refuse to vote.'"

"I warn the senator not to impute motives," Mr. Phipps exclaimed.

"I care nothing about your warnings," was Mr. Ashurst's retort.

Phipps Promises Statement.

"I will in my own time," Senator Phipps interrupted, "make a full and complete statement."

"The senator had better make it a confession," Mr. Ashurst replied.

"It will be a statement I shall be proud to make on the floor of the Senate," Mr. Phipps declared.

"There is," Ashurst replied, "such a thing as being above pride and below pride."

Senator Phipps got the floor. He was deeply moved.

"I came to the senate," he said, "without one pledge or promise outstanding. I have held my place here, I believe, devoting my time to the service of my country. I have never been approached by any individual or company or the representative of a company, improperly, nor have I been asked at any time how I should vote."

These noble words should set at rest any suspicions rankling in the bosom of any but a case-hardened democrat. The Senate is known as the millionaire's club. The lower house is composed of senate candidates on probation. A worker is as scarce in either house as a snake in Ireland. When thieves fall out honest men do not always get their due but they get a lot of useful information. The democrats and republicans are now so anxious to gobble up all the graft to be had in the government that they are recklessly spilling the beans on each other. The workers are beginning to coin the slogan, "A plague on both your houses; it is time the workers should rule and let the capitalist grafters get out." Every little scandal helps.

Gompers Foisting Kolchak Socialist on Detroit Labor

By CYRIL LAMBKIN
(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Feb. 24.—Delegates to the Detroit Federation of Labor and visitors who are familiar with the major events of the Russian Revolution regarded each other with amazement at the meeting of the Federation last night, when a letter was read from Samuel Gompers calling attention to a lecture to be delivered in Detroit on March 9, by Mr. Vladimir Zenzinoff.

Gompers also urged, if possible to arrange to have the same gentleman speak before a labor audience, and stated that the Central Labor Council of Washington, D. C., had heard Mr. Zenzinoff and was gratified with his message.

Vladimir Zenzinoff, they recalled instantly, was a Socialist-Revolutionary, who with other leaders of his party formed the Directory which put Kolchak into power. Kolchak, as soon as he felt sure of his power, arrested the members of his Directory and had them shot. A few, among them Zenzinoff, escaped. Supreme Ruler Kolchak, it will be remembered, was so liked by his people that he was bayonetted to death by his own soldiers.

The lecture tour is under the auspices of Mrs. Simeon Strunsky, a sister-in-law of the wife of William English Walling, who is Gompers' right hand man in his campaign against Russia.

Visit to Fire Scene Reveals the Misery of N. Y. Tenement Dwellers

By ROSE PASTOR STOKES.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Sent by the United Council of Workingclass Women, two women investigators went down to the five-story tenement house at 397 Madison street, New York, to learn what they could about the conditions under which thirteen people, workers and their wives and children, were burned to death early Tuesday morning.

The streets were almost impassible thru the heavy snow and the still heavier rain that followed. The two women trudged thru slush, icy and deep, arriving drenched and half frozen and exhausted at the tenement where the tragedy occurred. Police and fire inspectors before the door of the building refused to let any one pass. So, they decided to visit the people who lived in the houses to each side of the burned building.

Living In Wretchedness.

At 399 Madison St. they went up one flight of dark stairs, wooden and rotted with age, and knocked at a door. Here, the door opened upon a kitchen where the sick and well were huddled together in wretchedness. A woman, moaning with sciatica, sat on a chair beside a couch where a sick man lay asleep covered with the few poor rags that were not sufficient to keep him warm. A daughter, the only one able to do anything in the house, moved about the room. The father, out of work, came in from another room that looked like a cupboard.

They paid $22 a month rent for these wretched rooms. There were no bathing facilities and the outhouse was downstairs under the stairs adjacent to a junkshop. They confessed it was mental agony to them to use the place. But they seemed eager to stay there. They wouldn't kick to the landlord because they said "If we ask for anything, the landlord will ask us to move and where will we go? They will get more for these rooms than we pay and we will have to pay more wherever we go. Some places they won't take us at all, because they are afraid to let in sick people who may not always have the rent."

The girl talked. There were no tears. Her eyes were dry. But in her voice there was heartbreak.

"Don't say anything to the landlord," she pleaded, "we cant move, sick as we are."

When the little family was told that working class women were going to go out in a great demonstration to force the administration to start the building of homes for the workers that will be rented at cost, they were eager and offered to march.

"Living In Firetraps."

The house at 395 Madison St. was five stories and basement. The fire inspectors, after the horrible tragedy next door, came in to inspect this building. They told the tenants that they were living in a fire-trap. But the tenants knew that nothing will be done to interfere with the profits of the landlords. They expect no changes in the wooden tinder box they call home. Rot and dampness and rats are the dominant note in this profitable hovel—profitable to the lanlords. Four families to a floor, five floors, twenty families. Rooms that brought from $8 to $10 a month now bring from $15 to $24, and if the present tenants should move there will be more to pay by those who come after them. A kitchen and a front room and two blind bedrooms. Running water, nothing else. A mother and six children, babies. The mother ill in bed. . . . All of them in terror of fire.

"My walls were hot from the fire next door," the mother tells the visitors. "We thought we'd burn, too. Some day, I guess...." and a haunted look is in the mother's eyes, as she counts the six kiddies playing around her bed in the windowless room. Her face is that of a pale child wife of 17. She is small and slight and like a plant that has tried to be a flower, growing in a pot of sand in the corner of a damp dark cellar. She smiles, and her smile is more tragic and heartrending than the story of their struggle to live. She thinks the city should build houses and rent them at cost. She feels sure if only the working class women could get together, they could force thru many things that nobody will do for them now. "If we'd stand together and make a noise." Yes, she sees that organization is the best, the only way.

Ready to March.

She introduces the two "friends from a working women's organization" to Mrs. Flynn, "who has five little ones, lives in two rooms only and works, sometimes." Mrs. Flynn tells the visitors how kind Mrs. Connell (this little mother of six) takes care of her five when she has to go to work. Yes, the sick mother of six children, takes on the added burden of all her neighbor's children when necessary. Tragedy is mingled with love of neighbor and with heroic every day deeds among the poor! Mrs. Flynn, too, "sure, only when we stand together can we do things for ourselves. I'll join ye when ye're ready to march." The fire traps must go. We must get decent homes to live in. We don't want to be forced to move where we must pay still higher rents, but where the city can give us houses without profits to the landlords.

Not only the fire next door and the lives that were lost—the whole families that were wiped out—but also the rents and the housing conditions and the terrible struggle to live, keeps them awake nights.

And among them all, there are some that are timid, some whom life under capitalism has cowed and beaten, and some who are ready to join their sisters in a united effort to get something better than the misery that is theirs today.

The United Council of Working Class Women is holding a protest meeting in the neighborhood of the fire on Sunday of this week.

MacDonald May Send Tory Diplomat to Russ, Instead of O'Grady

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 24.—James O'Grady may not be the British ambassador to Moscow. It is reported that pressure is being brought to bear on MacDonald by the business interests who have claims against the Soviet government to appoint a man whose sympathies are not so strong for the workers of Russia as those of James O'Grady are known to be. O'Grady owing to his long connection to Soviet officials in conversations looking toward a resumption of diplomatic relations was considered the most available man for the position when the British Labor Party formed a government.

Since then and it is even rumored that the capitalist parties have promised him a reasonably long term of office with only slight opposition provided he does the right thing—as you say in the States—by the capitalist class.

This Mr. MacDonald appears willing to do. In fact only the right wing of the liberal party are pleased with his conduct so far. Political observers compare his position to that of Mr. Hughes of Australia who rose to power in that country on the labor party platform and wound up by being the most notorious jingo and anti-labor politician in Australia.

Besides James O'Grady's working class sympathies there is the further consideration that it will take the shrewdest and most experienced diplomats in London to match wits with Chicherin, Rykov, Krassin and Kamenev.

BRITISH DOCKERS APT TO REJECT COMPROMISE

Majority of Bosses Ready to Pay

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 24.—As reports come in from districts outside London the chances of the dockers accepting the compromise offer of the employers appear smaller.

Latest figures indicate that something like 80 per cent of the employers are ready to pay the two-shilling increase demanded; most of those who insist on the compromise offer of one shilling are in the London district. With these exceptions the whole British population seems to be with the dockers.

The strikers know this and there is no reason to believe that the delegates will be able to induce them to abandon the strike on the compromise basis. Labor officials agree that the strike will probably continue for another fortnight.

One hundred thousand spinners are idle because supplies of cotton are held up at the docks and the hours in industry as a whole have been reduced to twenty-six instead of the usual fortyeight.

American mail has been loaded anc forwarded to London by volunteers without interference by the strikers at Plymouth but at Tilbury sixteen mail trucks were held up and the mail returned to the postoffice.

Meat prices dropped about 3 cents per pound at the earlier news of the prospects of a strike settlement but have risen again, altho 60 per cent of the usual meat supply was delivered at the London markets.

The first strike pay has been issued by the union and to many of those who received it, it was the first money they had had for a month due to unemployment.

First-class passengers from the Berengaria had to proceed to London without their baggage when the engineer at Southampton refused to run the train unless the baggagecars, which had been loaded by non-union labor, were detached.

New York Bakers Are Boosting for The Daily Worker

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Bakers' Local No. 1, of the Amalgamated Food Workers, is getting behind the DAILY WORKER. They want to see every member of their local subscribe to it. The meeting also pledged to raise $1,400 for German relief, to be raised by assessing every member $1.

Bulgarian Government Has 5,000 Rebels In Jail; Demands Turkey Surrender Those Who Escaped

(By The Federated Press)

SOFIA, Feb. 24.—The Bulgarians who took part in the popular uprising against the autocratic military government of Bulgaria are between the devil and the deep blue sea.

Those who were caught on Bulgarian soil were either killed or imprisoned. Those who fled to Jugo-Slavia are destitute and homeless, and when they are able to find work, they are given such small wages and such bad living conditions that they are dying off from privation and disease.

Those who fled to Turkey are in imminent danger of being handed over by the Turkish government to the self-styled authorities in Bulgaria. Those who are still in Bulgaria and have not been arrested, are in continual danger of being tortured and killed.

Thousands Were Slain.

A member of the central committee, Bulgarian Communist party, has given the latest estimate of imprisoned insurgents at over 5,000, exclusive of those who have been released. Figures on the number of killed are incomplete, but run into the thousands.

Those who fled to Jugoslavia are engaged mostly on railroad construction on the piece work system, and are pitifully exploited, buying in company stores, living in company houses.

The Bulgarian government has demanded of the Turkish government that the refugees on Turkish soil be delivered up to Bulgarian justice on the ground that the refugees are not political refugees but common criminals. The Turkish government has been inclined to accede to the request.

Tells of Butchery.

What is going on in Bulgaria is illustrated by the following letter which was written by the priest; Athanas, in Kritschin to his student son in Austria:

"On Oct. 1 Boris Gentshev, student of medicine in Gratz (Austria) came to our village with his brother, Ivan Gentshev, an officer. Fifteen cutthroats from Philipopel met them here. All day long this gang drank with the Gentshev brothers in Felo Popov's house and continually threatened that when they were thru with drinking wine they would drink blood.

"Toward 7 p. m. they loaded 13 peasants, among them your brother Petko, upon a truck and drove them to Philipopel. We begged them to transport the men during the day but were ordered to be quiet at the points of bayonets. The commandant forbade anyone to leave the village and the truck drove off to the accompaniment of the screams and cries of the children. Days went by, and we knew nothing of the fate of the arrested men, until this terrible news came: when the truck arrived near the mill between Rurtev and Kara-Tai, the chauffeur said that there was something wrong with the motor; that he could not proceed. The ruffians cried out: 'That fat one should get off.'

Your brother was torn from the truck and tortured and maltreated in the most frightful manner. After they stabbed him 50 times with a knife, they crushed his head, and Nikola was killed in the same manner. The rest of them fled, but three of them were shot. This sad news soon spread and put the whole village into a state of agitation. At 7 p. m. the truck returned with the naked, mutilated corpses. The commandant ordered us to have them dressed by 8 o'clock the following morning. At 3 o'clock the funeral took place. The investigation committee we asked for did not materialize.

"When you get this letter, write immediately to your brother in America that he should give the facts to the newspapers. Do everything you can to give these facts the widest publicity in the German and English press. The whole world should know that Bulgaria is being ruled by beasts who drink human blood."

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS
CONDUCTED - BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

America's Young "Lifers"

By J. O. BENTALL

"I sentence you to prison for life."

You may hear this in almost any court on any day in this great land. But I heard it in a much more heartless form the other day when I was talking to a fellow-passenger on a New York Central train.

He was from the South. He was a mill owner and proud of it. He was a millionaire, and boasted of it. He had been to Washington on the hearing of the child labor law, and had given expert advice to the Supreme Court, or, rather, to individuals thereof.

"That isn't it at all," he protested against my insinuation that child-labor was cheaper than that of adults.

Which made me prick up my ears like a dog hearing a new noise. And it was a new noise.

"Child labor is no cheaper than other labor," he declared definitely, as if that had been settled in his mind for a long time.

"We must hold our mill classes in our textile districts," he preached. "If you don't get them into the mills before they are fourteen or fifteen they will stray into other industries and be lost to us. We cannot bother about training old people to do this work and who leave us if they know other trades."

"Hold our mill classes" has been ringing in my ears ever since.

Many things rolled out of the mouth of the self assertive millionaire textile lord. He thought it as natural to talk about the children who worked in his mills as of the spindle or the cotton or the engine in the power house.

He made no secret of the fact that many thousands of children in the southern mills are under ten years of age. He defended the practice of getting them young in exactly the same way as the Sunday School missionary of the mountain states pleads for his cause. As the preacher in the big city calls upon the parents to baptize the little ones and get them into church early. As the evangelist calls upon the young to accept salvation before it is too late.

Otherwise they will leave. That is the nightmare that haunts the textile lord.

So that in many cases children are paid more than the natural rate in order to get them to stick till they are properly caught. When they have reached the age of twenty they are quite secure. They have then gotten rather nicely fitted into their niche. By that time their mind is narrowed along the line of every-day life and the outside has no fancy for them.

The young man edges up to one of the girls and the two get married. After that they have to stay. They dare not seek other and better jobs. Their offspring multiplies and in turn becomes baptized into the textile communion. Family after family in a long string of generations follows faithfully the beaten path.

The schools are under strict control of the textile industry. So-called manual training is highly developed, but only along lines that make the children acquainted with the machinery that they are to handle the rest of their life. Even the kindergarten has spindles and looms and spools. Here the little ones get their first lessons in the industry that is to become their prison.

A fixed population, "the mill classes," is the underlying cause of child labor. This fixed population seldom goes on strike. It knows not any other life and refuses to become organized. Its brain is of the "fundamentalist" kind that hangs to tradition and authority. There is not the slightest danger that this fixed population may come into contact with such strange things as thoughts. Thinking is declared altogether unconstitutional. Any child caught with it is tried for treason and shot.

I have seen many "lifers" in prison, who are condemned to an existence of monotony and confinement and hardship. But in no way are they more pitiable wrecks of capitalist destruction than the industrial "lifer" who begins his term at the cradle and ends it in the paupers' grave.

SOVIET RUSSIA SHOWS MERCY TO TERRORIST FOES

Wielders of Assassin's Dagger on Probation

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Feb. 24.—The Soviet government issued a declaration giving the decision of the government to pardon the social-revolutionary leaders, most of whom were sentenced to death. They have all been in prison for some time, as they were reprieved, the carrying out of their death sentences being put off for an indefinite period of time. Now those sentenced to death have had their sentences commuted to five years' imprisonment, other to two and a half years' imprisonment, while still another group of prisoners was freed altogether, but they are to be placed on strict probation. The decision was made in view of the fact that the Soviet government is in a stronger position, and need not fear the terrorist conspiracies against it. But should this party once more lift its head within Soviet Russia, there will be no mercy shown as has been shown now. It was the socialist-revolutionary party which caused the assassination of Volodarski, which caused the wounding of Lenine, and which planned the assassination of Trotsky and other leaders of the Russian revolution.

The following have had their death sentences commuted to five years' imprisonment with solitary confinement: Gotz, Donsky, Gerstein, Gendelyman, Lichatch, Ivanov, Ratner, Timofeyev, Agapov, Altovsky and Ivanova.

The following had their long prison sentences commuted to five years: imprisonment without solitary confinement: Liberov, Artemyev, Rakov, Fedorovitch and Vedenyapin. The following had their sentences commuted to two and a half years' imprisonment: Utgoff, Berg and Lvov.

Still another group was freed altogether, but those composing this group are not allowed for the next three years to live in thickly populated localities, and are to be on strict probation. The Soviet government, tho it is merciful, will see to it that another campaign of terrorism never breaks out against the workers' republic.

Wealthy Ladies Fear Wine Cellars Make Poor Envious

NEW YORK, Feb. 24th.—Society women of New York are greatly concerned lest the working man gets it into his head that prohibition was a little bit of adroit class legislation. Two hundred of them have joined the Women's Committee for Law Enforcement which has for its purpose the spreading of propaganda among the upper class against too ostentatious serving of good wine and booze from cellars that were stocked before the dry law came into effect.

Mrs. Roswell Miller, daughter of the late Andrew Carnegie is chairman of the committte. She admits that her cellar is full of wine, but says she doesn't ever serve it. "I think," she said, "it is unfair to the poor who have no cellars."

Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin, granddaughter of Commodore Vanderbilt, who is another member of the committee, said she is a prohibitionist, and a Mrs. Frances McN. White declared that "legal drinking by the wealthy" is a "dangerous thing for the working classes." Two hundred of them are, in the phrase of one, in "favor of locking their cellars."

Ungrateful proletarians point out that they have always been in favor of locking those cellars, double locking—armor plating them, in some instances—as a matter of fact. However, the dear ladies feel they've done a lot to modify social unrest.

INDUSTRIAL CRISIS SPELLS DOOM OF SPANISH RULERS

So Says Besteiro, the Socialist Leader

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Feb. 24.—The Spanish industrial crisis will destroy the Fascisti government there, declares Senor Besteiro, president of the Spanish socialist party, on his way thru Paris to London where he will meet Ramsay MacDonald, of the British Labor Party government.

"If the present government dissolves," he said, "the socialists might succeed to power in much the same way the Labor Party did in England, tho the Spanish socialists were not very strong at the present time.

"An industrial crisis reigns in Spain," declared Besteiro. "Everywhere there are jobless people. The military directorate is ridiculously incapable. It was formed by the military leaders responsible for the Moroccan debacle."

Censorship on Press.

(By The Federated Press)

MADRID, Feb. 24.—"Liberty but not license"—where have we heard that shibboleth before? After the military dictator of Spain, Primo de Rivera, had mastered the lesson of the value of comic opera red plots, he decided to tear another leaf from the Book of Acts of the American autocracy, and adopted the Creel slogan of press censorship. Translated into Spanish and adapted to the Spanish temperament, it sounds even better than in the original. Hence the press of the fascist kingdom ruled by the Marquis of Estella was treated a few days back to the slogan: "Libertad pero no libertinaje."

"Sedition" In Air.

"The directorate knows perfectly what it is that the country needs," confesses the message on freedom of the press. "For some time rumors of conspiracies and seditious maneuvers have been reaching our ears. However, we shall continue permitting everybody to express his opinion freely, always providing such opinion bases itself in loyal and honorable judgments and foundations. But we will not tolerate mendacious nor seditious campaigns which poison and disorientate public opinion . . . It is rebellion and insidious attacks that oblige us to act with rigor. . . .

"We who work in the name of and representative of the army and navy and of the whole Spanish people, would be unworthy of pity if out of weakness we exposed ourselves to public ridicule."

Egyptians Allow Public to See Tut's Tomb; Bar Carter

LUXOR, Feb. 24.—The public will be admitted to the tomb of Pharaoh Tut-Ankh-Amen this week, following forcible entrance into the excavations by authorities of the Egyptian government.

Meantime it was reported efforts are under way in Cairo to settle the dispute between the Carnarvon estate, which originally held the license for the excavations, and the Egyptian government.

According to these reports the government proposes to reissue a license to Lady Carnarvon, with additional clauses designed to avoid the difficulties of the past, but will ignore Howard Corter, who has been in charge of operations for the Carnarvons.

Pierre Lacau, director general of antiquities, superintended the forcing of barriers erected around the tomb by Carter, after the Egyptologist had refused to surrender the keys.

It was found that the heavy lid of the sarcophagus containing the body of the dead Pharaoh was still suspended in midair, as it had been left when Carter quit work because of his dispute with the government.

Coolidge Won't Chuck Wallace, Farm Secretary

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—President Coolidge will take steps within a day or two to dispel the impression that he desires Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to leave the cabinet, it was learned today.

Reports that the secretary of agriculture was about to step out surprised the president. Mr. Coolidge is said to regard as relatively trivial the differences between Wallace and himself over the farm relief program and Wallace's difference with Secretary of Commerce Hoover over foreign trade policies as they relate to agriculture. In any event, the president is understood to feel that these differences can be ironed out without causing Wallace to resign.

Wallace, one of his close friends said today, is ready to quit the cabinet if that would be conducive to harmony in the administration. Thus far he has not discussed with Mr. Coolidge the question of resigning, but it has been discussed among some of his close associates.

Artificial Business Boom Due to Credit System Is Headed for a Smash---Unemployment Coming

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor.)

Have you spent all your cash? Are you buying on next year's income? The National Association of Retail Clothiers says so and they ought to know for it is going to hit them in the order book.

They see in this tendency of consumers to mortgage their future as a definite threat to the future of business. While Secretary J. T. Tregoe of the National Association of Credit Men looks upon the extravagant use of credit as an attack upon our whole system of economy.

Installment Buying.

"Pay a little each pay day." "$5 starts buying a Ford," or "Furnish your home on easy payments." These slogans are leading people to buy clothing, furniture, automobiles, electric appliances and what not far beyond their current incomes and are therefore giving business an artificial stimulus. But when the majority have thoroly mortgaged their future this artificial boom will come to an end and industry will be found to be badly overexpanded.

The tendency of farmers and wage earners to make purchases on the time payment plan, say the retail clothiers, presages a serious problem with which all industry and business will soon be confronted.

Debt Is Increasing.

According to President A. H. Ham of the Provident Loan Society, "Debt is rapidly increasing in this country; by just how much nobody knows but there are signs of it everywhere." It is noteworthy that pawnshops report that their loans are today as heavy as in times of serious industrial depression.

The automobile ranks among the leading calls upon the future income of consumers. Approximately 75 per cent of all automobiles are sold on a time purchase basis and special finance companies have been organized to handle these credits.

$528,000,000 Fords On Time.

It is estimated in Detroit that total outstanding credits furnished to retail purchasers of automobiles during 1923 amounted to approximately $1,900,000,000. While the total credits granted on wholesale and retail purchases combined amounted to between $3,650,000,000 and $4,200,000,000. Credits granted on Fords alone during 1923 are estimated at $528,000,000.

Such facts must enter into any attempt to forecast the future of industrial activity in this country. They indicate that in the not far distant future the present demand of consumers will slump. Industries will be unable to continue full activity. And incidentally such facts forewarn of the eventual breakdown of the whole competitive system.

OILY PUBLISHER'S EMPLOYES DIED OF HOG CHOLERA

Well in Schaffer's Hog Yard Caused Deaths

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DENVER, Colo., Feb. 24.—People here are beginning to recall the old stories about John C. Schaffer, owner of the Chicago Evening Post, the Denver News-Times and other papers, who is one of the latest figures to get into the Teapot Dome oil scandal.

Because Schaffer was immensely rich and owned one of this city's principal newspapers, he has been able to keep the stories out of print. Employes of the board of health are beginning to talk again about the death of five employes of Schaffer who worked on his ranch and died of hog cholera in 1916.

Where Hogs Wallowed.

The five men who died were all working on Schaffer's Ken Karl ranch near here. They ate and slept on the ranch. The water supply for the ranch "help" came from a well in the middle of the hog yard where hundreds of hogs wallowed.

One day five of the men working for Schaffer were taken violently ill just after dinner. Four of the men died the same day. The fifth, Dan Mackey, lingered for two weeks.

No investigation was made into the cause of the death of the first four men. But Mackey's parents had the doctor attending him investigate. After his death the doctor succeeded in getting the board of health to go to the Ken Karl ranch and examine the water from the well. They ordered the well cleaned and in it was found, among other things, a drowned hog.

Schaffer Was Tight-Fisted.

The matter was hushed up. The parents of Mackey were compelled to pay $200 for the doctor and investigation. They never collected a penny in damages from Schaffer.

This story was sent to the Colorado Transcript at the time it happened but was not published.

UPHOLSTERERS FEEL CONFIDENT IN BOYCOTT CASE

Union Men's Case May Close Today

The five union men who are on trial in Judge Wells' court charged with conspiracy to boycott for their part in the strike of upholsterers feel so confident of victory that they may decide to let the case got to the jury without calling a single witness.

When the state closed its case on Thursday and the jury had been dismissed the lawyers for the defense asked if the state considered that it had made a good enough case to ask a jury to send five men to prison. Assistant State's Attorney Michael Romano said that he thought he had proven a "technical" case of boycott against the five unionists and that he would not nolle prosse the case.

If the men on trial do not put up a defense then the state and the defense will merely make closing statements to the jury and the case will close today. Whether or not the unionists make a defense they feel very confident that they will be acquitted by the jury.

MILITARY STRIKE IS PLANNED BY NORWAY YOUTH

Militarists Get Excited; Workers Keep Shirts on

By DR. KARL F. M. SANDBERG

The Left Young Communist League of Norway, organized after the split, in connection with the expelled faction, has in its just adopted platform a plank calling for military strike. The Department of Defense has called the attention of the Department of Justice and Haakon Meyer, the president of the league, has been visited by the police to ascertain who proposed the resolution about military strike.

They were informed that it was a committeed elected by the league consisting of Aksel Zachariasen, Einar Gerhardsen, Rolf Hofmo, Severin Arnesen, Isak Lundsrud and Haakon Meyer.

The league does not seem very scared. Harald Eidsaune in an article in Arbeiderbladet for Feb. 1, writes: "It is the intention of the league to destroy this class weapon. It intends to organize the soldiers in open revolt against the officers of the army and navy. It intends to destroy all discipline in the army, fully convinced that this will cause its complete dissolution. The league in this way intends not only to disarm the overclass but also to arm the workers in order to overthrow the present social system by force. Its actions are well prepared and its plans well considered. It has several thousand members willing to sacrifice both time and work to carry out this plan, receives considerable sympathy and can figure on positive aid from 90 per cent of the soldiers.

"Indictments, sentences and imprisonment will not prevent it. On the contrary they will help to inform the young workers that there is an organization which carries on effective fight against the hated military system. The consequence will be that the league will grow and its ability to carry out its program will increase."

Haakon Meyer in an article in Arbeiderbladet for Feb. 2 states that the league, of course, is the one which is responsible for the platform, especially the delegates to the annual meeting and that the platform aims to draw clear lines for their activities. The league having been accused of pacifism, he states: "We do not expect any other than internal war.

"In nearly all countries the working class faces armed battles. We are willing to take part in such a war. But it becomes then a question about weakening our opponents and arming ourselves. We will military strike to destroy the army of our enemies. Nobody, and least of all the young, would understand us if we said that we would refuse to carry arms. It is not the world war which matured the revolutionary understanding of the youth, it is the Russian revolution, the red army and fascism with its means of violence.

"We have seen in several countries, where the heavy mechanism of the state is too slow for the activities of the reactionaries, military organizations have been created which boldly confess as their aim to fight the rising of the working class. These organizations have been victorious in some countries. This has taught us that if the state is not quick enough to furnish the physical force needed to down the workers, the reaction creates it own apparatus independent of the state.

"In other places such steps are necessary, the evolution goes safely in the direction desired by the reaction. We have general conscription, but during the general strike we saw organized labor and other unsafe ones weeded out to create safe companies. The state has its safe companies to be used against the internal enemy.

"We also see discrimination against non-commissioned officers who show any sympathy for organized labor. We do not think we can prevent the opposition arming for war, do not think we can stop the reaction creating fascist organizations or the state developing a class army. But we can undermine it, agitate in it, strike against it, try to make clear what its aim is and remind the working class that it can only rely upon itself.

Nothing can make this clearer than if the authorities will prevent us. And we believe that when the working class sees the army of its opponents develop, self-preservation will tell it that resistance is needed, and that it itself only can create the means of war, the means of resistance. Our active military line must build on the labor organizations. In them we must create a firm will for defense against any attack on organization, buildings, press or property created by a rising working class."

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedants allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue the comrades have been called to arms and sent thru the city to collect the bourgeoisie and idlers for the wood-getting expedition. It fell to Martuinov's lot to go into the aristocratic home of the girl he would have married if the revolution had not divided them. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER IV.

Of the non-party employes in the Politdep, only Lisa Gratcheva, the Red Army school mistress, went to the Saturdaying. Afraid of being late, she ran thru the streets, regardless of the puddles, and was delighted when, coming round a corner, she saw the dark noisy crowd of comrades.

They noticed her coming at once. She was not tall; thin, always melancholy and silent. When sometimes her freckled face was lit up by a smile, like a sunbeam running over the grass, it was for a moment only, and then she would quietly and timorously look about her. She taught arithmetic to the Red Army soldiers, and her small ringing voice, that once enriched the choir of the Gymnasium in the distant city where she had studied, now sounded every day from behind the big looking-glass windows of a shop on the main street. That was where her school was.

She was afraid of everything on earth. Her parents had died long ago and she had grown up among strangers, where they reproached her with every crumb of bread. Fear became a habit for her; it caught her by the throat when she was talking to people, and every evening forced her to her knees to pray to the unknown, also terrible but all-seeing, all-forgiving and kind.

At first she had been afraid of the Red Army men also, blushed before them at lessons, and always expected some prank or other on their part. Her voice trembled and broke; she was afraid to question her pupils, and used to long with anguish for the end of the lesson.

But one day when she was carrying home her rations, with hands freezing in the February wind, two tall Red Army men came up to her—her pupils. As usual, she was terrified and blushed, but one of them, a blue-eyed giant, politely offered to help her, and, without waiting for permission, lightly tossed the bag over his shoulder.

From that time she had grown attached to her pupils, watched carefully over each one of them, and came to love her work, and tried to make her teaching simpler and easier for them.

She began to come to the gatherings of the Red Army units, and listened carefully to reports and speeches, tho there was much that she did not understand.

Formerly she had been afraid of the Revolution, as she was afraid of everything that was loud and strong and transfused everything with the bright colors of love and hate, but now, she came thru this love to the understanding of the Revolution. She understood in her own way. She made her own Revolution, her own Communism, and Christ, the son of the Carpenter of Nazareth, to Whom formerly she had prayed as to the King of Heaven, took for her a new significance;—he came down to earth nad became the protector of all revolutionaries, of all who were striving for the happiness of humanity.

She was now full of reverent respect for the Communists, and began to be more often in their company, tho now and then the things they did puzzled her exceedingly.

She was most of all disconcerted by the Commander of the battalion of the Cheka, where she worked in the school. "How can they keep such people in the Party," she thought, looking at his elegant boots, his red riding-breeches, and frequently hearing him using bad language.

Lisa lived in Senator's house, where she occupied a long narrow room shaped like a matchbox. There was no furniture in the room, only a bed—planks covered with a counterpane—oh yes, and there was also a tuya, a strange plant, like a fir-tree of capricious form. Madam Senator had tried to take it away, but the plant would not go thru the door and therefore was graciously left for Lisa. The tuya was withering from the frost, for in Winter it was very cold in the room, and when Lisa woke in the mornings she never knew what time it was; the light came dimly, dimly, thru the single frost-covered window-pane.

As a rule Lisa did not take tea in the morning. But today, before going to the Saturdaying, she wanted to drink something hot. In the kitchen the samovar had been set going, its chimney was murmuring, and butter was hissing on the saucepan. Madam Senator was making potato-cakes, and the smells from the kitchen came into Lisa's room.

She must ask for a little water, just a teapotful, but asking was a terror for her. . . .

For Mr. and Madam Senator could openly express all their hatred for the incomprehensible force, for the red flag, the posters, the strange names of the institutions, all the malice that they had to hide from the Communists, who were mercilessly strict, the malice that had to be hidden under the polite words, only to Lisa, defenseless and piteous, who by her very poverty inspired them with scorn.

"Always praying to God, too. Teaching that Red Army filth, that canaille. What does she teach them? Robbery?"

"And she still prays . . ." echoed Madam Senator. "Clear enough, she is living with a commissar."

They were talking so in the kitchen when Lisa, timorously opening the door, asked, "May I have a little boiling water?" Her teapot was shaking in her hands.

"We are bourgeois, and you are asking leave from bourgeois! Why ask? Steal, steal!" Madam Senator screamed at her in answer, and Raphael Antonovitch repeated in unison, "Steal it, of course, since you have taken up with those robbers. . . ."

Lisa almost wept at the insult, and ran hurriedly down the staircase, to get as soon as possible into the open air.

Lisa had scarcely taken her place in the ranks when the group from the Politdep moved off; they marched irregularly, laughing and talking, came out on the main street, and added their scarlet flag with its party slogan to the chain of other flags. There were the workmen from the Depot carrying their flag that they had preserved since 1917, "Peace to the cottage and war to the palace." There were the printers, with their grey faces and bent backs, and there the "Alliance of Youth" a small group of noisy lads and lasses under a huge flag on which was drawn a workman striking a blow on an anvil with a big unreal hammer.

They marched and sang, not in unison, revolutionary songs. In one place they were irregularly singing the "Internationale" while not far off the workmen from the Communal Refectory were screaming the "Varshavyanka."

The sun was shaded with clouds when the group from the Politdep together with the other groups of the town district came to the Public Gardens. Saws and axes gleamed dimly in peoples' hands; the Public Garden was like transparent lace-work; rooks were calling from the tall bare trees.

This disorderly, leafless mass of trees, most beautiful in its variety, was to be turned into regular stacks of wood.

Once upon a time in the Town Garden, over there, in the further shady alleys, Martuinov had walked with Nadya in the scented July evenings; with his eyes he found the tree in the bark of which, while still a schoolboy in the sixth form, he had cut her initials with a knife. Now he was to cut down that tree and turn it into firewood. And again there was a bitter joy in his heart.

The saws clanged and the trees trembled. When they cut them down, the trees fell heavily, breaking their own and their neighbors' boughs. Then they sawed up their bodies and carelessly and roughly split up the round logs. The stumps were covered with scented tears; in death the trees gave out their perfumes and the sharp smell of the poplar mingled with the fresh, sweet aroma of birch sap.

NEGRO AND WHITE WOMAN PLAYING IN O'NEIL DRAMA

Provincetown Players Shock Old Fogies

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Art stepped across the color line today, and Mary Blair, white actress, agreed to play the lead in Eugene O'Neils' forthcoming play opposite Paul Robson, full blooded Negro.

Action of the piece calls for Miss Blair to kiss Robson, who is first her lover, then her husband, as the drama of mixed marriage. "All God's Chillun Got Wings," unfolds.

Squawk of Protest.

A storm of criticism has been evoked in conservative circles, by insistence of the producers the Provinceton players, upon casting the negro for the leading male part.

Several actresses refused to play opposite him. Miss Blair, who consented, is a northern girl.

The management, commenting upon the interest, protest and in some quarters, indignation, which the casting of the play has produced, said:

Robson Is Fine Actor.

"'Paul Robson, the negro actor, is a man of histrionic ability and a fine gentleman. We expect to open the play at our theatre shortly after March 10."

The story of the play is laid in New York, in the section known as the "black and tan belt." Eight children—four white and four black—play together and Jim, the negro boy, and Ella, the white girl, are childhood sweethearts. Later, she takes up with a prize fighter, then elopes with the negro lover of her youth and they go abroad.

It is after they return to New York, to the "black and tan" neighborhood where they live with Jim's mother and sister, that Ella gradually goes insane, brooding on the race problem. At the end, Jim, who has an inferiority complex, as they say in Greenwich Village, fails to pass his bar examinations. Ella is so happy that she falls to her knees, kissing her black husband's hand.

Roberts Out of Danger.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 24.—Theodore Roberts, the actor, ill here for two months, is out of danger, and it was expected that his condition will show slow but gradual improvement from now on, Mrs Roberts said today.

Girls Slugged in Strike of Cutters by Cops and Finks

There is a strike of cutters on at the shop of the Francine Frock Co., 206 Adams St. As usual the police were busy with their clubs backing up the terms of an injunction granted the clothing manufacturer on demand. Sluggers employed by the boss supplemented the efforts of the limbs of the law. Girl pickets were beaten when attempting to go near the shop.

HAMMOND UNION MEN UNITING TO AID FOREIGN BORN

Machinists Organize the First Conference

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HAMMOND, Ind., Feb. 24.—A real Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers has been organized here in Lake County with the co-operation of organized labor.

The movement was launched when Machinists' local No. 209 got the facts regarding the proposed bills for registering foreign-born workers. A committee of two to take action was promptly elected by the machinists' local and this committee visited other local unions and a workers' fraternal society, with the result that a joint committee conference was held in the Hammond Labor Temple.

2 From Each Organization.

Representation consisted of two members from the Machinists' local, two from Carpenters' local No. 163 of Whiting, Ind.; two from the South Slavic Beneficial and Educational Society of Hammond, and two from the local Labor Defense Council. A committee would have been present from the Hammond Carpenters' local but for a meeting elsewhere.

Harold Reynolds, Carpenters' local, and H. W. Garner, Machinists', were elected as chairman and secretary. The committee then got down to work and ordered the secretary to obtain copies of all pending legislation on the subject.

Bigger Conference Coming.

Another meeting is being arranged for the purpose of issuing a call for a conference of all trade unions and workers' fraternal and political organizations.

Organized labor in Lake County is much interested in this subject since its attention has been called to the anti-labor intent of such legislation as the proposed bills for registration and selective immigration. It is evident that many workers have so far been misinformed as to the intent of such legislation.

However, the local committee is on the job to show these laws as another attempt on the part of the capitalists and their government to further enslave the workers by rendering the large mass of foreign-born workers powerless to organize and fight for better conditions, increased pay and shorter hours.

$225,000,000 Vet Graft Probe Is Ending March 1st

The special federal grand jury investigating the little question of $225,000,000 graft in the Veterans' Bureau under the direction of Col. Charles R. Forbes will probably be finished by March 1. No indication has been made how many indictments will be returned.

About 30 witnesses have been heard by the grand jury, John W. Crimm, assistant to the attorney-general said. The testimony before the grand jury followed the same lines as did the hearings before the Senate committee which investigated the conduct of the Veterans' Bureau.

From the witnesses called it appears that the grand jury paid considerable attention to the cross-country joy ride Forbes took with representatives of contractors for the purpose of inspecting hospital sites and arranging the details of his rake off from the awarding of contracts for the erection of the hospitals.

Elias H. Mortimer, a representative of the Thompson Black Construction Company, went with Forbes and paid the bills on all the parties. In addition to letting Mortimer pay the bills for all the parties on this and other trips Forbes was kind enough to flirt with his wife and make trouble for Mortimer.

Chicago politicians who know the national situation feel that in all probability Forbes and any other persons who may be indicted by the federal grand jury will not be tried till after election. They say that President Coolidge stopped the Senate investigation of the Veterans' Bureau because it was getting too much publicity and that he will not permit the trial of the grafters to come up because the whole would defeat his purpose in stopping the senatorial investigation.

May 30 Convention Is Goal of Party Members in Boston

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 24.—All trade union members of the Boston Lettish branch of the Workers Party were instructed at a branch meeting, to do all they can to get their local unions to endorse the call for the May 30 convention. Good results are expected.

Funds from the dance held today in the Dudley street opera house, will be turned over to the Boston Labor Defense Council. Thirty dollars of Ruthenberg appeal coupons have already been sold by the branch members. This is just a beginning, say branch members.

GERMAN SOCIAL DEMOCRACY TORN BY INTERNAL WAR

Has Betrayed Workers, Says Reichstag Member

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 24.—The Socialist party of Germany is convulsed by a struggle within its ranks which may be of consequence to the whole future of Germany. An analysis of this conflict from the viewpoint of the party insurgents has been made by Toni Sender, member of the reichstag and editor of the Betriebsraetezeitung, (Works Councils' News.)

"The Soical-Democratic party is at the parting of the ways," says Toni Sender. "It is time openly to assert that a fundamentally wrong policy has led to a series of grevious mistakes and finally to a catastrophe of the movement. Let it be recalled that the German republic was created by the working class. There was no active republican bourgeoisie. To etablish this republic firmly, the following props were necessary: a reliable proletarian army, a bureaucracy that was entirely made over, and carefully planned socialization, beginning with the key industries, as a means of affording an economic basis for the whole structure.

Army to Monarchists.

"Instead of that, an army was created under the leadership of monarchistic generals who saw their chief task as that of fighting the revolutionary workers; the bureaucracy maintained the 'established rights' won under William II; and the demand for socialization was treated with the contemptuous rejoinder, 'what do you want to socialize—our debts?'

"Instead of using our strategic position and insuring our rights, and then later perpetuating them in the form of a constitution, we insisted at once upon the convening of the National Assembly, discussed the form to be given the state for months, and let the few concrete advantages gained by the revolution go by the board. Every sacrific was made for preserving the outward form of the state, even to the extent of trying to save this bourgeois-democratic republic by a coalition with the monarchial German People's party, the party of our sharpest opponents in the field of industry and finance. Even this positive aim of safeguarding the republic was transferred into the negative one of averting civil war.

Joined With Enemy.

"Neither aim was accomplished. Two warning signals remained unheeded: the Kapp rebellion and the murder of Rathenau. The coalition with capitalist parties was continued. The German People's party rewarded this action by tolerating the monarchist reaction in Bavaria and sending the army into the workers' state of Saxony.

"Thus civil war was actually started, as the corpses of workers killed by the invading reichswehr eloquently testify; and the republic has been seriously endangered by the declaration of a state-of-emergency.

"Those of us who realize this totally wrong policy of our party demand that the party go back to its historical mission—that of waging the class war. We must not rely upon parliamentary action alone, but engage in extra-parliamentary action as well."

Frau Sender then went into some detail to outline the demands of the radical wing of her party. These include: compelling the propertied classes of Germany to pay reparations to the allies; entering into close economic co-operation with Russia; removing all reactionary officials and officers; re-establishment of freedom of speech, press and assembly; heavy taxation of wealth and the participation of the nation in the profits of industry and of agriculture; socialization of the key industries; opposition to the abrogation of the eight hour day, and the further extension and development of the works councils law.

Greenstein Hits Snag When He Expels N. Y. Locals

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Local after local of the International Jewelry Union is leaving the International Union in New York, as a result of the dictatorial action of the secretary of the union, Greenstein who expelled Local No. 1 recently without any justification. Greenstein is practically destroying the union in order to assure himself of his job of secretary. The locals have stopped paying their dues, but Greenstein continues in his attitude of hostility towards the locals which show the slightest trace of radicalism.

One of his methods of avoiding an issue is by postponing the convention of the union, as he did when Local No. 1 and the other locals of New York stopped paying dues until all their complaints would be considered at the convention of the union which was to be held last July. Mr. Greenstein retorted by expelling Local No. 1 and the other New York locals of the International Jewelry Union, and by postponing the convention.

But the jewelry workers are intent on either forcing the arch-reactionary Greenstein out of office, or forming a new international.

"Holier Than Thou"

We are in receipt of some publicity from the democratic party national committee. It is especially interesting in view of the known penchant of Samuel Gompers for democrat administrations and the recent endorsement of McAdoo by railway officials of the Conference for Progressive Political Action.

The republican administration is called "the most scandalous in history"; it is stated that it "humiliated the best element in their party and have given new impetus to extreme radicalism which is antagonistic to our form of government and more or less antagonistic to all forms of government." (Emphasis ours.)

After citing a few more misdemeanors of their republican opponents, the democrat publicists conclude:

> What a deplorable contrast to the eight years of Wilson's administrations which successfully conducted the greatest war in all history, and which, after searching investigation of Republican committees, was shown to have a record free from a single national scandal.

Passing over the debatable statement that the Wilson administration was free from scandal, we call attention to the accomplishment with which the democrats point with pride—plunging the nation into a struggle which no sane statesman dare defend today.

The endorsement of McAdoo by the officials of the railway unions affiliated with the Conference for Progressive Political Action is evidence that these gentlemen are prepared to campaign for the Wilson son-in-law upon the war record of himself and his wife's father.

This would surely be a dainty dish to set before the American workers and farmers—especially the farmers who are now reaping their share of the harvest of misery that the war sowed in all countries.

With skepticism the primary requisite for progress the democrats regret exceedingly the distrust of government the Teapot Dome revelations have caused. This is an accurate guide to the amount of enmity existing between the democrat tweedle-dum and the republican tweedle-dee.

"His Side of the Story"

The threat of Attorney-General Daugherty in refusing the request of Senators Pepper and Lodge to resign from the attorney generalship is one of the most astounding developments in the whole Teapot explosion. Attorney General Daugherty, arch grafter and pace maker in corruption, has told the Old Guard of his party to keep their hands off his job on the pain of his taking "his side of the story" to the people.

There is no telling what Attorney-General Daugherty might say once he decided to take the lid off. This threat of the Attorney General may put the quietus on the belated efforts of his colleagues to force his resignation. Daugherty's oil deals may have struck the death blow to his tenure of office but the Attorney-General will go when the going suits him best and not when his friends demand his head in order to save their own skins.

We would like to hear "his side of the story." We believe that if Attorney-General Daugherty would come forward and tell only a small fraction of what he knows about the workings of the government that he would for the first time in his excessively prolonged political life, render a service of inestimable value to the working and farming people of this country. Daugherty could tell us something about Senator Pepper and his relations with the Pennsylvania Railroad and the United States Steel Corporation. The Attorney-General might even tell us about the great interest Lodge has in recent years been developing in the protection of the coal magnates.

Who is there who knows the government better than Attorney-General Daugherty, a past master in the art of prosecuting innocent working men and protecting criminal capitalists? The reactionary capitalists controlling the republican machine are up against it. When Fall threatened to expose some of the morally indignant gentlemen who were working overtime denouncing his political dishonesty, the Senate was quick to take him off the witness stand on the plea that further talking on his part before the investigation committee might endanger the government's case against him.

Much as we would like to hear the Attorney-General's side of the story, we know in advance, that we are doomed to disappointment because we are convinced that the political wizards running the governmental machinery of today, will resort to some ingenious subterfuge to stop Daugherty from telling "his side of the story."

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY

The Joke of It All

It's no extraordinary event for the principal actors in the puppet show on Capitol Hill to lash themselves into fury over the sacredness of the interests of the people to whose service they tell the world they are dedicated.

But the joke of it all is that at the crucial moment, when their fury is about to break forth abate and the country is anxiously awaiting for deeds to put an end of the bedlam of words, we are treated to a complete right-about-face and a refusal to do anything at all.

The ruling clss of this country has set up innumerable devices to hide the class character of our much vaunted democracy. One of the tricks most frequently employed in the game of blurring the dictatorial nature of our Republic is the apparently innocent Senate rule that no senator is permitted to impugn the motives of his colleagues. In one of the vigorous debates agitating the Senate the other day, Mr. Ashurst of Arizona, implied that the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. Phipps, had voted on a certain measure with due consideration of his own interests involved in this particular piece of legislation. Immediately Mr. Ashurst was called to order and ruled off the floor for impugning the motives of his worthless colleague from Colorado.

Everybody knows that Senator Phipps is a member of the Phipps family, one of the biggest share holders of the United States Steel Corporation. Everybody knows, as well, that in the consideration of the Fordney-McCumber tariff steal, Mr. Phipps lined up with the reactionary regulars and thus did not forget his own economic interests—the shares he owned in the Steel Corporation. Yet, Senator Cummins, who has had years of experience in serving big business, particularly the railroads, in his capacity as Chairman of the Senate, believes that he can fool the masses about the functions of the Senate, by applying this technical rule to hide the motives animating the individual Senators.

The workers and farmers of this country are not especially concerned with the motives of any individual in the government apparatus that is now employed by the capitalist class to suppress them. The workers and farmers are primarily concerned with the conflict of economic class interests. The workers and farmers know that whether one senator is permitted to impugn the motives of another or not, the unchallengable fact remains that the government as a whole is dedicated to the protection of the class interests of the industrial and financial magnates against the class interests of the working and farming people.

The American Serf

Economists of the Department of Agriculture have just completed a survey of the conditions of the truck farming workers in New Jersey. Among the 683 interviewed by the government investigators, four-fifths did skilled work. Forty per cent of these workers had no other trade. The average earnings, from all sources, were slightly under $600 a year in 1921. In some cases many of these farm workers eke out their existence by managing to secure farm supplies and house room indirectly, that is thru special arrangements with their employers. "On such limited earnings the workers have to practice strict economy and have little to spend on recreation and advancement."

The seasonal character of farm labor tends to aggravate the unsatisfactory conditions. The increasing use of farm machinery and the growing need of skill in caring for the perishable products, make the lot of the mass of unskilled more miserable. Under these circumstances the low pay of the farm workers translates itself into their being denied the most elementary needs of education, home and social life. Thus, three-fifths of the workers under 16 years of age, who should have been attending at least continuation schools, were not making normal progress in their school work. Out of 140 children of the farm laborers only 58 were making normal progress. Thirty-seven per cent were two to six years behind in their normal grades. Very few of the adult workers have had the advantage of a high school education. Practically none of them has been to college. The foreign-born worker has received less education than the native-born.

Of this group investigated about two-thirds had no ambition to rent, own or operate a farm. Apparently the intense exploitation of these workers has stifled all hope in them. Nearly one-third of them did not know whether they would stick to agriculture or not. Almost as many had no savings whatever.

This is the condition confronting the workers in every industry operated on a capitalist basis. In the industries that are less developed, for instance the agricultural industry, the wage workers very often find themselves denied even the most elementary needs and as a rule have a lower standard of living than the average worker of the highly developed industry.

Progressive senators claim that the enterprising Mr. Burns has all their telephones tapped.

Senators may fiind it hard work under these conditions, but we Communists have been accustomed to it for some time.

Why not rename the president's residence "Heartbreak House" since James J. Davis, steel trust secretary of labor, has admitted that the cabinet is "heartbroken" over the oil graft scandal.

The laboring masses of all countries have nothing to fear from the Red Army's bayonets. Its force is only directed against oppressors and exploiters.—Leon Trotsky.

HE SOLVED "MYSTERY OF FAULTY COMPASS" AND DISCOVERED COLOSSAL IRON DEPOSITS

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—He solved the "mystery of the crooked compass" and discovered what is believed to be the world's largest iron deposit.

Called in to help solve a problem that puzzled other scientists of the country, Dr. Peter Lasareff examined a compass in the province of Kursk, in Russia, that was being deviated by a mysterious cause, followed a trail that led several hundred miles, and found a whole mountain range of iron. The huge deposit had become magnetized and was disrupting the compass much like a "divining rod" might be expected to do.

Dr. Lasareff is now visiting the United States informally in the interest of scientific development in his revolutionary country. He brought with him from the land of the Soviets news of marvelous new achievements of science.

The doctor, who is director of the Russian National Physical Institute, in Moscow, is telling of the discovery of a method of keeping a man's severed hand alive and growing in nothing but pure air, and of researches in electrionic acitivity showing why and how man's nerves see and hear and feel and taste.

He says investigations of the operation of man's nerves indicated that the nerve centers, as the brain, for instance, in a state of activity, create waves in the surrounding ether.

Waves Measured.

He has gone so far as to determine the approximate length of these waves and says that such phenomena as mind reading, hypnotism and mental telepathy "will probably be explained thru these waves." His laboratory is now engaged in the task of investigating these waves, aiming to detect and study them.

Lasareff told how he happened to discover the gigantic iron deposits.

"It had been observed that in a certain section of the province of Kursk, in Russia, the magnetic needle was deflected from the normal. This mysterious action of the needle aroused much speculation. So an expedition was sent out. We found, 450 feet underground, the most colossal deposit of iron ore yet discovered in the world, a deposit vastly larger than any other.

Dr. Peter Lasareff.

"Some idea of the enormous size of the find may be gained by comparing it with the largest deposit hitherto discovered, that in Sweden, which is 10 kilometers long and two kilometers broad.

"Our newly-found deposit consists of two strips, 250 kilometers long and 2 to 40 kilometers broad. We have already bored down 170 meters into this iron ore and have not yet struck bottom. And our new ore is of fine quality, the top samples show 40 to 45 per cent pure iron."

Dead Hand "Lives."

Then he gave news of another world wonder.

"Russian scientific activity has recently produced another remarkable phenomenon—Dr. Kravnov has succeeded in keeping 'alive' for about one year, the severed hand of a man," said Lasareff.

"My friend, Dr. Alexis Carrel of the Rockefeller Medical Institute here, has, I know, kept a tiny piece of chicken heart alive for years, feeding it regularly with a nutritious solution. But Dr. Kravnov, of the Military Medical Academy, of Petrograd, has succeeded in an experiment that has quite different factors. He has kept this hand 'alive' and growing for about 12 months, now, without feeding. He has merely kept it in pure, germ-free air. The growth of the finger nails and the growth of the hair on the back of the hand is visible. If the hair is shaved it grows again."

Dr. Lasareff regards the three new giant Moscow radio towers as notable achievements in Russian engineering.

"There are two wooden masts 450 meters high and one steel tower of the same height," he said. "The steel tower is a sort of lattice work, and while it is half as high as the Eiffel tower in Paris, it has only one-tenth of the weight of Eiffel tower."

Dr. Lasareff himself drew the architectural plans for the institute, of which he is director. He did this before the revolution and work was commenced on the building in 1917.

"The new government permitted the work to go on and is supporting the institution," he said.

Japanese Girls Work Twelve Hours, Kept in Confinement, But Happy, Says Mikado Consul

By RITSUTARO INOUYE
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—On the eve of the Japanese imperialist government sending twenty-nine Communist leaders to prison for their intention to form a Communist government, Jeanette Pearl, American Communist speaker and labor educator, spoke before the Japanese-American Young Men's association from the same platform with Mr. Saito, imperial Consulate General of New York.

She spoke first of the attitude of the Communist International toward race problems, saying that the Communist International makes no racial discrimination within the laboring class, all races of whatever color or language being equal. "I am a member of the Communist International," she went on, "and have no race prejudices, so my criticisms of the Japanese government's policy toward the working class is not at all due to any prejudice against the Japanese people.

"Fifty years ago Japan was an unknown country on the map of the civilized world: today she is one of the most powerful nations from an industrial standpoint. This unprecedented rise in industrial importance is not, as in most countries, due to her natural resources, but rather to the low value of labor. In order to maintain Japan's industrial importance on a plane with that of England and America the Japanese Imperialist government has practically enslaved labor, and those who have endeavored to emancipate labor have been brutally persecuted."

She explained further what communism is and where the communist international stands and gave a vivid picture of the persecution of the twenty-nine communists before the Japanese earthquake. Among those twenty-nine communists were Comrades Sakai, Yamakawa, Inomata, Takatsu, and other young militant workers. Those comrades were arrested last June without having committed any crime but that of having tried to organize the communist party and kept in prison for six months without any trial.

Comrade Pearl then accused the Japanese government of having delayed the trial of these twenty-nine communists in order that there might be no sentence for which they might be pardoned at the time of the marriage of the Prince Regent when a general amnesty was declared and forty thousand prisoners (most of them robbers, murderers, and other criminals) were either released or relieved of the major burden of their sentence.

She then spoke of the Imperialist government's leniency with Captain Amakasu, who having killed Osugi the anarchist leader, his wife, and their seven year old nephew during the earthquake in September, was in the first place sentenced to only ten years, too short a term by many years for the killing of three people, and at the time of the Prince Regent's marriage reduced to seven and one-half years only and assured that he would not be treated as a criminal in prison, as are the communists who have committed no crime.

She spoke too of the nine communist and trade union leaders who were murdered by Japanese soldiers at Kameido police station during the earthquake for no other reason than that they were militant trade unionists and working class leaders. These soldiers burned the corpses of their victims in order to hide their crime, which was aggravated, so the report goes, by the fact that the working class leaders sang the Japanese revolutionary hymn in the police station. One of the other prisoners in the police station the same night with these victims, however, claims that no revolutionary hymn was sung or other disturbance caused by them. As for the five hundred Koreans who were cold-bloodedly murdered by Japanese imperial militarists during the earthquake, Comrade Pearl, said that these were victims of an imperialistic determination to suppress the movement in Korea to establish an independent government, a determination carried out by the scientific spreading of rumor, at a time when the mob was hysterically capable of believing anything, that the Koreans led by communists were marching toward the imperial palace to overthrow the government, and murdering innocent refugees and raping women and young girls on their way.

The result of this scientifically carried out determination was the murder of five hundred Koreans, but no one has ever heard whether the murderers were ever tried. Before the earthquake there was a liberal element in Japan which opposed the law the government introduced in the diet limiting freedom of the press and speech. During the earthquake this law was passed by the pronouncement of the Prince Regent. Therefore Japanese communists and trade unionists have no voice or power to organize labor. But so long as the capitalist system exists the communist movement will exist, whether or not the government tried to suppress it. The only task of the communists in Japan under the circumstances is to organize the revolutionary trade unions, to educate them politically and industrially to use their power of organization against capitalism.

Comrade Pearl was whole-heartedly greeted by the audience. Mr. Saito, representative of imperialist Japan answered very stupidly. For instance he said, "There are no two classes in Japan." A debate ensued between Comrade Pearl and Saito. The more Mr. Saito tried to explain about conditions in Japan, the more Comrade Pearl picked out the worse part of Japanese labor conidtions and when Comrade Pearl finally said that the Japanese working girls in spinning mills work ten or twelve hours a day and get very small amount of wages and are detained in the factory, having no freedom for social life except once a week, and added "Isn't that true, Mr. Saito?" Mr. Saito answered, "Yes, but they are very happy," laughter burst from the audience.

Lenin's Death Mourned By Almost Every Nation But U. S. and France

By ALEXANDER TRACHTENBERG.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Issues of Russian papers covering the first three days after Lenin's death show that condolences had already been received in Moscow from about twenty different governments.

These include England, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Austria, Cheko-Slovakia, Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, China, Japan, Mongolia, Poland, Finland, Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia.

The official condolences from the Mexican government, published in the DAILY WORKER, and those which the Chilean government was forced to send thru the insistence of the socialist members of parliament had not yet been recorded.

Among the important governments missing from the list are France and the United States. Poincare and Hughes are the two irreconcilables.

It is interesting to note that only the Communist and revolutionary groups but also the socialist and labor organizations thruout the world sent messages of grief to Russia. The British trade union congress sent a warm tribute to Lenin. Our own Sam Gompers, in common with his friend Hughes, was, of course, inconspicuous by his absence among the mourners of the Soviet leader.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

SHERMAN Rogers, associate editor of the Outlook, has a happy way of looking at things. He does not see things as we see them. There is less radicalism in this country today than there was in 1922 he informed the National Republican Club, New York. He found a lot of confidence and cool headedness abroad, particularly among the farmers. Our readers may remember that Teddy Roosevelt once wrote for the Outlook and that Teddy discovered the River of Doubt. Mr. Rogers must have sat in the late Theodore's chair or in some way contracted the habit of observing imaginary phenomena. There may be confidence somewhere in the country but it is not wasted on the Republican administration or on the million dollar Democratic errand boys of the oil trust.

* * * *

Of course Mr. Rogers was wildly applauded when he finished his harangue. The bosses like to be told what they like to hear and their literary poodles pass them the honey. Why not? The latter have no scruples and they know the fat men are legalized robbers so why not rob the robbers? While Mr. Rogers was offering consolation to the supporters of the Teapot Dome administration, John N. Dyer, director of the American Farm Bureau was telling the Illinois Lumber Merchant's Association that agriculture was in a worse condition today than it has been any time in the last four years and that 625,000 farmers are bankrupt. This is what has made the workers and farmers so cool. Well, Well.

* * * *

Policemen are beginning to interpret duty in a manner that bodes ill to the citizen going about his business unprotected by armor plate or other safety devices. Fifteen persons were killed by New York policemen during the past year in the performance of duty. The number slaughtered by the Chicago police is not given. We understand that several adding machines are working day and night on the tally. 5,206 New Yorkers died of violence during the year 1923. That is quite a record for peaceful America.

* * * *

Ramsay MacDonald used a novel argument in supporting his order to begin the immediate construction of seven warships. He did not care a fig for the battleships, but the unemployed must be given work. They could be employed turning swords into pruning hooks or something like that, couldn't they? Ramsay is a pacifist. His coming to office gave Oswald Garrison Villard a happy week but we fear that gentleman will suffer a severe relapse when he reads that his hopeful fell by the wayside.

* * * *

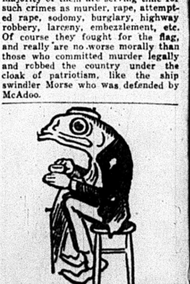
It should be distinctly understood that we do not criticise the British Labor Party government for building warships. We condemn them for building warships in order to uphold the capitalist system. The Soviet government of Russia also builds battleships and organizes a large army, but with a different purpose than which moves Ramsay MacDonald. The Russian workers build war machines to defend the revolution of the workers. MacDonald builds it to use against the workers and the exploited subject races that support the ruling class of Britain.

* * * *

Only a few days ago we read in the news dispatches that British troops in India shot down scores of rebel Hindus—under a British Labor Party government. This is bad news, not that we did not expect it, because we know our MacDonald, but the workers do not know him and his tribe and they will be discouraged for a while. But not for long. The conditions of life are getting harsher and harsher and they roll over and flatten out disappointments as a tank flattens out a toad that comes in its way. The workers of Russia were disappointed in the Kerensky socialists but they tried the communists and won with them. The British workers will do the same.

* * * *

It did not take Calvin Coolidge very long to set the machinery in motion for bringing about the release of the so-called "lost legion" now serving terms of imprisonment for various violations of the army regulations. The capitalist press is furious because the political prisoners were turned loose while men who wore the uniform are still in prison. Secretary of War Weeks issued a report giving a description of the various crimes committed by these "heroes" in whose behalf the Chicago Tribune is so interested. We find that the great majority of them are serving time for such crimes as murder, rape, attempted rape, sodomy, burglary, highway robbery, larceny, embezzlement, etc. Of course they fought for the flag, and really are no worse morally than those who committed murder legally and robbed the country under the cloak of patriotism, like the ship swindler Morse who was defended by McAdoo.



The Poor Fish—Temperance hath its dangers as well as Booze. If the Moonshiner's Hootch won't get you, the Prohibitionist's bullet will.

U. S. Bureau of Education is Urging Educational Leaders to Platoonize School Kids

United States Commissioner of Education John J. Taggart has sent his secretary, Dr. Theodore Honour, to Chicago to propagandize for the platoon system of education during the week's sessions, in Chicago, of the superintendent's branch of the National Educational Association which is meeting at the Auditorium Theatre.

Working with Dr. Honour is Miss Alice Barrows, Taggart's field representative, who has been touring the country on Uncle Sam's pay, in behalf of this mechanized educational system. Miss Barrows was one of the pioneers for the Gary system in the New York schools where the attempt to introduce the system aroused such intense opposition from the teachers that their representatives at the N. E. A. conference will oppose it almost in a body.

Is Gary System.

The platoon system, as the "Gary" system is now more politely called, is the latest word in the goose-step process thru which public school education is now going. It leaves practically nothing to the initiative of the individual teacher, who teaches one subject over and over according to a prepared method as classes file in and out of the classroom.

Members of the American Federation of Teachers are against the platoon system for the reasons that the government and the interests it represents are for it. Among these reasons is its efficiency for propaganda purposes.

Thru the method of using the school auditorium intensively, groups of children filling it at successive half-hour periods thru the day, high power propagandists can operate on all the pupils in an entire building. Under the former system the propaganda had to be passed thru individual teachers, some of whom were not sympathetic.

Propaganda Poison.

The propaganda purpose of the platoon system is not denied by its advocates. One of its defenders, Superintendent Charles L. Spain, of Detroit, lists the Red Cross, Liberty Bonds, and Thrift stamps, among the varieties of "good propaganda" which could be put over more effectively thru the platoon system.

Class conscious workers have little use for some of the "good propaganda" which poisons their childrens' minds in the Garyized schools.

The platoon system, as its name implies, regiments the school children. They march into classrooms where they are taught to order by teachers who have no opportunity to become acquainted with them from the physical inability to become acquainted with the members of sets of classes she must teach. She—the teacher—becomes a drill master, hearing recitations from multitudes of little strangers.

New York school superintendents will lead the fight against the system but opposition will come from Chicago and other centers also.

The platoon system began in the Steel Trust city of Gary. Its name was changed, as its apologists at the National Association of Education convention admit, because the name "Gary" was a drawback.

It is now in use, in complete or modified form, in 50 cities. These include such obviously industrial centers as Detroit, Pittsburgh, Birmingham, Ala.; East Chicago, South Bend, Ind.; Newark, N. J.; Rochester, N. Y.; Port Arthur, Texas; Braddock, Pa.; Latrobe, Pa.; New Castle, Pa; Akron, Ohio; Monessen, Pa.

Want Robots From Schools.

In these industrial cities the platoon system has obvious advantages for the ruling class. From the workers' and teachers' standpoint the objections to the platoon are summed up in the evil uses to which it is put by industrial rulers who want robotized products from the schools. On the other hand if the control of education were vested in the working teachers and not in school boards subservient to the financial interests the more efficient use of school equipment would be welcome.

Superintendent E. C. Hartwell, of Buffalo, and O. L. Reid, of Youngstown, Ohio, will speak at this morning's session at the Auditorium Theatre.

JURY GETS CASE OF UPHOLSTERERS ON TRIAL HERE

Decide Labor's Rights During Strikes

The fate of four union upholsterers and Fred Jurish, member of the Painters' union, tried with them on boycott conspiracy charges, went to the jury in Judge Wells' criminal court last night.

Michael J. McKenna and Thomas O'Shea, business agents of Locals 110 and 111, and William Riordon and Gus J. Dahl are the four union upholsterers. On the turning of their cases rests the judicial precedent whether organized labor has any legal rights in taking action against an employer during a strike or not.

Tries to Clear Slate.

Both the state and the defense rested their case yesterday afternoon but Assistant States' Attorney Romano earlier in the day took occasion to reconsider a previous announcement that the state had closed its case by calling up Assistant States' Attorney John Sbarbaro.

Sbarbaro's job before the jury was to clear the state's attorney's office, if he could, of the stain that rested on it from the defense charges that the state had turned over its office to representatives of the bosses to grill the arrested union men.

The witness admitted that he had questioned O'Shea and McKenna in his office concerning the upholsterers' strike and said both men told him they had put up stickers in various buildings urging building tradesmen to ask upholsterers to show union cards.

Denies Taylor Grilled Men.

He said that Robert Bronson and Dudley Taylor, attornies for the Illinois Employers' Association, had been present when he questioned the men, but he denied that either Bronson or Taylor had asked the defendants any questions. Bronson had testified Thursday that he and Taylor had asked "a few questions of the defendants."

After the testimony of Sbarbaro the state rested its case and the defense without putting in any evidence also rested, the defense considering that the state has failed to make a case against the defendants.

Romano began the argument for the state and Oscar Nelson made the first statement for the defendants. Nelson was followed by Robert Daniels for all the defendants, and the state then had the last word to the

5,000,000 ILLITERATE IN AMERICA DECLARES SOUTHERN EDUCATOR

Hundred per centers call this country the flower of civilization, but W. Abercrombie, state superintendent of education of Alabama, has some alarming figures about illiteracy in America, which he presented to the National Educational Association's convention at the Auditorium Theatre yesterday.

There are in the United States 5,000,000 persons 10 years of age and over who cannot read and write in any language, and almost 3,500,000 others who cannot speak, read or write English, Mr. Abercrombie declared in speaking on "National obligations in education."

"There are millions more who can barely read and write and are therefore practically illiterate. This is a menace to American ideals and institutions."

LUDENDORFF, WAR LORD OF GERMANY, ON TRIAL TODAY

Faces Treason Charge with Hittler

MUNICH, Feb. 25.—General Eric Ludendorff, one of Germany's war lords, will be tried for treason tomorrow, together with Adolf Hittler and seven others.

Elaborate police precautions were taken today to prevent possibility of a monarchist coup. Special reinforcements of state police arrived at Munich, while the Central Government stands ready to lend any assistance the Bavarian authorities may require.

The trial, which will be conducted by a Bavarian court of seven judges, will be held at the War Academy. Here special fire fighting apparatus has been installed against the eventuality of fire panic and police have searched the building from roof to cellar.

Assemblage of more than two persons within three blocks of the War Academy is to be forbidden tonight and tomorrow.

The crime of which Ludendorff and Hittler were accused was of plotting against the state. They are charged with leading the ludicrous beer cellar "Putsch" of November 8, which dwindled into opera bouffe when differences arose among the leaders of the uprising.

The "beer patriots," as they came to be known, swore to march on Berlin. They declared they would rid the country of Marxism, Socialists and Jews and rebuild a better Vaterland.

On the night of the Putsch, ex-Dictator Von Kahr, who resigned last Friday, was named "National Administrator," and Ludendorff head of the army.

The Central government immediately laid an embargo against Bavaria and lack of unity among the beer cellar patriots did the rest.

Ludendorff was captured after a skirmish near one of the Munich state buildings. He was placed under "protective arrest" and gave his word not to engage in further treasonable activities. Hittler fled to the mountains and was captured he was jailed, while Ludendorff was made virtually a prisoner in his own villa.

Von Kahr, who with General Lossow, head of the Bavarian army, resigned last week, is generally credited with having been a party to the Putsch that failed. He evaded responsibility at the time, however, and remained dictator of Bavaria until Friday.

CHICAGO HIGH SCHOOL TEACHERS JOIN FIGHT ON PLATOON SYSTEM

Chicago high school teachers have joined the fight against the platoon or Gary system of education which Big Business and the United States Bureau of Education is boosting.

At the meeting of the high school teachers' council yesterday a resolution was passed against the new system and the council also declared itself in favor of smaller schools Schools with more than 2,000 pupils, it was pointed out, are cumbersome and inefficient.

EVERYBODY LIES EXCEPT DOHENY, SAYS DOHENY

Says There Is No Oil Scandal

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Edward L. Doheny, lessee of California naval reserves about whom the senatorial investigation has resolved, lashed back at his critics in an interview published today in the New York Tribune.

Flaying the foes of Attorney General Daugherty, Doheny called Senator Borah and Senator Wheeler liars, accused the democratic party of playing cheap politics at the expense of good men's characters.

Senator Walsh, democrat, Montana, who is leading the investigation, is trying to become president, Doheny said. "Senator Wheeler lied when he said Daugherty was a friend of mine," Doheny said in the interview. "I met him once only and that was three years ago next May at the Metropolitan club, with four other members of the cabinet.

McLean a Stranger.

"As for McLean I have never seen him in my life, regardless of what Senator Wheeler says. He remarked 'everybody knows' about four times in his speech. That's a good name for him—'Everybody Knows' Wheeler.

"Four years ago Borah said that I had contributed $50,000 to Major General Wood's campaign fund. I was a delegate to the democratic national convention and voted more than forty times for McAdoo at the time, so I wired him asking him to correct his statement. Altho the telegram was read on the floor of the senate he sat in his seat and made no reply. He stands convicted of lying."

Doheny decried the ousting of Secretary Denby "who had never been accused of wrongdoing," and said the democrats planned to bowl over one member of the cabinet after another like nine-pins and send them from office discredited men.

Calls Enemies Bolsheviks.

"These Bolsheviks," Doheny said, "are afraid of their constituents. They have chocolate eclair spines. What we need in this oil affair is some one to pin down the people who are talking recklessly and say, 'Who told you this? Where did you hear it?'

"I tell you there is no oil scandal.

"There never has been any oil scandal. No one has been corrupted. If any one got advantages out of these oil leases it was the United States government."

Expect Democrats to Daub Republican Candidate For President Not Yet Touched

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Bitter partisan feeling growing out of the senate oil inquiry threatened today to bring forth new sensational evidence designed to smear the names of leaders in both parties.

The name of a republican presidential candidate, heretofore unmentioned in the scandal, may be drawn in by democrats. His son is reported to have been connected with the Doheny interests.

The democrats prepared to trace suspected "leaks" from republican members of the investigation committee itself. Republicans threatened to recall William G. McAdoo, democratic presidential candidate, who said Saturday in Los Angeles that his law firm would have been paid $1,000,000 by E. L. Doheny if they had succeeded in Mexican oil negotiations for Doheny.

These developments came as the investigating committee ended a week's recess and called to the stand C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge.

Look for Leaks.

Slemp was called by Senator Walsh, chief investigator, to tell what he knew of "leaks" from the committee. Democrats have a strong suspicion that private information of the committee has been secretly relayed to men who were to be called later to the witness stand.

If Slemp's testimony does not develop this fact, the next witnesses called will be local managers of the local Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies. They were subpoenaed to produce all telegrams addressed to Albert B. Fall, Edward B. McLean and two of McLean's intimate friends while they were all together in Palm Beach, Fla.

C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, met both E. B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, and Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, at Palm Beach, Fla. between Dec. 16 and Jan. 14, he told the senate oil investigating committee.

Slemp told the committee he advised Fall and McLean to "make a clean breast of everything" to the senate committee and straighten things out.

$98,000 Short.

Before Slemp testified, Charles P. Lyddane, vice president of the federal-American National Bank here, disclosed from bank records that McLean had a balance at that bank of $2,000 at the time when, according to McLean's testimony he loaned Albert B. Fall, former secretary of interior, $100,000, McLean said he wrote checks to that amount for Fall, who returned them uncashed later and they were destroyed.

Slemp was questioned by Senator Walsh, Montana.

"Were you at Palm Beach during December and January," asked Walsh.

"I went to Florida on December 16

WASHINGTON RUMOR THAT COOLIDGE IS PREPARING TO TALK

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—A public statement of President Coolidge's attitude towards the efforts of both republican and democratic senators to force attorney general Daugherty out of the cabinet may be made following Tuesday's cabinet meeting, it was intimated today.

A secret conference was held at the White House Sunday between the President and Senator Borah, Idaho.

Borah, summoned to the conference by Mr. Coolidge, declined to make public its purpose, but quarters close to the President feel he is getting ready to tell the country just where he stands with relation to attack on his attorney-general.

All members of the cabinet have been notified to be present at Tuesday's session. Secretary of Labor Davis cancelled a trip to Florida to attend.

Borah and the President discussed impeachment proceedings against Daugherty, which Borah on Saturday suggested as the only practicable means of giving the attorney-general the full hearing he has demanded.

No decisions were reached at the conference, Borah said.

BRITISH DOCKERS MAKE PEACE ON ONE BOB RAISE

Wait Until Next Summer for the Other

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 25. — Delegates representing 100,000 dock workers today accepted the terms of a one shilling raise now and another shilling next summer offered by the employers. Work will be resumed tomorrow at 7 a. m.

The remarkable fact about the strike was the insistence of the striking leaders on having the men accept the compromise terms offered by the employers, tho it was well known that the bosses rather than prolong the strike would grant the two shillings demanded. Most of the London business men were in favor of the men's demands, considering them very reasonable in view of the cost of living and the heavy cuts in wages that the men were forced to accept.

One strong reason for the employers' move to postpone granting the second shilling increase until summer is the fact that this will have the effect of establishing a precedent for wage negotiations in other industries.

The use of sailors from the British navy to move mails has caused much resentment among the workers thruout Britain. Day by day the MacDonald regime is being shown up as a counterfeit labor party government with the result that a decided left wing is being formed inside the Independent Labor Party that tends more and more to move toward the communist position.

That capitalism has nothing to fear from the present government was made clear to the ship owners at a recent banquet which was addressed by Sydney Webb, socialist president of the board of trade. Mr. Webb sought to dispel the gloom that hovered over the festal board in the following words:

"If you could only forget for a moment what you have been taught by your favorite newspapers you might realize that the Labor members are of the same race as yourselves and if they are idealistic they are not idiots."

Edwin Bevin, known as the Dockers' K. C., won much praise from the employers owing to his handling of the strike situation. His popularity, however, has not increased with the workers. The almost incomprehensible action of Bevin in failing to insist on the two shillings increase while most of the ship owners were in favor of paying it has set the mills of speculation grinding out motives at a tremendous rate.

The government is breathing easier with the end of this strike. Business circles were demanding action and the use of force against the strikers. "What did we turn over the government to you for?" was the unspoken question asked by the bosses. The use of the army and navy by the Ramsay MacDonald government would not alone spell the government's doom but also the individual political careers of those who would be a party to it. Even the moving of the American mails by sailors may result in much trouble for Mr. MacDonald.

Other strikes are threatening. The prospect of a lockout in the cotton industry grows more menacing. The path of the Ramsay MacDonald government is not strewn with roses. A labor government that exists on sufferance and tries to please capital and labor must do some expert tight rope walking to exist.

LADIES' TAILORS STRIKE IN HUB; 1,500 ARE OUT

Workers Refused to Arbitrate 40-hour Week

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 25.—Fifteen hundred dressmakers and pressers of Locals 49 and 12, respectively of the Ladies' Garment Workers International Union went on strike on Feb. 19.

The first strike meeting was called to order in Paine Memorial Hall, by Anna Thomas, the hall chairman, Vice-President Monosson, Manager Lewin of Local 49, and Zudikoff of the Joint Board pledged their full support of the various units but it was the speech of Arthur Giovanitti that swayed the strikers to an emotional outburst in harmony with the spirit of the "International," the revolutionary hymn sung by the workers before and after the meeting.

This is the fourth general strike in Boston and with the battle lines more extended than at any other time. Due to the influx of small contractors during and immediately after the war, the influence of the union was greatly diminished. Last February the successful strike organized the industry to a great extent and forced the manufacturers into an association of their own. This year the union, now a power, is making its influence count for a 40-hour week.

For six weeks a deadlock existed between the manufacturers and the union. Last year's agreement had expired Feb. 15. But the manufacturers proposed arbitration on the 40-hour week which the union refused asserting the right to enjoy life, to save one's self from exhaustion and breakdown, was not subject to the arbitration of a swivel chair artist with no experience in the shop. The manufacturers appealed to the infamous State Board of Arbitration which has never lost an opportunity to lick the boots of the bosses. The dressmakers and pressers were summoned by the lackeys of the employers. To the lament of the manufacturers they that could not compete with other places, it was pointed out that New York had the 40-hour week for a year and further that the Boston manufacturers produced for a local market. The union conceded that the 40-hour week should start as late as July. It was willing to forego five of the six holidays for which they were paid. But in vain. It was a fight based on organized might and the workers would not be fooled by smooth speakers around a conference table.

Local 49, is comprised of all those that have gone out. The most active among them are militants, members of the Trade Union Educational League and the Workers Party. Here as elsewhere they are bearing the brunt of the fight. The manufacturers sought an injunction the day before the strike was called. Despite this the strike is still on.

Russ Trade Envoys Arrive in Canada on Business Bent

ST. JOHNS, N. B., Feb. 25.—The steamer Montclair unloaded a cargo here today, part of which attracted widespread attention. When the vessel docked four Soviet emissaries stepped off the gang plank. They are D. Pavloff, A. Devilkovski and Mr. and Mrs. U. E. Koulik, of Moscow. The mission will make its headquarters in Montreal and carry on trade between Canada and Russia.

Walton Appeal Granted.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The motion of former governor John C. Walton, of Oklahoma to advance the hearing of his appeal from the dismissal of his complaint in the United State district court for the western district of Oklahoma, was granted by the United States supreme court today.

Drinking Then Shooting.

FREEPORT, Ill., Feb. 25.—Mrs. Alphia Brown, 33, was shot and probably fatally wounded by her husband, T. W. Brown, 28, in their home here last night, following a quarrel. Mrs. Brown said her husband had been drinking. Brown was captured this morning near Pecatonica, and brought back. The Browns are colored.

Dixon to Take Denby's Job.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Governor Thomas Dixon of Montana, is being considered as successor to Edwin Denby, as secretary of the navy, according to information from sources close to President Coolidge. Dixon is known as a "strong navy" advocate.

OIL SMEARS BOTH OLD PARTIES and returned Jan. 16—half of that time in Palm Beach."

"Were you there when I questioned Mr. McLean?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where did McLean stay?"

"He was at his residence about three blocks from the hotel."

"And was Secretary Fall there at the same time?"

"Secretary Fall arrived there, I think on Dec. 31—I have checked this up since you called me."

"And remained there how long?"

"Until Jan. 14."

"Did you meet either of these gentlemen while there?"

Fall and McLean Together.

"I met both of them. I will say I was in Palm Beach about fifty per cent of the time. I would meet Mr. McLean occasionally, accidentally, sometimes on the golf course. I never met Fall at any place but at Mr. McLean's house for dinner."

"Do you know how long before I came to Palm Beach to question Mr. McLean, my coming was known?" Walsh asked.

"I really couldn't say," Slemp answered.

Walsh hoped to bring out that Slemp told McLean that Walsh was coming.

Another Health-Seeker.

"I've tried to place in my mind the dates I might have met either Fall or McLean, but I can't fix the date," Slemp continued. "I didn't keep any date book. I was there for health."

"It has occurred to me, my coming being a matter of talk, that it is quite likely you can give us the character of the talks you had with McLean and Fall?" Walsh asked.

"Our talks were generally such talks as would occur at dinners and luncheons. I thought Mr. Fall looked rather ill and I avoided the subject of this inquiry. I don't know whether I got the information that you were coming from the newspapers or some other way."

"You can't recall," insisted Walsh, "that you knew I was coming until I was there?"

"Well, I think the newspapers said you were coming. The conversation down there was generally—well, a good deal about the Volstead law, the Mellon tax bill and the weather. I came in for general conversation and for golf."

"I'll say this about my conversations with Fall or McLean. I had no personal privilege or confidential talks with either of those gentlemen and I was never an intimate of Fall's. I'd only met him once. I never sought any social intimacy because I'd never had it.

"I didn't get a chance to talk to Mr. McLean and Mr. Fall as much as the public might think."

Slemp rambled on without close questioning. He suggested that Walsh ask him about specific things instead of general conversations.

"I'll say and I know you'll be interested, Senator Walsh, that we played golf most of the time," he went on. "But McLean would not play with us because he was so much better than we were, he quit after one round. There was one conversation that I think of interest and it is this:

"After the testimony was given that McLean didn't furnish the $100,000, I was at McLean's dinner one night. Senator Fall said that he had been urged by his doctors to go to Bermuda but he decided he wouldn't—that he intended to straighten things out and see the facts were known. Fall said a man whom he had known for 30 years knew more about things than anyone else.

Talk After Dinner.

"I remember distinctly one talk after dinner when Senator Fall said the committee was not carrying on the investigation along the right lines," Slemp said.

"I asked Fall 'what are the facts, Senator?'

"'Young man, you read the record,' Fall told me.

"I can say I knew nothing about the $100,000. I was generally surprised when I learned that the money came from some one other than we supposed."

Advised Confession.

"I advised him to make a clean breast."

"Did you have any communication with anyone in Washington on the subject while in Palm Beach?" Walsh broke in.

"The only communications I had were with the White House, were personal ones."

"Did you have any communications about the remarkable things you heard about these matters?"

"Well, any I might have had were confidential and I wouldn't want them published. It was either on Jan. 12 or 13th that Mr. McLean told me he was going to straighten everything out. I advised him that was the only thing to do—tell the committee all the facts."

"You know that both of these gentlemen had misrepresented to this committee the facts about where Fall got $100,000?" Walsh asked.

"I take it you state that fact correctly."

Slemp offered some telegrams for Walsh to inspect.

"Do they relate to this inquiry?"

"No, sir, they don't."

"Then I don't want to see them," Walsh said.

"The communication I had with the White House was that I had a little trouble with my eyes that required an operation and that I would like to remain," Slemp said.

No Mixing.

"I want to state that I have never met Mr. Sinclair personally or Mr. Doheny personally. I have never received any communications from either of them. I've never talked with any members of the committee, the Cabinet or the Senate about this matter. I regard my position as being between the White House and the public and I did not want to mix in this matter."

Lenroot then questioned Slemp.

"You remember the night the president gave out his statement about the prosecution of these cases, I was at the White House. I want you to tell what you know about the preparations of that statement before I arrived," Lenroot said.

Slemp replied he believed Walsh referred to a statement made in the White House press conference on the day before (Friday).

Senator Dill, Washington, asked Slemp if Fall said anything at any of the dinners at McLean's about why he had deceived the committee about the source from which he obtained the $100,000.

"Did Mr. McLean explain what he meant when he said he was going to tell it?" Dill asked.

"No, sir."

Had Fall Entre.

"Senator Walsh couldn't get to Fall, but you could?" Dill asked.

"I don't know that Senator Walsh couldn't get to see Mr. Fall."

"Well, we know it," Dill declared. "Fall was in hiding and Mr. Walsh had to communicate with Fall thru McLean."

"I did not know Secretary Fall was going down there; in fact I didn't know he was there until two days after he got there," Slemp said.

Slemp's temper showed signs of giving away when Dill fired questions at him about why he did not show more interest in the disclosures Fall and McLean were making to him.

"You must remember I was there for my health. I've gone to Florida every year for seven years. I wasn't an investigator. I want you to get the right atmosphere about this."

Senator Adams, Colorado, democrat, asked Slemp if he had not been suspicious about the source of the $100,000.

Was Suspicious.

"I rather suspected how it was, but I knew the investigation was in worthy hands and I stepped out," Slemp answered. "I want to keep out of the investigating matter, so I avoided the whole thing."

"Have you been in communication with any members of the committee other than thru discussions at the White House?" Adams asked.

"No, sir. Some of you have called me on the telephone, of course."

"Didn't you know that you were going to be called to appear before the committee?"

"No, sir."

"You must have regarded it as interesting that a man of McLean's standing, and an ex-cabinet officer should misrepresent such an important matter to the committee," Walsh continued. "Didn't you think the occasion was one that called for action by the President of the United States?"

"Well, I wouldn't like to go into that."

"Well, I would. I want to know from you what you did about this matter?"

"I didn't do anything."

"Do you know whether anybody else saw McLean about it in Palm Beach? Didn't you know that the reporters were looking for Fall?"

"No, sir."

"Didn't the reporters come to ask you if you knew where Mr. Fall was?"

"They did not."

Dill asked if McLean explained why he had decided "to tell it all."

"He didn't tell me why," Slemp answered.

Slemp then was excused.

McLean's Steady Withdrawals.

James H. Baden, vice president and cashier of the Commercial National Bank here, produced the accounts of McLean during the months of November and December, 1921.

"I note from these statements that Mr. McLean's account dwindled steadily from $58,483 on November 1, to $2,1900.05 on December 1," Walsh said.

"Yes, sir."

Baden said McLean had made no arrangements to take care of a big check when he had insufficient funds.

H. Foster Bain, director of the Bureau of Mines, declared Fall had given him the impression that Attorney General Daugherty had tendered an informal verbal opinion that the leases were legal and that the matter was discussed at cabinet meetings or at the end of cabinet meetings.

Legal authorities in Congress now agree that the leases were illegal.

"We have here your letter to Secretary Fall, written May 12, 1922, in which you said that you thought the opinion of the attorney-general should be put in writing along the line that he had made verbally," said Walsh. "Now, from whom did the suggestion come that the attorney-general's opinion be sought?"

Standard Oilers Made Suggestion.

Bain replied that Oscar Sutra, of the Standard Oil Company, Mr. Wile, counsel of the General Petroleum Company and Wm. F. Herrin, counsel of the Standard Oil Company made the suggestion.

The only objection of getting the opinion of the attorney-general was put forward by Fall who thought it was not necessary, Bain said.

"We had begun work on this contract and we didn't want doubt thrown on the matter by possibly geting an adverse ruling from the attorney-general," Bain continued.

"If you believed the attorney-general would render an opinion that the contract was legal why did you hesitate to ask it?" asked Walsh.

"It was unnecessary in that case," said Bain.

"Now that means you preferred to go ahead with the contract without getting an opinion from the attorney-general," said Walsh.

Bain said he received the impression from Fall that Attorney-General Daugherty had informally expressed approval of the legality of the leases.

Daugherty Had No Objections.

"I think Fall told me that the general policy had been discussed informally after cabinet meetings with the attorney-general present, and that the attorney-general had thought the plan a good one and raised no objections to it," Bain said.

"My belief at that time was that the opinion was an informal one and did not go into detail."

"What did you mean when you wrote Fall about not wanting Doheny to get into any trouble? Did you want to make things easy for Mr. Doheny?" asked Lenroot.

"I understood Mr. Doheny had difficult technical problems to solve in connection with the disposal and shipment of oil and we were interested in not causing him more trouble. Such as might grow out of legal action," said Bain.

Walsh asked if any of the bidding companies were advised that the proposed contracts were legal.

Contradictory Testimony.

"The Doheny Company was so advised by a written opinion from some outside law firm, I believe and Mr. Sinclair had such an opinion from an outside firm—that of Paul Cravath, New York, I think—when Sinclair formed a syndicate to market the Mammoth Oil Company stock.

"Why, I thought that Sinclair told us he never had such an opinion," exclaimed Walsh.

"Well, I am pretty sure he did," Bain said. Do you want me to look for it?"

"I certainly do," Walsh said.

The committee then adjourned until tomorrow morning.

New Sensation Promised.

Karl C. Schuyler, attorney for J. Leo Stack of Denver, was present in the committee room. He is supposed to have been connected with the deal whereby Stack and Frederick G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post held up Sinclair for some alleged "claims" on Teapot Dome.

Schuyler is said to have some "sensational correspondence" relating to the deal.

Schuyler will be questioned tomorrow along with officials of the Washington branches of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies.

Prince Korsakoff, Wrangel Aide, Bests Boston Hotel Bill

(By The Federated Press.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Radical circles are deeply moved by the sad plight of Prince Simon Nicolas Korsakoff. The prince was an aid to General Wrangel, at one time New York Times' favorite defender of civilization. Prince Korsakoff did what he could to hamper the Russian workers in their effort to build a new government, and what he could to help starve the peasant. That done he got away and went to Monte Carlo.

What money he had left he spent there, and borrowed some more. Then he went to America. He knew that in this democracy, and only in this democracy do people crowd around the feet of titled loafers from the Old World. Counts and dukes and other princes wrote him that the going continued good in the land of the free, and he managed to get here. Luck brought up against a "friend" whom he had met in Monte Carlo; and this friend invited him for a visit in Boston. The prince went and ran up a hotel bill at the Copley Plaza Hotel, which is a toney one, and his next move was to a police station.

When he said he was a prince they treated him gently, and supplemented their respect with reverence when he said he had fought the Bolsheviks. His friend, he explained, had borrowed $200 and all the prince's nicest underwear, and then disappeared. He was released. Somebody paid his hotel bill. The prince says his brothers in arms were scattered over the world from Sofia to Peking and Chicago suburbs; and he says further that he thinks he may go to work. Some of the others have tried that, and told him it wasn't so bad.

MOSCOW ANNOUNCES AUSTRIA GIVES SOVIET RUSSIA RECOGNITION

MOSCOW, Feb. 25.—Austria has given Soviet Russia recognition de jure, according to advices received by the foreign office here.

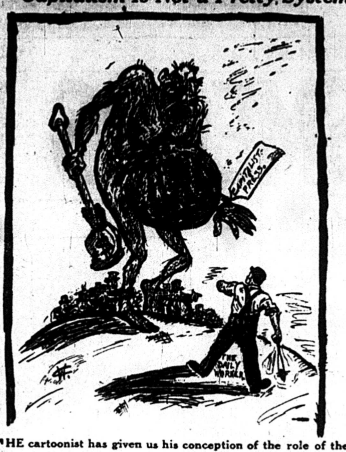
Recent advices from Vienna have indicated that Austria was on the eve of formal recognition of Soviet Russia, following the recognition given that government by Great Britain, Italy and Norway in the recent past.

This Is Not a Pretty Picture But Capitalism Is Not a Pretty System



THE cartoonist has given us his conception of the role of the capitalist press. We will admit right off the reel that the picture is not good to look at. At the same time it puts the message across.

The capitalist press is bound hand and foot to the employing class. It is the mouthpiece thru which they slander the workers and create opposition to their endeavors to better their conditions.

It is for sale to the highest bidder. The bosses have the money so the pens of the capitalist journalists are at their disposal. Note the money bag a the end of the club.

The personification of the capitalist press looks formidable in comparison to the worker who, with sling in hand, is preparing to strike a blow at the uncouth monster. But if you look at the monster again you will have no difficulty in seeing—perhaps you saw it the first time—a large swelling, like an inflated bladder. That is filled with lies. It is the monster's vulnerable spot. That is where the worker will land the contents of his sling. The workingclass David will slay the capitalist Goliath.

This sling represents the DAILY WORKER!

How the capitalists hate the DAILY WORKER. They have good reason to. It speaks boldly and rips the inflated bladders of lies their press pours out on the workers. Colonel McCloskey, chief of staff of the sixth military area, speaking at the Kiwanis Club a few days ago, denounced the DAILY WORKER as a "subversive, pacifist and Bolshevist sheet." During the trial of members of the Upholsterers' Union now taking place in this city the jurors are forbidden to read it. This proves it is hitting home.

With the DAILY WORKER, the only English Communist Daily in the United States, the workers are beginning to meet their enemy on more equal terms.

NEW YORK FIGHT ON DAVIS LAWS AT HIGHEST PITCH

Huge Conference Coming on March 2

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—The Provisional Council for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers, representing nine language councils, is calling a conference for Sunday afternoon, March 2, at 2 p. m., at Stuyvesant Casino. 142 Second avenue, New York City.

A call has been sent to every trade union, every labor political party, every fraternal organization and every organization of foreign-born workers to send delegates to this conference.

The call puts the issue clearly, explaining:

> The employers of this country are trying to forge a new weapon to aid them in destroying the unions, establishing the open shop and cutting down the standard of living of the workers.
>
> There are pending in Congress two laws, which propose, thru "selective immigration" and registration of foreign-born workers, to create for the capitalist employers an army of serfs who cannot organize or strike. These laws are backed by big employers of this country.
>
> These proposed laws are a menace to native and foreign-born workers alike. The carefully selected, registered, photographed, finger-printed foreign-born workers are to be the club thru which the big employers hope to beat down the standard of living of all the workers of this country.

If the big employers are permitted to create an army of workers such as these laws will bring into existence, they will have the weapon thru which they can smash the unions, establish the open shop, beat down wages, and create worse conditions of work for every worker in this country.

In order to carry on an effective fight against these bills it is necessary to unite all working class organizations against these vicious laws now pending in Congress.

Every reader who is a member of a union, a fraternal organization or an organization of foreign-born workers, must see to it that his organization is represented at this conference.

In the Year 2000

Minstrels have sung of the glories of the kings courts; reporters write of the glories of this capitalist system; but one of our comrades will now tell of the future society to come.

Sydney Borgeson, at a meeting of the North Side Branch of the Young Workers League, which will be held in their meeting room at Imperial Hall Wednesday evening, Feb. 27, will speak of the life to be lived in the year 2000.

You may or may not agree with him. But come and hear what he has to say and see if he has interpreted correctly your hopes for the society that is to come when Communism is finally attained and the workers hold their destiny in their own hands.

Don't forget. At the Imperial Hall, 2409 N. Halsted St. This applies especially to those who live in the vicinity of the hall and are young workers.

WHAT 3RD PARTY IS ALL ABOUT DISCUSSED IN N.Y.

Single Taxer Was Good He Made Them Laugh

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—The subject, "What Should a Third Party Stand For?" was discussed at the Civic Club on Feb. 21.—Interest in the subject brought out a large audience despite the heavy slush that made the streets almost impassable. The speakers were Rose Pastor Stokes, member of the Workers Party; J. A. H. Hopkins, of the Committee of 48, and of the National Farmer-Labor Progressive Party; Algernon Lee, member of the Socialist Party; W. J. Wallace, Single-Taxer; Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the "Nation," presided.

Mr. Hopkins spoke for the program of his party, which included "abolition of special privileges thru public ownership of the railroads, control of money and credit by the people thru government and co-operative banks, public control of natural resources, preservation of civil rights guaranteed by the constitution and, prevention of judicial abuses."

Lee Waved the Flag.

Mrs. Stokes outlined the series of conferences that had taken place to organize a real Farmer-Labor Party and the sabotaging position in these of the Socialist Party against the formation of a united front to the enemy, capitalism. Lee's speech was largely an apology for the Socialist Party's attitude. Algernon Lee, who assumed such gallant leadership after the armistice in the famous Liberty Arch affair which glorified the killing of workers in Russia by American troops, decried the proclivities for leadership among members in the Workers Party and confessed to retiring modesty on the part of socialists.

This he gave as a reason for the Socialists refusing to join with the Communists in the effort to create a class party of workers and farmers. Another reason was that "the farmers are sellers of goods, well off, and not ready." Here he gave the history of "the forty years' struggle of the British Labor Party" which "was justified by its present strength" and tho it "may not take us, in America, nearly so many years" he gave the impression that it would certainly be quite a few! He complained against the radical left wing in the labor movement and gave this as another reason for socialist opposition to a common effort with the communists toward the creation of a great class party of the workers and farmers.

Socialists Not Ready.

He said the socialists had learned how not to win the labor unions and had stopped doing it, while the communists went out to "capture" everybody and the socialists for one didn't want to get captured. No, they "preferred to efface themselves and let the workers, the rank and file, go toward a class party," slowly, slowly, slowly they will go toward it, and they, the socialists will follow meekly and uncomplainingly and oh, ever so slowly! in the rear.

He didn't explain why it was then, that they preferred to go, past the two old capitalist party conventions, to a conference dominated by reactionary officials and why they refused to join the May 30 Conference where the rank and file are represented. It was noticeable that Lee talked of the "public interest" and made a special bid for what he thought were bourgeois elements in this meeting.

The last speaker was Mr. Wallace, who is a candidate for president on the Single Tax ticket. He went into the principles of the single tax and created, apparently for no reason at all, a great deal of merriment in the audience.

San Carlo Grand Opera Coming to Chicago March 31

Fortune Gallo, the New York impresario, has decided to bring the San Carlo Grand Opera company to Chicago, and between March 31 and April 6, it will give nine performances at the Auditorium.

Mr. Gallo has been presenting the huge spectacle, "The Miracle," for five weeks at the Century Theatre, New York, and his opera company has appeared at Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Detroit, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other large centers of population. Gallo says he is trying to popularize grand opera by bringing it within the means of the masses. He presents works from the standard repertory.

END OF PUBLIC RAIL OWNERSHIP, IS DAWES' PLAN

German Workers Fight U. S. 'Expert's' Scheme

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 25.—There is great uneasiness in German labor circles over the announcement that the international conferences headed by Gen. Charles G. Dawes are considering the possibility of placing the railway system of Germany, now state-owned, under private management as security for an international loan. They point out that the thing for which the big industrials, headed by Hugo Stinnes, have been working for years, and which the German people have thus far resolutely set themselves against, is now in danger of becoming a reality.

Industrialists After Railroads.

The big industrialists have repeatedly tried to grab the railroads. When at various times during the recent inflation period, the government turned to its own rich men to consider the possibilities of their advancing a loan to the government, one of the stock answers was: "We'll furnish the cash if you'll let us have the railroads." Now international capitalism is singing the same song, "Give capitalism the government railroads and you'll get your loan."

The workers have a two-fold reason for opposing the delivery of the railways into private hands. They regard such a step as a first step backward in social development. Once the railways are turned back, there is reason to think that the postoffice, the telephone and telegraph may next go into private hands, and private monopoly become ever more dominant.

8-Hour Day Endangered.

Secondly, they know that the railway workers would be at the mercy of industrialists who are now showing their cruelty in their destruction of the eight-hour day principle and in the low wages paid. And the workers at large will feel the change from a system operated for the public good to one operated for private profit in increased costs of transportation and freight rates.

Elaborate essays, which purport to prove that government ownership is a failure because the state is too lenient about keeping too big a personnel. To this Heinrich Stroebel, one of the best known writers on economic problems in Germany, replies in effect as follows in the weekly Politik und Wirthschaft:

Public Ownership Sabotaged.

It is true that, following the war, the government had to provide for large numbers of soldiers who were jobless, and that a number of these were taken into the railway service. But the extra expense incurred thereby is negligible when one considers that at present wages and salaries make out only 16 per cent of the expenditures of the railways. The railway deficit at present is not the fault of public ownership and management. There is a deficit because of mismanagement during the war; and because private industry has outrageously overcharged the railway administration in furnishing supplies.

During the war, new construction stopped; copper parts were supplanted by baser materials, cheap substitutes for grease and lubricating oils and great damage resulted. On top of it all Germany had to deliver 5,000 locomotives, 10,000 coaches and 150,000 freight cars to the allies. All this is now being charged up against the government railway administration in the attempt to disprove its worth.

The workers are carrying on a systematic campaign of education among the masses to warn them of the dangers of "privatization" of the railways.

Mexican Bolshevik Tendencies Worry Reactionary Papers

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 25.—The reactionary organ, Excelsior, is greatly worried about the danger of a split between "such reactionaries and respectables as Coolidge, Hughes and Gompers, on the one hand, and such radicals and Bolsheviks as Obregon, Calles and Morones, on the other" if Dr. Siurob persists in his plan to convoke a new constituent assembly to modernize the Mexican constitution, already much too "Bolshevik" for Excelsior, by "bringing it into harmony with modern social tendencies."

"Hughes, Coolidge and Gompers will never let you do it," warns Excelsior. "It will mean withdrawal of recognition on the part of the United States, and severance of connection between the Mexican Federation of Labor and the American Federation Labor. It will mean new rebellion and new misery for Mexico."

All of which is unusually frank for the Excelsior, and nearer to the truth than most of its editorial elements, and rather quaint in its selection of Hughes, Coolidge and Gompers to form the trinity of bugaboos with which it tries to frighten the more radical elements here.

Philadelphia Labor Movement Up In Arms Against Disruption Policy of Yellow I. L. G. W. U. Heads

By ABRAM JAKIRA.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPIA, Pa.—The conference of various Trade Union and Fraternal Organizations of Philadelphia called for the purpose of protesting against the wholesale expulsions of active and well-known members from the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was a success, notwithstanding the fact that the conference was called on short notice, 28 organizations were represented. The Jewish Workmen's Circle was well represented despite the fact that the officials of that organization announced reprisals against all members who dared to participate in the conference.

Brother B. Neinstein, chairman of the Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, presided. Esther Weissman and Max Levine, former chairman of the Joint Board of the Cloak Makers' Union, made a very interesting report on the controversy which aroused the indignation of all present against the reactionary machine of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Expulsions Disrupt the Organization

With facts in their hands the two expelled veterans of the labor movement brought to light several illuminating facts exposing the tactics of the officialdom and the motives behind the expulsions. It was no concern of the officials that the expulsions, which were made contrary to the constitution of the union, led to a complete breakdown of the organization. The total membership of the union was reduced from 1800 to but 900, even according to the official reports. Since the expulsions took place the union completely lost its control over the shops which took the radical elements years of hard struggle to establish.

Against Dual Unions.

The expelled members were strong enough and had a sufficient following to organize a union of their own. The masses are with them. In fact, the officials were making every effort possible to provoke them to start a new union. But the expelled members are against dual unionism. Their determination is to fight their way back into the existing union which they themselves organized and built thru years of efforts and sacrifices.

League Not The Issue.

Membership in the Trade Union Educational League was the official reason for the wholesale expulsions. This was only a blind to cover up the real issues involved. The expelled members offered to withdraw from the League for the sake of preserving unity in the organization. But the officials even refused to listen to this proposal and put up new conditions to make it impossible for the expelled members to return. Reinstated members are subject to monetary fines, in many cases sufficiently high to make payment impossible. No office can be held by the reinstated for a period of one or two years. They must not read or support radical newspapers. They must not attend meetings addressed by radical speakers. They must not attend affairs arranged by radical organizations. One dress maker, who was not a member of the League and was in no way connected with it, was fined ten dollars for attending a Freiheit ball. She refused to pay as a matter of principle and was expelled from the Union. She is compelled to work in an Open Shop.

The Real Issue.

The expelled members were constantly fighting for constructive measures dealing with union affairs, with conditions in the shops. It was because of this that they gained the support of the rank and file of the union. This the officials feared. The radicals, for instance, were carrying on a bitter fight against the so-called "fish" elements in the union. There is a number of petty business men who join the union during the busy season by paying the required twenty-five dollars initiation fee. After the busy season is over these elements quit the union, "fish" themselves out of the union. (Hence the name "fish".) The bona fide garment workers who stick to the trade all year round, including the slack periods, were naturally supporting the radicals in their fight against the "fish" who as a rule are staunch supporters of the officialdom.

Expulsions Affect Other Trades.

Speaker after speaker, representatives of other trades, pointed out that the breakdown of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union is playing into the hands of the bosses and has already seriously affected many other trades in the city. The situation is especially critical in view of the urgent need at the present moment to solidify the ranks of labor in order to be able to withstand the onslaughts of the employers. The conference therefore determined to take a hand in the controversy and adopted the following resolution calling upon the leaders of the trade union movement of the city to bring pressure to bear on the officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union to have the expelled members reinstated.

Resolution Adopted.

Considering that the critical situation of the expelled members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union has affected the general labor movement of Philadelphia and has created a serious crisis which may lead to far reaching results, and

Whereas, the attacks of the employers against organized labor demands unity of the various tendencies within the labor movement, and

Whereas, only thru united efforts will it be possible to fortify the positions of the unions, be it therefore

Resolved, that we, the Conference of labor organizations of Philadelphia call upon the President and Secretary of the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia—Brothers Hershberg and Birsch—who stand at the head of the labor movement of Philadelphia, and upon Brother Golden, State Organizer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, our most powerful sister organization to the International, to act as a committee of three;

Be it further resolved, that this committee be urged upon consultation with the expelled members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union to get in touch with the officers of the Cloak and Dressmakers Union in order to bring about the reinstatement of the expelled members with full membership rights and without conditions.

We are firmly convinced that this will serve the best interests of the labor movement in general and of the needle trades in particular by uniting all the forces for practical organization work in the unions.

Permanent Committee Elected.

A permanent committee of nine was elected to continue the work of the conference—to canvass all labor organizations of Philadelphia and urge them to raise their voice of protest against the disruption of the labor movement by the officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, to collect funds for support of the families of the expelled who are deprived by the union officials of the oportunity to work and to call another conference to consider further steps to be taken to compell the reinstatement of the expelled members.

Whether the officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union will dare fight the entire labor movement of Philadelphia remains to be seen.

Birth Control Is Issue in Syracuse Free Speech Fight

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Charging that the ordinance passed by the common council of Syracuse forbidding the discussion of birth control in that city "violates constitutional guarantees of free speech and would cause more trouble than it would prevent," the American Civil Liberties Union here wired a protest to Mayor Walrath urging him on "behalf of many citizens of New York state" to veto the ordinance.

The ordinance is designed particularly to prevent the holding of the State Birth Control conference, according to Mrs. Margaret Sanger's secretary in the American Birth Control League. The conference is scheduled for Feb. 28 and 29 in the Municipal auditorium of Syracuse. The telegram of protest sent to Mayor Walrath of Syracuse by the Civil Liberties Union follows:

"We understand the council has passed an ordinance forbidding discussion of birth control and that the bill is now before you. May we urge on behalf of many citizens of New York state that you do not give the bill your approval. It violates constitutional guarantees of free speech and would cause more trouble than it would prevent."

Philadelphia Mass Meeting Will Talk About Teapot Dome

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 25.—A huge mass meeting will be held, under the auspices of the Workers Party, Friday, Feb. 29, at 8 p. m., at the Machinists' Temple 1239 Spring Garden St., to tell the workers of Philadelphia who is who and what is what in the notorious Teapot Dome scandal and how the workers can make new Teapot Domes impossible. Speakers: William Weinstone of New York; S. Sklaroff of Philadelphia; R. Baker, member Machinists' union; A. Jakira, district organizer Workers Party.

Philadelphia labor still continues to support the two capitalist parties now in control of the government. The Teapot Dome scandal has shown clearly that the republican party is not alone responsible for the corrupt methods practiced in Washington. The democratic party is equally involved. It is high time for organized labor of Philadelphia to join hands with organized labor of the country and organize a party of its own, a real class labor party.

All Philadelphia workers must come to the Oil Mass Meeting to hear what workers of other cities are doing to make Teapot Domes in the future impossible.

Chicago Meeting Thursday.

In protest against the proposed oppressive laws to finger-print and register all foreign born workers, a mass meeting has been arranged at Pilsen Park Auditorium, 26th and Albany Ave. Speakers of various nationalities will analyze these proposed laws. The meeting will be held Thursday, Feb. 28, at 8 p. m., and admission is free.

TAMAULIPAS OIL FIELD STILL HELD BY DE LA HUERTA

Backbone of Fascisti Revolt Is Broken

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE
(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 25.—The backbone of the counter-revolt is broken and the question of punishment or amnesty has become the order of the day.

The forces of Enrique Estrada on the western front, tho recently defeated in a sensational battle won by the heroism of a Yaqui Indian regiment which crossed a river under fire, have not been demoralized or scattered. Nor for that matter has the eastern army of the fascisti ceased to exist tho it is disorganized.

Nevertheless the backbone of the counter-revolution is broken and both Vera Cruz and Guadalajara, the two former fascist centers, have been occupied and normal train service is running to both.

Vera Cruz, Key Point.

The strategic importance of Vera Cruz as a custom center and consequent source of revenue, and as the principal port of the republic, cannot be overemphasized. The taking of Guadalajara is not important strategically, but the victory accompanying it, for the time, protected the railways to the north.

One more strategic center remains to the hazards of combat—the oil fields of Tamaulipas. When the fascisti were beaten at Esperanza and Cordoba, they withdrew in fair degree of intactness toward Tuxpan, the fascist military center in the oil district. This is the next federal objective and oil gives it a tremendous importance.

On the other hand, the objective of the fascisti is Tampico. A successful occupation of the region from Tuxpan to Tampico would oil the bearings of the fascisti machinery considerably. But it is not likely.

Ham Lewis After Concessions.

Even the friends of the rebellion here are beginning to admit that the revolt will gradually be reduced to civilization-destroying guerilla warfare. The government has begun paying its employes again, the American concession hunters, headed this time by ex-Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, are back in the Hotel Regis, the broken economic life of the country is slowly being repaired, and the big conservative dailies in the capital are writing editorials in favor of amnesty to the fascisti and magnanimity in the treatment of their leaders.

Amnesty is the topic of the day. The pro-government organ, El Democrata, has declared against it. "We must set such an example," they declare, "that military elements will never again attempt a coup d'etat." The secretary of Gobernacion (secretary of state) has issued a declaration in similar vein.

Constitution, as It Is, Suits Old Guard Down to the Ground

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Senator Norris' resolution proposing a constitutional amendment under which the congress shall assemble and begin work on the first Monday in January after its election, and that the president and vicepresident of the United States shall take office on the third Monday in January following their election, is promised an early and favorable report from the judiciary committee of the senate.

This report was due long ago, but the old guard membership has insisted that the Wadsworth resolution shall be first reported, thereby giving it priority on the calendar.

This Wadsworth resolution proposes a constitutional amendment making more difficult the process of changing the constitution. It provides that the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures that may ratify a proposed amendment must be elected after such amendment has been proposed by congress or the states; also, that any state may require that ratification by its legislature shall be subject to confirmation by popular vote. Still more remarkable, it provides that ratification may be withdrawn by any state during the process of getting the necessary 36 states to ratify.

Court Sides with Union Czars Against Expelled Pressmen

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—The courts have backed up the International Pressmen's Union in its refusal to reinstate David Simons. Simons led the strike of Web pressmen that stopped the printing of New York's multitudinous daily newspapers last October.

Upon the calling of the strike the charter of Local No. 25, was revoked by the International. Simons in bringing suit demanding reinstatement declared that he had been unable to get employment since. Judge Delehanty held the Supreme Court had not authority to issue a mandamus of the kind asked for by Simons, and pointed out that he could still appeal his case at the next general convention of the union.

The DAILY WORKER serves you EVERY DAY. How have you served the DAILY WORKER today?

THE POWER COLUMN

Prepare for the "Sub Campaign"

AS was announced in The Power Column last week, THE DAILY WORKER will carry on a campaign for 10,000 new subscribers by June 15. That is to say, the hundreds of members of the "I-want-to-make-THE DAILY WORKER-grow" club, ever increasing in numbers and in organization will carry on the campaign which is destined to establish once and for all THE DAILY WORKER as a going institution in the life of the American wage-workers.

Briefly stated, the features of the campaign will be the offer of special rates for trial subscriptions to new readers, premiums in the shape of free subscriptions to leading militant labor monthlies to present readers of THE DAILY WORKER who sell year's subscriptions to their fellow workers, and a national competition between all industrial centers to determine where are the livest DAILY WORKER boosters and the strongest militant labor movement.

Branch and City Agents Needed Everywhere.

FROM the basis of the present degree of organization which has been effected for THE DAILY WORKER it would be easy to guess in advance which cities will make the best record in the coming campaign. Those who have been making it a habit to read The Power Column will know that wherever there has been established a working system of branch and city DAILY WORKER agents, there have been the places where THE DAILY WORKER has had the most rapid and steady growth.

Every member of a labor organization will appreciate the value of proper organization to accomplish a desired end. The desired end in the case of THE DAILY WORKER is to secure an ever larger number of workers as steady readers, subscribers for what is commonly admitted to be the best labor daily ever published in America. The means to that end is the organization of the branch agency system by which THE DAILY WORKER may have accredited representatives everywhere who will make their business to increase the power and influence of our paper in their locality by securing new readers. There is no guessing about the matter at all—once THE DAILY WORKER agency system is established in every working class center, the steady continuous growth of THE DAILY WORKER is permanently assured.

This fact was appreciated by THE DAILY WORKER business office even before our paper was published and a series of letters have been written to every Workers Party branch and every City Central committee, requesting that DAILY WORKER representatives be named for every Party unit. Up until now, not every unit has complied with this request. Even in some of the larger cities no city agent has been elected and in many Party branches there is no DAILY WORKER agent. We know that if the membership of the Workers Party all realize the tremendous importance of organization for the work of THE DAILY WORKER, that inside of two weeks there would be practically a 100% organization with a resultant tremendous increase of THE DAILY WORKER circulation everywhere.

Subscription Campaign to Start March 15
Complete Your Organization at Once.

THE big Subscription Drive will start March 15. We know that the campaign will be highly successful in those places where organization is effected. Those cities and Workers Party branches where no agents have yet been named, should see to it that during the next two weeks organization is effected.

Members of the Workers Party should find out if their branch has a DAILY WORKER representative. If one has not yet been elected they should demand that this be done at the very next meeting and the name and address of the agent so named forwarded to THE DAILY WORKER. Delegates to City Central Committees should demand a report of THE DAILY WORKER activities in their city and if no one person has been put in charge, should see to it that a city agent is elected.

The campaign starts March Fifteenth.

Thoro organization means a successful campaign.

A successful campaign means at least 10,000 new DAILY WORKER readers by June Fifteenth.

Ten thousand new readers means a bigger and better DAILY WORKER, a stronger and more solidified militant labor movement, another big step towards the emancipation of the working class.

Start organizing now!

Public Rotten-Egged by Packers, Morris, Armour, Cudahy

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 25.—How long the people of this city have been fed rotten eggs is not known. But three large packing concerns and several commission merchants have been caught by pure food and drug inspectors, who have been investigating conditions locally. The Armour, Cudahy, and Morris packing companies, with a number of smaller concerns, are charged with possession and sale of eggs unfit for human consumption. A large pie concern is charged with having used bad eggs in its product.

ROCHESTER HEARS RINGING PROTEST AT DAVIS LAWS

Party Leads Move for Foreign-Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 25.—In protest against the legislation pending in Congress against the foreign born population of this country a rousing mass meeting was held in Lithuanian Hall, under the auspices of the Ukranian branch of the Workers Party.

A resolution denouncing the Davis laws was unanimously adopted and forwarded to Congressman Meyer Jaconstein of the district. A series of other protest meetings will be held and plans are on foot for the formation of an effective council for the Protection of the Foreign Born.

The meeting was addressed by three speakers, one in English and two in Hugarian. They pointed out how the immigration policy of America has changed.

In the early days of the country American capitalists by deceit, lying and kidnapping colonized the country. They kidnapped Negroes in Africa and whites in England. Thus it was that the constantly increasing tide of immigrants that actually built up American civilization were obtained. While American industry was expanding immigrants were welcome, the speakers explained—especially if they were not of a progressive or revolutionary character.

The attitude towards immigration has changed now, declared the speakers. With European labor becoming ever more revolutionary the capitalist class is mustering its weapons to guard against any progressive moves by American labor.

Selected immigrants registered, finger-printed and photographed, are considered not only as an assurance against radical movements by the foreign born, but as a club with which American workers can be beaten into line. Thus the Davis laws threaten the very existence of organized labor.

Wages Rising in Russia as They Are Sinking Elsewhere

MOSCOW, Feb. 25.—The Council of People's Economy of Moscow has given out some statistics concerning present salaries of Russian workers, which show the great improvement of labor in Russia as compared to other places. The average salary of a Moscow worker is equivalent to 22.5 rubles of merchandise a week (the same as before the war). Workers in the book publishing trade earn the highest salary, 32 rubles, and textile workers the lowest, 16 rubles (this means standard rubles).

Compared to the pre-war salaries the present salaries stand at 80 per cent in Moscow, 64.7 per cent at Petrograd and 54.8 per cent in the province, where the cost of living is considerably lower.

While in other countries, under the capitalist regime, there is a constant decrease of wages, as for instance in Germany, where wages are 20 per cent of pre-war rates, there is a continual increase in the workers' republic of Russia. What is more, the purchase power of Russian money is going up, while that of other countries is going down.

Teapot Dome Scandal Will Be Discussed at Membership Meeting

The Teapot Dome scandal is stirring the country. It helps expose the corruption of the capitalist parties and capitalist politics in general. This is one more reason for our party initiating a powerful campaign for a genuine labor party.

Further plans of this campaign to be discussed at Chicago's General Membership Meeting, Tuesday, Feb. 26, at Imperial Hall, 2409 N. Halsted St.

Campaign for Protection of Foreign Born Workers and Daily Worker Drive as well will be discussed.

All members must attend. Membership card will admit you.—Arne Swabeck, City Organizer.

REBEL MINERS BETRAYED BY LABOR RENEGADES

West Va. Victims Declared "Guilty"

By THOMAS MYERSCOUGH.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

The delegates to the recent miners' convention had to wait till they got home and back to the picks before they knew what business was transacted during the two hours of the last day's session. Not only did they fail to hear any ruling made on the vote on the Howat case, but they also failed to hear the reading of the most brazen document of all that were read into the records of that ne'er to be forgotten convention.

This document, labeled resolution No. 734 and signed by P. T. Fagan, Wm. Patton, Wm. Hargest and Carl Wolcutt, all of District No. 5, Pittsburgh, is the rankest kind of betrayal of the men who led the struggle for the preservation of their union in the little isolated mining town of Cliftonville, W. Va., during the 1922 strike. This is another sample of the begging that makes it impossible for workers to do anything besides beg.

Here is the resolution addressed to Gov. Morgan:

"WHEREAS, There are forty-two men incarcerated in the Moundsville, W. Va., penitentiary charged with complicity in the march of the miners in Brooke County, West Virginia, and

"WHEREAS, These men have now been in prison for many months leaving their families and dependents in want and destitution; therefore be it

"RESOLVED, That we petition the Honorable E. P. Morgan, Governor of West Virginia, to pardon these men so that they may take care of their families, and can again mingle with their fellow men, as we believe they have been sufficienly punished, as they were victims of communistic and anarchistic propaganda. Hence, we appeal to you to temper justice with mercy, and liberate these brothers now in the penitentiary at Moundsville, in your state."

It is hard to understand the acts of men whose duty it is to protect our membership, yet who, in a document like the resolution addressed to Gov. Morgan, of West Virginia, admit that the men were guilty when they ask that "justice be tempered with mercy." What do they mean by justice? What do they mean by mercy? The Cossacks of Pennsylvania collaborated with their like from West Virginia, they hounded the miners on both sides of the border, the Pennsy Cossacks in West Virginia and the West Virginians in Pennsylvania, and it made no difference to them, they took all the miners who didn't look good to them regardless of whether they took part in the riot or not.

They picked them up on the Pennsylvania side of the border, drove them to the line and pushed them into the waiting arms of the West Virginia authorities. It wouldn't be so bad if the men who signed the resolution were ignorant of the facts in the case, but it appears that it suddenly dawned on them that they were in a red baiting society and that they could put it over. They didn't even think of the poor prisoners before they left their homes, else the resolution would have come up when the committee was making its report.

THE above are the reproductions of the first pages of the combined "extra" editions of the Moscow "Pravda" and "Isvestia", the two Moscow Communist dailies, containing the first news of Nikolai Lenin's death. Copies of these issues have just been received by the DAILY WORKER. These issues are dated Tuesday, Jan. 22, and Wednesday, Jan. 23, 1924. Lenin died on Jan. 21st, at 6:50 p. m. These were two-page editions, the Jan. 22nd issue appearing with the second page blank. The Jan. 22nd issue merely carries the short official communique announcing to the people the sudden death of Comrade Lenin. It also publishes the terse remarks of President Kalinin on the death of Lenin.

The full report of the physicians who attended Lenin are also published, together with the proclamation of the 11th All Russian Congress of Soviets declaring Jan. 21st a day of mourning, and the announcement of the Moscow Soviet closing all places of amusement for one week. The appointment of a committee for the organization of the funeral was first announced in this issue.

The second extra was a combined edition of Pravda and Isvestia and was dated Jan. 23rd. This was a two page edition. The first page is taken up with appeals to the members of the Communist Party and all workers signed by the central executive committee of the Russian Communist Party. The executive committee of the Communist International also has an appeal to the workers of the world. The 11th congress of Soviets appeals to all the toilers of the Union of Soviet Republics to stand by the revolution. The Communist Youth of Russia are appealed to by the central committee of their organization.

The Red soldiers and sailors are asked to observe revolutionary discipline and keep the mighty spirit of the Red army alive. The second page is taken up with announcements of the arrangements for the funeral.

Free Lance Writers Declare War on Moron Scenarios

Charging that closed monopoly exists in the scenario field, which operates in favor of a few authors who are supplying 90 per cent of the screen stories that are produced, one hundred free lance authors have joined in the incorporation of the "American League of Freelance Authors," which will have its national headquarters in Chicago, in the Capitol building.

Short story and scenario writers all over the country will be asked to co-operate in a national campaign to break the alleged monopoly which is declared to be keeping the names of new writers off the screen, and which is also accused of being responsible for "an epidemic of immoral, censorable, and mediocre films which have aroused the antagonism of movie patrons everywhere."

It is understood that an organized drive will be made on film producers who are said to have permitted an association of "professional" scenario writers to establish an "open shop" which closes the big studios to new writers.

DETROIT, Feb. 25.—Edgar Owens and Max Sillinsky spoke at a tailors' organization meeting in the Labor Temple here. The union is conducting a drive for 100 per cent organization in this town.

COMMUNIST·CHILDREN'S·COLUMN

GREAT MEN.

By IDA DAILES

When we hear about great men, what do we think of? Most of us think of the great men our teachers tell us about in school, and we believe that these men are great because our teachers tell us about them in such a wonderful way. These great men that we learn about are usually great soldiers, generals and colonels. Let us think hard and try to find out whether these men really are great.

George Washington, General Lee, General Grant, General Sherman, Napoleon, and such men are the ones we hear most about. Do you know what it means to be a great man like this? It means to be a great killer to know how to kill more men than others know how to kill. That may be terrible, but our teachers tell us that these men killed because, at that time, it was right to kill. Was it? Yes, it was right for them to kill because they killed for their country, our teachers say.

What was their country? Usually their country was either a king or a group of rich people who wanted to become more powerful or more rich. So they gave these killers a lot of money and praised them very much, and made great men of them.

But there are other great men that our teachers don't speak about. There are great men who are very poor while they live and who work hard helping other men, like themselves, to make the world a better place to live in for those who work in the factories and on the farms.

One of these great men was Karl Marx. He was never very rich, and he did not care to make a billion dollars and have all the teachers in his country talking to the children about him as they talk about kings and generals. He saw that the workers of the world are the ones who work hard to make all the good things, and that they, themselves, have very little, and sometimes even starve or die young because they live in such poor homes and work in factories where they get all sorts of diseases. So Karl Marx thought of a way that the poor people could take the factories and farms for themselves and not let one man be the boss over many workers, while he does nothing but enjoy himself. He thought of a way that all the good things in the world could belong to the workers who make them, so that their children would not have to go to work while they are very young, but could go to school and grow up to be clever and educated and healthy men and women. And Karl Marx wrote about these things in books so that workers could read about them and learn how they themselves can make this world a better world. I hope that each one of us, when we grow up, will read these books and teach our comrades, the other workers, to read them.

Another great man was Nicolai Lenin. No doubt you have all heard about him. Millions of workers in Russia are mourning for him as they would for a father, for it was he who taught them how to make Russia their very own land. Many workers in other countries of the world are also very sad because this great man died.

Lenin was the head of the Russian government—and, guess how much pay he got? Just $50 a week. Do you know that President Coolidge gets about $2,000 a week? Lenin was great because he did not care to get things only for himself. He wanted all the workers of Russia and all the workers of the world to get the good things, and he did not care if he had to die to help them.

We should learn all about the lives of these great heroes of the working class and try to grow up to be more like them, and not like the great man who killed for money or power.

BRITISH RULE IN INDIA FACES SERIOUS CRISIS

Government Defeated on Important Measure

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CALCUTTA, India, Feb. 25.—A crisis that may shake British rule in India to its foundations has broken here on the morning of the British Labor Party's coming into office. The political future of Ramsay MacDonald and the conservative wing of the British Labor Party depends to a great degree on the way in which he handles this powder magazine.

The Government of India was defeated in the Imperial Assembly of Delhi on the Home Rule issue. The Swarjists or Dominion Home Rule Party introduced a resolution calling upon the viceroy to initiate a round table conference representing all Indian political parties and the Indian government. This would draft a constitution to be submitted for approval to the newly elected Indian Parliament and to the British Parliament.

The British government opposed this and were aided by conservative Swarjists. The progressives won by a vote of 76 to 48. The British government as usual offered a milk and water sop in the form of a fake inquiry to determine whether the present constitution was working allright or not and to learn whether it was possible to amend it or not. This was similar to MacDonald's proposition.

European papers favoring the British government predict a complete breakdown of the present administration.

The bill which brought about the defeat of the government provided for the immediate transfer of all departments of government to the control of the Indian legislature. Foreign affairs and defense were excepted, the former being delayed pending reconstruction of the British Empire and the latter for a period of ten years.

Sir Malcolm Hailey, representing the British Government was the chief spokesman against the resolution for more freedom for the Hindus. He read a statement from Ramsay MacDonald which shows conclusively that colonial subjects of Great Britain can expect no alleviation of their conditions from that imperialistically-minded capitalist lackey. The statement is as follows:

"The British Government notes with great concern the distrust shown by advocates of constitutional reform regarding the good faith of the British Government and its attitude toward constitutional progress. The British Government associates itself with Indian constitutionalists toward responsible government, but that aim can only be realized by co-operation in enabling the act to be administered as efficiently as possible in the interests of good government."

In other word Mr. MacDonald is strong for Hindoo patriots so long as they assist the British capitalists in robbing their countrymen.

THE THEATRE

By D'FERRIER

The Freiheit Workers' Art Theater of Chicago produced its first play, "Menschen," by Sholom Aleichem. The production was a great success.

Those who took part in the play are all devoted comrades, workers who have to labor hard during the day for their existence and that of their families, active union workers, members of the Arbeiter Ring (Workmen's Circle), all of them Workers Party comrades. And with all these activities they find time to devote themselves to culture, to drama. It is hard work preparing plays and producing them, but these workers do it all with enthusiasm, because in this way they can dispel the black-yellow Socialist "Forward" atmosphere which hovers so thickly about the Jewish workers.

After the highly successful production of the first play, the "Freiheit Workers' Art Theatre" is preparing to produce the newest revolutionary drama, and those taking part will go into the work with the same devotion, energy and idealism as they did for the first play.

Feathery Robot Comes Near Singing Swan Song of Pekin Ruler

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Igor Stravinski's symphonic poem, "The Song of the Nightingale," was played for the first time in Chicago at the concert of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, at Orchestra Hall last Friday and Saturday. The program of the work is almost as beautiful as the music. It tells how the emperor of China holds audience with a nightingale, and is charmed by his music. But when the emperor of Japan sends the Chinese ruler a mechanical nightingale, the living bird is discarded. But the potentate falls on evil days, and death sits on his pillow, while phantoms haunt his room. He calls for music, but the mechanical song bird is broken. Suddenly appears the banished singer, who charms Death and his evil spirits away, and revives the life of the emperor. The courtiers come to bury him, but remain to celebrate his recovery, while from far away comes the song of a fisherman, welcoming home his nightingale.

Now the remarkable thing is that Stravinski tells this story, considerably in detail, in his music, so that it is a marvel of modernism. Weird and peculiar harmonic progressions, new and wonderful, but terrifically difficult instrumental effects abound, while the Chinese scale is frequently used. The whole effect is that of a whimsical tale, told by figures cut out of green jade.

Big Man—Much Sound.

The soloist of the day was Felix Salmond, a British cellist, and a newcomer to Chicago. Salmond is a big man, tho probably not more than seven feet tall. His musicianship is as big as his physical makeup, for he possesses a tone huge in volume, and exceptionally fine and clear in quality. His execution, as he leans way over the big sound box of his instrument and seems to embrace it, is brilliant and perfect. Salmond played a concerto by Lado. It is dark, soothing and restful music, tho not particularly great.

The concert opened with a Scotch march by Debussy. It is attractive music, spirited yet delicate. Rather than a piece of Scotch music, it is the impression of an exceedingly refined Frenchman of the coarse tunes of the bagpipes.

Got His Germans Mixed.

Following was Beethoven's first symphony. Had this not been labeled Beethoven on the program, it would not have been recognized as such. It is perfectly good Mozart, and, like Mozart, it is light hearted, joyous music, and delightfully old fashioned and out of date. Here is not a trace of the sombre and passionate soul that was the mature Beethoven.

The concert closed with excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust," by Hector Berlioz. The unimpressive invocation of Mephistopheles, two graceful and pleasant little dances, and the tremendous, fiery, Rakoczy march constituted this number.

Next week Claire Dux will be the soloist. She will sing arias by Mozart and Bizet. The orchestra will play Mahler's fourth symphony, excerpts from Schrecker's opera "The Treasure Hunters," in which Miss Dux will assist, and small works by Mozart, Satie, and Schillings.

Ukrainians Will Start Tri-Weekly Paper in Canada

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WINNIPEG, Man., Feb. 25.—The Ukrainian workers and farmers of Canada are going to have a tri-weekly newspaper beginning March 1. It was decided at the convention of the Ukrainian Labor Temple Association here recently to issue the "Ukrainian Labor News," which has been published since 1919 as a semi-weekly, three times a week. This paper serves the third largest national group in Canada.

The convention also adopted resolutions protesting against the treatment of Ukrainian populations of western Ukrainia which is under the domination of reactionary Poland and Roumania. In these districts the Ukrainian workers and peasants are being oppressed by the reactionary governments.

The resolutions were addressed to J. Ramsay MacDonald, premier of England, and the workers of the world, asking them to protest against the treatment of the Ukrainian workers and farmers in Poland and Roumania.

BRITISH RADICAL ENTHUSIASTIC FOR DAILY WORKER

Ashleigh Sends Praise Across Atlantic

"The first numbers of the DAILY WORKER have just arrived in England. The paper is splendid. May it grow in power and circulation. The British militants show great interest in the DAILY and wish you all success." Charles Ashleigh, ex-political prisoner and deportee, writes from London, England.

Enthusiastic words are coming from all sides, and with them subscriptions to the DAILY WORKER are arriving so fast that they are swamping the business office. This is being written at 8:30 p. m., and the girl who makes out the addresses that gets your paper to you has been working since 9:00 this morning and yet is behind, because so many subs come in in every mail. The sub boosters in Detroit are keeping her busy. They don't seem to care how much work they cause as long as they get the subs.

Wilson Editorial Rang Bell.

"Your editorial 'Wilson, Morgan's War Lord,' brings you a new subscriber for six months," writes C. R. Hiblund of Minneapolis. "The new subscriber is a machinist on one of the railroads here. On my way to work I showed him the editorial and he gave me the money for a six month's sub at once."

"The DAILY WORKER," continues Hiblund, "is performing an incalculable service to the American working class, by spreading, instead of manipulating true information. Your editorial writers not only show a great background of fundamental knowledge, but they are also craftsmen in the art of word-building. The DAILY WORKER fulfills my every expectation, and receives my unqualified support and endorsement at every opportunity. May the DAILY WORKER never swerve from its true course, but serve as a beacon light to guide an exploited working class safely into the harbor of communism."

What Sub Booster Says.

"I have been very busy so I could only get $13 worth of subs since the DAILY WORKER started. I will do better in future because the DAILY WORKER is getting better with every issue."—E. H. K., Crafton, Pa.

"The DAILY WORKER is one of the best written papers in this country. It is not verbose, it is not obscure. It is clean, clear-cut and every word hits the mark for which it was aimed. I am sharing my paper with three other people who do not feel they can afford to pay for it just now."—Elsiephene Merriam, Denver, Colo.

Old Guard Gloomy at Mellon Bill's Defeat in House

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 25.—Deep despondency has settled upon Gillett, Longworth and the Old Guard hierarchy in the House, at their defeat on every outstanding issue of the tax bill by the combined progressives and democrats. The vote of 221 to 196 by which the Mellon surtax rates were rejected in favor of the 44 per cent proposed by the Democrats, was a fatal blow to the morale of the administration crowd. This was followed by a vote of 162 to 112, by which the progressives and democrats made the income tax rates apply to profits from the sale of stock dividends, regardless of when sold. Then they whipped the administration a third time, by extending the benefits of the 25 per cent reduction on earned income to farmers and small business men. The vote was 141 to 134.

A feature of the tax debate has been the frank discussion of the Big Business character of Secretary Mellon, the extent of his bank and oil and rail holdings, and the enormous profits he has recently received from ventures that depend upon favorable legislation. Frear of Wisconsin explained how Mellon's Gulf Oil Co., for example, had paid a stock dividend of 200 per cent, and that the value of the stock then jumped from $400 to $800 per share. Rainey of Illinois pointed out that $2,100,000,000 of stock dividends were distributed in 1922, following the leadership of Mellon in his oil company inflation.

Greeks Report Effort to Rid Bulgaria of Rule of King Boris

ATHENS, Feb. 25.—The Greek general staff at Salonica has received reports of a serious communist revolt in Bulgaria, designed to overthrow King Boris and establish a republic. The revolt was said to have started in the northern districts of Bulgaria.

Many supporters of the present government are reported to have been arrested and shot by the revolutionists. The government is reported to have sent troops to the north to put down the revolt.

* * * *

LONDON, Feb. 25.—The Bulgarian legation issued a statement today to the effect that reports of a revolution, emanating from Athens, probably are untrue.

GETS CASE OF UPHOLSTERERS ON TRIAL HERE

jury before it retired to consider a verdict.

Romano began his statement to the jury by telling them that the prosecution had not tried to prove that any violence occurred during the strike. "But just the same these men are guilty of breaking the law." He said that "Unfortunately there has been brought into this case Fred Jurish." No case against Jurish had been proven he indicated by this. During the course of his argument he referred to Robert Bronson, secretary of the employing upholsterers, as "my associate."

Nelson Flays Bosses' Plot.

"These men on trial here are charged with conspiracy. There is a conspiracy and the conspirators are the state attorney, Robert E. Crowe, and Dudley Taylor, the lawyer for the employers' association, and not the men on trial. Dudley Taylor has placed these men on trial," said Oscar Nelson, lawyer for the five men on trial, in beginning his statement to the jury.

"You have been told by the state's attorney that this case is an important one. With that we of the defense fully agree.

"This case will decide whether or not a trade union can carry on its regular activities without being interfered with by the employers thru the state's attorney's office.

Couldn't Use Injunction.

"These men have been charged with the crime of trying to ruin the business of the upholstery employers. The upholstery employers thru the best lawyer they could get, Dudley Taylor, went to a court of equity and obtained an injunction to protect them against just such a possibility.

"The defendants were not taken into court charged with violating this injunction. If they had been called into court they would not be in the position they are now. They would have had to prove themselves innocent. The state would have said that they were guilty and then they would have had to convince the court that they were not guilty.

"Dudley Taylor knew that he did not have a good enough case against these men to ask a court to fine them five dollars. So Dudley Taylor went to the state's attorney, Robert E. Crowe, who was his friend, and asked him to have these men indicted and brought here for trial. These men were indicted and there was nothing this court could do but try the case.

Feared to Use Taylor.

"On this indictment Dudley Taylor is named as the first witness that appeared before the grand jury. He has not been called by the state to testify on the witness stand. The defendants want to know why. If the state wanted to use him to get these men brought here to be tried why didn't they want to bring him here to testify? Is it because they didn't want him to be opened to cross-examination by the defense?

"Who is this man Dudley Taylor who can go to the office of the state's attorney and demand that working men be brought to the state's attorney's office and questioned?

"I will tell you. He is the legislative representative of the employers' association. He goes to Springfield to appear before the legislature to ask them to annul laws against child labor. He is opposed to every sort of protection for the workers by the state. Yet he can go to the office of Robert E. Crowe and ask him to bring workers to his office. He can have workers indicted by the grand jury and force them to defend themselves.

Planned Death of Union.

"After months of striking the Upholsterers' union was weak financially. Dudley Taylor wanted to give that union the death blow. By having the officers of the union indicted he thought that he could discourage these men and the other members of the union and finally break it.

"That is why he had an indictment returned and did not have the officers of the union cited for contempt of court.

"If you gentlemen of the jury return a verdict of not guilty without leaving the jury box then Dudley Taylor will still have done something for the money he was paid by the employers' association. He has kept these men here worrying about their cases. They could not be as efficient as they otherwise be. He did his job.

Crime Against Jurish.

"There has not been a single bit of evidence brought into this court to show that the defendant, Fred Jurish, ever saw the other defendants let alone that he conspired with them. Yet you are asked by the state's attorney to send him to prison.

"The state's attorney has talked about 'business agents.'

"He talked about them as if they were terrible persons who ran the union for themselves instead of being elected to their jobs. He did not talk about the business agent of the employing upholsterers, Mr. Bronson.

"Here is Mr. Bronson taking his place beside the state's attorney, helping and assisting him to prepare and present this case. Mr. Bronson on the stand said that he never worked at the upholstering business, that he knew nothing of the trade. Yet he is elected as the secretary and business representative of the upholstery association.

Bronson's Scab Specialty.

"Now Mr. Bronson must have had a specialty. He must have been able to do some job well. He testified that he was formerly employed by the Citizens Committee for the Enforcement of the Landis Award. His specialty, which he learned from Dudley Taylor, was union breaking.

"Mr. Bronson testified that he went to a job on Mayfield avenue with an employer and talked with the defendant, Fred Jurish. He admitted that he pulled back his coat and flashed a star. The star of a deputy sheriff. He admitted that he told Jurish he was an officer. Here we have a business agent of the employers' association carrying a star and a gun and being made a deputy sheriff so that he might brow beat and intimidate workers who refused to work with scabs."

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedants allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue the party has organized a Saturdaying expedition into the Public Gardens for firewood. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER V.

"HAVE a smoke!" Stalmakhov's loud voice rang out. "We have earned a rest. It's past midday."

One team of three after another stopped working, and the garden was full of laughter and jokes.

Martuinov looked about him . . . the unbroken, translucent curtain of the Spring garden was no more. The trees that had survived stood orphaned and solitary. The sky had only been visible thru chinks among their interlacing branches and now great windows had been opened to it, thru which the sun shone joyfully.

Martuinov looked at the sun, blinked and heard how the cocks were crowing somewhere in the black mass of yards and houses, and how the waves of their calling faintly splashed and echoed somewhere at the other end of the town.

And, looking round the garden, printing on his mind the rows of whitening, fresh-cut stumps and the groups of comrades, Martuinov felt again as in the morning that he was taking part in a tremendous task and struggle, and found that he too was part of the rhythym of a great symphony.

Stalmakhov, with a seven-foot staff in his hand (a sazhin, the Russian measure, is seven feet), which he had made himself from a slim young birch tree, walked from stack to stack and made notes of the work done on a bit of paper.

"Stalmakhov, come over here, I think we have cut a cubic sazhin, but Martuinov says not."

Simkova dragged Stalmakhov by the coat sleeve towards a group of women workers who were piling up a narrowish, long stack.

Simkova was red from working, and from under her kerchief, which had slipped on one side, curly locks of hair fell on her face. It was hard to recognize in her reserved and strict Simkova, the member of the Party Committee, the director of Culteduc (abbreviation for Culture and Education).

"There's not a cubic sazhin," said Stalmakhov, measuring. "Two and a half sazhins . . . well done all the same. Nine cubes set up already, taking all together," said he sitting down on a stump and taking out a little box of Mahorka tobacco and some thin cigarette paper.

"Have a smoke, Simkova," he offered the tobacco to her, "and tell us what fine things you saw in Moscow."

"Again . . ." Simkova laughed. "I have already told all about it five times today. And on Saturday I shall be making a report to the Party meeting."

"Oh, well, but tell us all the same . . . your impressions."

"Impressions? . . ." her fingers rolled the cigarette paper and carefully poured the Mchorka into it; she delicately licked the paper and made a cigarette. Her forehead wrinkled. "A bad impression; I like things better here. I have the impression that the Moscow Communists, and especially the average ones, not leaders, nor yet the mass, are not conscious of, do not feel, this whole huge peasant Russia which is now surging about us and helping the ruin. Of course Lenin understands, and understands perhaps better than we do, and, besides him, a small group understand, but the majority of responsible workers have grown terribly indifferent in attitude. . . . Their attitude towards work, even towards party work, is official, defined by hours. Freed from worry about food and heating, and that means a lot, they not consciously—no, unconsciously—have the feeling that with us, in Russia, things are not so bad.

"Take for example the Moscow newspapers and reviews," she grew animated. "In them everything is so fine and grand. . . . Proletariat and Communist Revolution. . . . And have we got much Communism just now, or proletariat? Fine clubs set up with rich furniture and red flags. Only, these magnificent clubs are not heated, scarcely any one goes into them only small groups do any work.

"No. I like things better here; for we, in the provincial towns, live as it were on the front. The front of the class struggle lies with us here. . . ."

And she looked thoughtfully towards the distant purple fields, visible thru the glades of the garden.

"Do you mean by that that there is no need for Moscow?" Stalmakhov interrupted with curiosity.

"No. I know we need Moscow. It's necessary as a General Staff as a directive center. And a tremendous work is being done there. Moscow is the heart, the chief cistern of the state mechanism, bad as it may be. . . . All the same . . . I'm happier here."

They listened to her attentively. Lisa also did not miss a single word, tho there was much that she did not understand. Why, here, in this peaceful, quiet town, was it as if on the front? A front against the peasants? But surely the Bolsheviks were on the side of the people?

Matusenko it appeared, was entirely wrapped up in attention, and when Lisa accidently knocked over a log, he angrily frowned at her.

He held his hand to his ear. The star on his coat, the buttons, all were glittering. Matusenko did not know what was the good of Saturdaying, or why these clever educated people, like Simkova and Martuinov, had to do rough work, or why he, Matusenko, had to do it, but none the less he worked honestly all the time and had arrived punctually at nine o'clock, just as, formerly, he had never been late in the days when he used to go to church service, stand where his Chief could see him, and cross himself, elegantly crooking fingers, tho he had not liked kneeling, because it was bad for his trousers.

"Look, there's Klimin coming, and Ziman too," said Stalmakhov.

Klimin approached them, looking for some one with his eyes, and saw Stalmakhov and the others. "Well, district organizer, how are things with you?" he called from some way off, and came nearer and nearer himself. . . . Stalmakhov presented arms with his measuring rod: "Nine cubes we've stocked, your honor." (He was parodying the form of address of a solider to an officer under the Old Regime.) "And what about the other districts?" Klimin smiled and, as always, when he smiled, his face grew several years younger.

"The Red Army men in the Monastery Garden stacked thirty-four cubes today. Good lads! I'm afraid I forgot to praise them but the captive bourgeoisie is working with them too," he laughed. "Yes, and the Saturdaying will help a lot. If things go on like this, in three days we shall be sending off the first lots. . . ."

As he ended the sentence his voice shook. He was happy, and could hardly believe in the nearness of victory.

Ziman stood on a stump, wiped his glasses, and, in his speaky voice, announced to some of the comrades that the economic situation of the district was going to be splendid. . . .

"Not at once; in twenty years, of course," he added. "For we have a seam of peat. And now when I ask for a few score cubes of wood, and that without knowing whether the wood will burn or not, the wood is so damp. . . . Yes, Klimin, damp . . . at that very moment before my eyes glisten the thought that here, under the ground, is dozing such a quantity of calorific energy. . . . Only five versts from the town. . . . Survey already made. . . . If we get a good harvest this year, we shall begin the peat cutting. Excavators we have; I got hold of them at Nizhni-Elansk. We will mend them. . . ." He turned with a mysterious, cunning look, in the direction of Lisa Gratcheva, tho his eyes, blind without their glasses, did not see her, but only the white patch of her face and the blue of her dress.

Simkova touched Klimin's sleeve.

"Come and see me today," she said, and added hurriedly, "after work of course, in the evening." He shook her hand.

The Saturdaying finished. Again they formed in ranks, again marched thru the streets and sang. Lisa Gratcheva's boots were wet thru, but all the same she marched in the ranks and sang with them, "Boldly, Comrades, keeping time." . . . Simkova was walking beside her. Lisa had known Simkova before, as the director of the Cultedec, as the "Chief"; on two occasions she had gone to her in the office, on business, timorously, and, under the big portrait of Trotsky, at the wide writing table Simkova had seemed to her very unapproachable and severe.

And now Lisa saw beside her a young girl with flaxen curly hair escaping from under her kerchief, and fresh, rosy cheeks. Simkova liked Lisa too, and knew her for one who worked whole-heartedly. Besides Lisa was the only one of the non-party employes of the Politdep who had come to the Saturdaying.

They took each other's hands. Lisa talked of the school, her pupils and her troubles. . . .

Then Lisa went thru the square to the Senator's house; from a long way off one could see the big two-storied building, with the soviet sign board amid the grey mass of little houses. From far away she saw some one come out of the gate in a Red Army helmet with a big Red Army star, and instantly recognized Repin.

She had become acquainted with him on the first day of his appearance at Senator's house. Senator was abusing the Soviet government in Lisa's presence, and Lisa was standing red and troubled, ready to weep and not knowing what to reply—when suddenly the door opened and Repin appeared together with the red-haired man.

Senator became solicitous:

"Your room, Comrade Repin, is ready," he said, obligingly; "would you care to go to it at once?"

But Repin decided to join in the conversation, the last words of which he had heard.

"The Soviet government wishes well to all the people," shouted Senator. "But am I, if you please, not one of the people? Is he not one of the people?" And Senator pointed with his finger at the red-haired man, who roared in approval.

"And good have they done to us? Fleeced us, that's all. . . ."

And Repin, in reply, had talked for a long time of how among the Communists were many shirkers, of how the Communists often made mistakes, but that after all they were working for an ideal. . . ." And he looked at Lisa, as if to say with his eyes, "You see, you and I am are of the same opinion!"

In general he was so handsome and kindly, and now he warmly shook Lisa by the hand, and his thick strong voice was touched with caressing intonations.

"Good day, Comrade Gratcheva. . . . I was going to ask you, how do I get to the Town Garden? . . ."

"The Town Garden? I have just come from it. There was a Saturdaying there . . . for getting wood. We cut down almost the whole garden."

"No. But non-party people can go to the Saturdayings. And I think one ought to help the Communists. Isn't it so?"

Of course. Of course. I would have gone too, if I had known of the Saturdaying before. Well, and did you do much?"

"Yes. A lot. I forget how many cubes, but we cut down nearly all the garden. . . . Even the most responsible workers were working there, and I worked together with Comrade Martuinov. And Klimin was there, the President of the Cheka."

She told Repin exactly how to get to the Town Garden.

Innocent Negroes Beaten To Pulp In Third Degree; Torturers Flee When Grand Jury Takes Action

The torturing resulted from the frantic efforts of police to make innocent men confess to the crime of January 19 when the cashier of the Irving Pitt Manufacturing company was high-jacked, the police guard disarmed and $13,000 taken by three men supposed to have been Negroes.

January 23 the police grabbed three convenient Negroes, named Ramsay, Jones, and Johnson, and began to "sweat" them. After ten hours they claimed they had obtained detailed (tho contradictory) confessions from all three.

Beaten to a Pulp.

John L. Kirkpatrick, their attorney, that evening swore out habeas corpus writs and after some delay the three were surrendered. They were in terrible shape. All three had been pulped and kicked, their ears torn, their bodies marked from shoulders to knees by the rubber hose. They were examined by the doctor, who at once ordered Ramsay to the hospital. Ramsay's scalp had been cut to shreds, his hands had been burned, and more than two-fifths of the skin beaten off his body. He contracted pneumonia next day and is still in a critical condition.

The obscene levity of the local prostitute press is disgusting.

The Kansas City Star discussed the best way to scorch a prisoner—with hot iron, or a candle flame.

However, the judge called the situation to the attention of the grand jury.

One police commissioner resigned, the other fled to Porto Rico, and when the grand jury sought Newman, the city torturer, the detective force could not "find" him. Today he resigned—by mail.

Real Criminal Confesses.

The cruel clowns of police were speedily shown up. The East Chicago, Ind., police wired to Kansas City that they had arrested two Negroes in a shooting scrape who had a revolver with "K. C. Police Dept." on it.

These men, Grant and Bass, had volunteered the story of the Irvin Pitt hold-up, of which their captors had no knowledge. On being brought to Kansas City they told their whole story and denied that Jones, Johnson or Ramsay (the tortured trio) had had any share in the crime. The gun was the one taken on Jan. 19.

The guard who two weeks before had positively identified Jones and Ramsay now coolly said: "I was mistaken. I am now just as positive it was Grant and Bass."

Our asinine police chief, Wooley, said in an interview: "An innocent man, if he were any sort of a sport, would be willing to suffer that punishment of the guilty might be rendered easy."

Y. W. L. Soccer Team Opens Spring Season with 3-0 Victory

On a field covered with snow and ice, the Chicago Young Workers League soccer team scored a victory in its first game of the spring series Sunday, after a layoff of over two months.

Playing against the Victoria Seconds and starting with only seven men, things looked bad when the whistle blew for play. However, substitutes were rushed into the fray and the Red sweaters were soon in evidence. Pressing continuously it was apparent that the Young Workers would seize the lead and this opportunity was afforded when the Victoria's were penalized for an infringment of the rules. From the resultant penalty kick Horchick scored the first goal for the Young Workers League. Fast end to end play followed with half time arriving without any further scoring.

After changing ends the Young Workers had things pretty much their own way and two more goals were scored by Horchick and Henry.

It would be hard to single out any individual stars because all were out doing their best to put the first game, after the winter layoff, into the win column, and as one player aptly put it. "We are playing on ice, so we will put the game on ice."

Things look good for a successful season for the Young Workers League and any worker interested in soccer as a spectator or player will do well to get in touch with the Young Workers League at 1009 N. State St.

NOVA SCOTIA'S 2-SHIFT SYSTEM HIT BY PROBERS

Steel Lords' Policy Is Attacked

By RICHARD A. SCHAEFTER
(Special to The Daily Worker)

OTTAWA, Canada, Feb. 25.—Even the "good citizens" in Canada were shocked when during last year's miners' and steel workers' strike the facts came out about working conditions still in vogue in the pits and plants of the British Empire Steel Corporation. A royal commission was formed under the presidency of Dr. J. W. Robertson, to investigate the "industrial unrest" in Cape Breton and to propose such changes as would be sufficient "to establish a mutual understanding between employes and employers." The report of the commission is just published and is a condemnation of the British Empire Steel's treatment of the workers.

Condemns 2-Shift System.

Last year's strike action of the steel workers was mainly directed against the slow death system which under the heading of "13 light, 11 night," became famous all over the world since Bethlehem Steel invented the modern kind of medieval dungeon.

The commission in its report demands:

1. Elimination of the 24-hour change-over period and the abolition of the seven-day week.
2. Adoption of the three-shift plan (eight hours per shift) in the departments of continuous process and a maximum of a ten-hour day for other workmen.

The usual custom of Besco as well as of other corporations big and small to keep the wages as low as possible, even in fat years, and to attempt new cuts in periods of trade depression, thus trying to keep up the profits for the shareholders by piling the burden of lean times on the weaker shoulders of the workers, was criticized in the report. It recommended that a surplus fund should be established to tide the workers over when changes in wage rates are unavoidable and when no prospect of further employment exists. For the enforcement of this point a certain civil authority should be nominated and empowered to investigate the business conditions.

Too Much Militia.

There was no disturbance of "law and order" in the Cape Breton strike last year until provincial police and troops were shipped to the strike region. And the only cases of "the rule of the mob" were created by the provocations of those governmental thugs. Evidently the commission held the opinion that in the shipping of militia the provincial government overdrew its account of civil power. A change of the Canadian militia act is suggested to such an extent that henceforth only a judge and the attorney-general of a province jointly should be allowed to call out the militia and that one week thereafter an inquiry may be made into the circumstances which caused the use of troops.

Altogether the report, tho far from suggesting a real solution of the problems in question, which, of course, cannot be settled by way of reports and negotiations and talk, it is at least an attempt to approach the Cape Breton labor situation from another point of view than that of Besco and its paid henchmen.

Breaks from Czar's Prisons Featured Career of Rykov

MOSCOW, Feb. 25.—The new President of the Council of People's Commissars, Rykov, was born in 1381 at Saratov, of a peasant family. He entered the University of Kazan in 1898. In 1899 he became a member of the Russian Social Democratic Party, Kazan section. In 1901 he was arrested, and was kept in prison for nine months, then deported to Saratov, and there he was expelled from the university for his revolutionary activity in Saratov.

With the split of the Social Democratic Party of Russia in 1905, Rykov joined the Bolshevist faction and was elected to the Central Executive Committee of the Bolshevik Party at its third convention. He was re-elected in 1906 at the Congress of the Party held in Stockholm.

In 1907 he was arrested again and deported to Samara for two years; in 1919 he was arrested and deported to Archangel for three years. He succeeded in escaping and fleeing from Russia, but he soon returned to Russia, and took part in the Conference of the Party, and was again arrested and exiled to the Narim region (Siberia) for four years.

The February Revolution freed him. Altogether he was in prison for seven years and a half. In 1917, elected to the Bolshevik Central Committee he became president of the Moscow Soviet. After the November revolution he was elected Commissary of the People for the Interior, then member of Food Collegium.

From 1918 on save for a few interruptions he was president of the Council of National Economy. Starting with 1920, he was continually member of the Central Committee of the Russian Communist Party, and of the presidium of executives of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, vice-president of the Council of Work and Defense and vice-president of the Council of People's Commissars.

More Charters May Be Revoked in Nova Scotia

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SYDNEY, N. S., Feb. 25.—John L. Lewis threatens to revoke a few local charters if the members of these locals should not resume work immediately. The trouble stated when Silby Barrett, Lewis's appointee, came back from Montreal, where he had been negotiating with the executives of the British Empire Steel Corporation, with a new wage agreement in his pocket. But the slight wage increase provided for in the new contract is actually re-paid by the miners in the higher price on coal for their own use. Besides that, the whole district feels tricked by Barrett. He gave out no information while the negotiations went on and the new wage scale is far below the 1921 rates. It took Barrett considerable time to persuade the ranks to go back to work, but the locals of Stellarton, Springhill and Thorburn still remained out altho Barrett coaxed and threatened them until he was blue in the face. It is, however, an interesting fact that just these locals were formerly considered to be the very stronghold of Lewis' support on the Nova Scotian mainland.

All three locals, when left out in the cold by the district executive, applied for assistance to Premier MacDonald, the Miners' Federation and other labor organizations in Great Britain. The Stellarton local, however, resumed work a few days ago.

It may be doubtful how long the miners can keep up their heroic fight against the reactionary apparatus which runs the destiny of the United Mine Workers. But their example shows very plainly the Nova Scotia rank and file cannot be tricked out of their stand for a real fighting miners' organization.

Arbeiter Ring Gives Large Opportunity to Workers Party

The members of the Workers Party who are active in the Arbeiter Ring (Workmen's Circle) which has a membership of about 81,000, find in that organization an immense field of activity. The Workmen's Circle, it is true, is not an organization thru which the economic or political struggle can be fought out, it is simply a mutual aid organization, but on the other hand it offers immense possibilities for conducting extensive propaganda and work of enlightenment on both economic and political fields.

It is not true, as many comrades think, that the Workmen's Circle is composed mainly of lower middle class elements. Only the leadership is lower middle class, and that is so much the more reason why Workers Party members can do good work in counteracting the lower middle class influence which is exercised from the top upon a membership consisting mainly of real workers.

Why Daugherty Sticks

Time brings many changes and we find now staid and conservative senators making exactly the same charges against Attorney-General Daugherty that the Communists and other working class elements made many months ago.

Senator Robinson on the floor of the senate, has accused Daugherty of sticking in office in order to use the machinery of the department of justice, under the efficient management of William J. Burns, for protecting the oil crooks and hampering and terrorizing those senators who are demanding a show-down. No intelligent person reading the news stories of Daugherty's antics can come to any other conclusion than that reached by the Arkansas senator.

There is more than oil graft involved in the attitude of the attorney-general. The real danger to him and his backers is in the resolution calling for an investigation of private detective agencies, introduced by Senator Wheeler of Montana.

With Daugherty out of office a change would doubtless be made in the executive of the bureau of investigation, the post now held by William J. Burns, and we know just enough about this labor-baiter to feel reasonably certain that once the records of the bureau of investigation and of the department of justice meet the light of day a sensation will result that will drive the Teapot Dome scandal off the front page of every newspaper in America.

The department of justice has been at the disposal of every labor-hating corporation before and since Daugherty took office.

William J. Burns operates the largest private detective agency in the United States; it is today an auxiliary of the department of justice and so intricately interlocked with this wing of the government that it is impossible to tell where the private agency ends and the government department begins.

It is the most gigantic blackmail system ever organized and its connection with the department of justice gives it a semi-official character. Its machinations prevented the impeachment proceedings brought against Daugherty in the house ever being seriously considered. It is unquestionable that the same methods will be used to squash the threatened investigation if Daugherty remains in office.

It is not too much to say that Daugherty is today holding the threat of public exposure and political ruin over the head of more than one government official and that the support of him by the president, certain senators and the national chairman of the republican party is a support obtained by fear.

In all the hidden cesspools of Washington society and political life the ferret-like nose of William J. Burns has been sniffing ever since he was appointed. The darker incidents in the lives of all the Sunday supplement heroes are known to the attorney-general.

No one who knows him will believe that he will hesitate to use the knowledge that is his unless immunity is promised.

The Wheeler resolution, if complied with, will wreck more political careers and give the American workers more insight into the inner workings of the government than all the oil scandals.

It is little wonder, that with this sword of Damocles hanging over his head the moment he leaves office the attorney-general wants to stick it out.

He is afraid to quit and a lot of other people are afraid to have him quit.

Two Tribune Mishaps

The Mexican government has given the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune his walking papers for deliberately lying about Mexican affairs. A short time ago the correspondent of the Tribune was denied admission to Russia for the same kind of slander.

There is little doubt that the "World's Greatest Newspaper" will consider these two rebukes as merely further proof that the Russian and Mexican workers and peasants are entirely unable to appreciate the blessings of American newspaper enterprise and American democracy that the Tribune wishes to confer upon them.

Saturday evening the Tribune carried a story from its correspondent under a Berlin date-line announcing that a gigantic white slave ring had been uncovered in Europe of which Zinoviev's mistress was the head.

The Tribune's correspondent in El Paso will in due course, discover that President Obregon is the Mexican representative of this same concern.

When it comes to news of events that never happened, the Tribune is certainly the world's greatest newspaper.

Vice-President Duncan of the American Federation of Labor, says that McAdoo is a "dry."

"No wine but plenty of oil" seems to be the McAdoo recipe.

Bread and Profits

Many have often asked why it is that the right to breathe nature's free air has not yet been turned into a commodity and monopolized by some capitalist clique to sell at exorbitant prices.

A condition approaching such an outright levying of capitalist tribute on the workers for the right to breathe even impure air already exists in the deplorable housing situation prevailing in the industrial centers. Here the landlord class charges outrageous rentals for so many and so few cubic feet of air. However, we suppose that not until someone invents a machine which will be too costly for the average worker or farmer to purchase, will the capitalist class be able to organize gigantic bread trusts and turn the right to breathe air into a commodity exchanged on the market and bringing fabulous profits into the coffers of the owning class.

At any rate, let no one fool himself into the erroneous notion that it is the fundamental unselfishness and humanitarianism of the capitalist class that has saved the masses from the clutches of a powerful air monopoly. Bread is the staff of life. Yet the profits of bread are being piled up by our employing class thru its ownership and control of the bread-making industry. The gigantic profits in bread garnered by the capitalists give the lie to all pleas of idealism that the kept apologists might make for the master class.

The masses of this country are paying more than a million dollars too much for bread daily, as a "result of the outrageous profiteering"—that is because the capitalists are taking profits above the so-called normal and fair rate. At the same time the wheat farmers are down and out in the slough of a most distressing economic crisis. Since 1917 the price of wheat has fallen 55 per cent, or to about 90 cents a bushel, while the price of bread has declined only about 5 per cent. In short, the price received by the farmer for his wheat has been reduced more than ten times as much as the price paid by the city workers in purchasing their bread from the capitalists owning this industry. It is only the system permitting the capitalists to hit the city and country masses simultaneously that has enabled one of the big baking companies to achieve a condition whereby $1 invested in its common stock in 1916 represents today a market price of $309.

These bread profits are only the congealed misery and suffering of the bankrupt farmers and the exploited workers. These profits in bread teach the workers and farmers a great lesson. These profits are the stern schoolmaster telling the industrial and rural working masses that they must get together against their common enemy—the capitalist class—if they are to save themselves from abject social degradation.

Our Urgent Duty

Flushed with their victory in the imperialist war and enraged to the point of desperation by the rising tide of Communism menacing their chimeric schemes of oppression and plunder, our capitalist exploiters enacted a raft of syndicalist and anarchy laws in 1919 to stifle even the faintest voice of working class protest. In preparation for the frontal country-wide attack on the workers, thru the open shop drive of 1920-21, the bosses first struck at the weakest section of the proletarian lines. Thus, hundreds of foreign-born workers were thrown into jail. In this period the country was afflicted with a mania of laws suppressing anti-capitalist opinion and organization. Today, there are thirty-four states and four territories or dependencies with criminal syndicalist laws, sedition laws, or anti-anarchy statutes. Twenty-nine states have enacted laws making it a crime to exhibit the red flag in public. Twenty of these states and territories have, under these laws, resorted to criminal persecutions for expression of opinion or for membership in a working class organization.

At this moment there are 114 workers serving from one to twenty years in the prisons of seven states. California, the political satrapy of the fake progressive Hiram Johnson, tops the shameful list with 97 prisoners. Washington, Idaho, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Kansas and Illinois trail. Thirty-five workers are now awaiting trial in California, thirty-two in Michigan, fourteen in Idaho, and twelve in Pennsylvania, a state governed by another fraudulent liberal, Gifford Pinchot. The Communists and the Industrial Workers of the World have been the worst sufferers from these persecutions.

This is an outrageous state of affairs. Every worker knows that these laws have been used by the bosses and their government to disable the fearless fighters and the most militant organizations of the working class. As long as a single one of these criminal anarchy and syndicalist laws remains on the statute books of any state, the freedom of opinion, speech, press, assembly, and the right to organize of the workers and dispossessed farmers in the entire country are in danger. These laws are a dagger at the very heart of the whole labor movement.

Let none hesitate. It is the urgent duty of all those who work in the factory or on the farm, regardless of political opinion, to join in one mighty united effort to wipe all these vicious laws against the working masses off the statute books.

The official wing of the British Labor party and the Tories unite on a vote for seven new battleships. The groans heard are from Oscar Garrison Villard, editor of The Nation, who hailed MacDonald as the first pacifist premier.

McAdoo says his million dollar oil fee was no secret. It is to be remarked, however, that it was not used in any of his campaign publicity.

Lunacharsky-World's Greatest Educator

By Louise Bryant, in "Mirrors of Moscow," Publisher, Thomas Seltzer.

"Oh, happy earth! Out of the blood of generations
Life yet will blossom, innocent and wise,
And thou, my planet, shall be cleansed of lamentations,
A jade-green star in the moon-
silvered skies."

THUS wrote the Soviet Minister of Education, Anatol Lunacharsky, in those remote days when a revolution was only a vague goal and when he could not believe that in his own lifetime a day would come when he would be torn from his quiet study and forced to put his dreams into practice, or as near into practice as dreams ever reach.

Reality is revolting and disappointing to any artist, but Lunacharsky possesses enough recuperative powers to overcome his artistic sensitiveness. If he had not had enough also of that saving grace of fanaticism which marks all leaders, he would have lacked the enthusiasm which has carried him thru every battle for culture which he has had to wage since the dramatic crash of Czardom. Only once did he actually lose heart and Lenin overcame that attack of panic by showering responsibility upon him. Given responsibility he showed more courage than men of coarser grain.

Lunacharsky's battles in the five years he has been in office have not been concerned with bullets. "Illiteracy," he told me once, "is the great curse of Russia; we must fight illiteracy like the plague. This delicate poet, who in appearance is more like a scholarly Frenchman than a Russian, who has the manners and elegance of another age, has left off composing sonnets to fight ignorance, superstition, drunkenness, prejudice, disease, dirt. . . . And he has been more bitterly attacked than any other official of the new Russian government.

With practically nothing at his disposal he had to plan and execute a vast educational campaign. That is why his achievements are so extraordinary. When Feodore Chaliapin was here last winter, winning the hearts of America by his sweet and wonderful voice, he and I talked a good deal about Lunacharsky and the difficulties which confronted him. "Remember, said Chaliapin, "if you have no pens and no paper and no ink, you cannot write; if you have no wood you cannot make a fire—in Russia all these things were literally true. Under such circumstances, no matter how willing the government might be, art and education must suffer with the rest."

Eliminated Illiteracy.

I will not go into figures here, but one can get an idea of what Lunacharsky has done. He has practically eliminated adult illiteracy from the cities, he has established thousands of schools. Only a very few of them, to be sure, are up to the required mark, but every school opened is an achievement. And there is not a single part of Russia, however, remote or however dark, where a school has not been started.

But establishing and maintaining schools and universities was only a part of the work allotted to Lunacharsky. He had to build new theaters, keep up the standard of the old and show himself worthy of that great responsibility Lenin bestowed upon him when he made him guardian of all the art treasures of Russia.

If Nikolai Lenin had been a mediocrity, he would never have appointed Lunacharsky guardian of the art of Russia, and Russian art would now be scattered to the four winds, swallowed up in private collections or enriching the pockets of speculators. A mediocrity will not admit his limitations even if he is aware of them, but Lenin somehow understands that a man cannot spend his life studying political economy and carrying on revolutionary propaganda, and at the same time be an art connoisseur. What is more remarkable is that he allowed Lunacharsky to tell him so.

When the Red and White forces were struggling for the possession of the Kremlin in 1917, a wire to Petrograd announced that the beautiful and fantastic church of Vassili Blazhinie on the Red Square had been razed to the ground. Lunacharsky, poet, scholar, playwright and revolutionist, as well as friend and follower of Lenin, wrote an open letter to the press in which he gave vent to his horror. He stated: "What is taking place in Moscow is a horrible and irreparable misfortune!" He wrote another letter to Lenin, renouncing all connection with the revolution. And he took to his bed, ill with shock and disappointment.

Lenin did not accept his resignation. Lenin never accepts resignations from men who are valuable to the state. Instead, he went to call on Lunacharsky, and an amazing conversation took place which was reported to me by a friend of both men.

Preserves Art Works.

Lenin, with his usual directness, said to Lunacharsky, "Do not be overcome by this calamity. If this church is destroyed, let us biuld a bigger and a better one."

Lunacharsky, in tears of anguish, explained to Lenin that such a thing was not possible; such a lovely, imaginative piece of architecture might never again be created. Lenin listened and went thoughtfully away. A few days later Lunacharsky was given charge of the entire art of Russia.

Up to that time, the valuable collections, as well as the buildings, had been in the hands of a revolutionary committee which also might very well have been of the opinion that art could be replaced by "bigger and better" things.

Lunacharsky did not take his task lightly. He issued another public declaration asking for the solemn co-operation of all loyal Russians. "Upon me rests the responsibility of protecting the entire artistic wealth of the people," he said, "and I cannot fulfill my duty without your help."

It will not be known for a long time against what strong and subtle forces he had to battle to guard that trust. There was movement after movement to sell such treasures as the Rembrandt Collection in the Hermitage at Petrograd or the historic paintings and tapestries in Moscow. But Lunacharsky, ever on the alert, defeated every one of these attempts. He often fought bitterly battles in his own party. Every possible sort of intrigue was manufactured against him. I remember times when he had to appear in public and defend himself against atrocious slander. Yet up to the present day he has saved absolutely everything except the pearls and diamonds of the royal family which, after all, were never of any particular artistic value. He saved even the Czarist statues from the mobs that would have destroyed them, and stored them away in buildings for a calmer moment. He never lost his artistic perspective, art was always art and he "could look with a just regard upon the shattered corpse of a shattered king" provided that the monument was executed by a talented artist.

Fights False Accusations.

Nikolai Lenin has the genius to read men well; he recognized instantly that a man who could be so affected by the rumored loss of a single historic building that he could scarcely bear to face life, would be the very man to defend passionately the art of the nation. And Lenin has continued to defend Lunacharsky against every charge brought by his enemies. These charges have often been serious because they were brought by revolutionists who claimed that Lunacharsky was partial to the bourgeoisie in his efforts to get extra rates for scientists and artists; that he was not a real Communist because he put art before political propaganda. There was a terrible period when the loyalty of all men was questioned whose allegiance was not wholly given to the defense from military attack at whatever cost to art or personal life. It was thru that period that Lunacharsky had to guide Russian culture.

"Think what vitality the theater had to possess," said Chaliapin, "to maintain itself thru the revolution." "Think what hunger the Russian masses had for learning," said Madame Lenin, "that they could grasp even this hard moment to learn to read and study." Both these assertions are true, but in spite of that hunger and that vitality both forces might have gone down for some years, had it not been for the splendid leadership of Lunacharsky.

Even those ardent revolutionists who could see no further than the immediate moment are beginning to realize that the very fact that the Soviets have kept intact their national art gives them a prestige which money could never buy; it is an indisputable evidence of their faith in civilization. And it is Lunacharsky who has managed to save for them this evidence of faith when hotheads would have cast it aside.

It always seems a pity that we are aware now of only the prominent political figures in Russia. If we can think back on the French guillotine days and the burning of libraries, the mad destruction of art, the sacking of palaces by angry mobs, we can understand that if there had been men in France in those days who could have held those mobs in check and made them want to read the books they were burning, made them turn the palaces into museums, Napoleon might never have worn a crown. In Russia the influence of the men who hold the political reins would be so much slighter and so much less significant if they were not backed up by men like Lunacharsky.

Creates Revolutionary Museum.

He had the art galleries heated in the most bitter of the fuel famine days and the immense crowds going in partly to keep warm strolled all day under historical canvases and came to know all the great pictures of Russia. The Winter Palace became a Revolutionary Museum, one of the most unique museums in the whole world, the Palace of Nicholas II at Tsarkoe Selo became a Children's Home, as did every great estate in the provinces threatened with destruction by quarreling peasants.

It is interesting to note that the wives of three prominent revolutionists rendered Lunarchsky valuable aid in his difficult work, the wife of Trotsky, the wife of Gorky, and the wife of Leo Kaminev.

Madame Trotsky has under her direction all private art collections and all the small palaces; she hands a monthly inventory of these places over to Lunacharsky. In the last three years she has been very gradually and systematically removing the most valuable objects in the collections to the museums.

Madame Kaminev, Trotsky's sister, is the head of Prolocult, a movement, which aims at a new culture, especially in the theatre, which is free from Greek or other influences. It is Madame Kaminev's theory that such a culture, springing from the workers and peasants and unspoiled by the imperfections and influences of former civilizations, will do much to stimulate and renew art in general, which she believes has become decadent.

Marie Andreeva (Madame Gorky), who is herself an actress of note and was at one time a star in the famous Art Theatre in Moscow, had charge of Narodny Dom, a people's theatre, which was started under the Tsar and is continued under the Soviets. Marie Andreeva recently made a tour of Europe to study the theatres.

Theatres Maintained.

But it is Stanislavsky, the director of the Moscow Art Theatre, who has rendered Lunacharsky the greatest assistance. Stanislavsky is conceded to be the greatest stage director in the world. Under his guidance, all the great Russian playwrights for the last generation have blossomed. It was Stanislav's firm conviction that the Russian people must maintain the theatres, hundreds of theatres, during the revolution, in order that they might not find a life of hunger and cold too monotonous for a desire to live. With his brave little company he has managed to keep his theatre in the capital at the very highest pitch. He established and kept under his direction three other theatres in Moscow and he has put on a number of new operas. Absolutely nothing seems to discourage him. The loss of his personal fortune, which had been very great, and even the loss of his beloved workshop which was turned into a Chauffeurs' Club did not destroy his calm. "It is never Lenin or Lunacharsky, big men, who are to blame for these mistakes of the Soviet Government," he told me. "It is always the little, foolish frantic men. When they took my workshop, I wrote to Lenin. He did everything he could and when he was outvoted by Kaminev and the Moscow Soviet, he managed to get me another place, really just as good but lacking the old atmosphere."

Hermitage Collection Preserved.

When the Germans were knocking at the gates of Petrograd in 1917 the historic tapestries in the Winter Palace and the entire Hermitage collection were sent by dead of night to Moscow and stored in the Kremlin. One day in the winter of 1921 I called at Lunacharsky's office. He was in a fine state of happiness. "I have great news for you," he exclaimed. "Today we sent the Hermitage collection back to Petrograd—intact! I wonder if you can realize what that means? I wonder if the world will know how nearly those precious things came to destruction? How wonderful it is, after all, that in another month one can go to Petrograd and behold everything arranged as it has been for centuries.

"Yes, there have been times when I did not think it possible to save the collection, not because there were reckless revolutionists who always brought up movements to sell one part or another, but by a much worse destruction. Can you imagine my anxiety when fighting, actual fighting, was going on in palaces where the old porcelains were stored? We had put the Rembrandts and other canvases in the Kremlin cellars, and I was in constant terror that rats would gnaw them. Sometimes I was afraid to go down and look. But I feel that the worst days of such struggles are over, for us. I am happy that Russia has demonstrated to the world that Russians are not barbarians. We have saved our art in spite of hunger and disease and death."

A Devout Revolutionist.

Lunacharsky has a rare grace of spirit and while he is himself a modernist and wants to bring art as close to the people as bread, he never allowed his own feelings to intrude on the feelings of his fellow artists. Himself a writer of note, he has sacrificed his own writing to save art and the creators of art. A devout revolutionist, he can allow the intricate designs of the Tsardom, the great black eagles, insolent against the sky over the turrets of the Kremlin, to remain, because they are part of the original designs of the old palaces. He can bring himself to regild the church roofs from his scanty funds altho he is not at all religious, and he could faithfully gather old ikons and make of them a marvelous little collection in one of the new museums. Only such a man could have held together the temperamental army composed of the artists of Russia. Such men as Lunacharsky give the revolution the balance which prevents its collapse.

Periods of transition are always bitter and more than bitter for delicate creative souls. Once I mentioned Lunarcharsky's tact in handling artists to Helena Soochachova, the young and beautiful star of the Moscow Art Theatre. She smiled and thus characterized him: "Ah, Lunacharsky," she said, "he is a great gentleman, he is, no doubt, the great gentleman of the revolution. That is the secret of his success and the reason his political enemies cannot defeat him and we artists cannot desert him—because he struggles so magnificently and is a man sans peur et sans reproche."

Ladies' Garment Workers Announce Big Walk Out

It is planned to have the general strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union called this morning. The strike, when called, will affect 10,000 workers, most of them girls and women, working in the dress and waist shops of Chicago.

Ever since it was decided to call a strike unless the bosses conceded the demands of the union the workers have been impatiently awaiting the word that would mean that they would walk out of the shops.

The strike will also involve 3,000 cloak makers, all of whom are men. They will go on strike in order to protect the women strikers against the violence of the bosses' hired thugs. They have already been organized into committees who will protect the pickets and see to it that no violence occurs. They will remain on strike only long enough to assure themselves and the women workers that no trouble will be sought by the bosses.

All arrangements have been made to take care of the strikers. Halls have been rented in the various districts in which the waist and dress shops are located.

In the downtown district six halls have been rented at 180 W. Washington St. and three halls at 20 W. Randolph St.

Workers in the Northwest section of the city will meet at Schoenhofen's Hall, Milwaukee Ave. and Division St. Workers on the West Side will meet at the West Side Auditorium at Racine Ave. and Taylor St.

Leaflets giving the details of the strike arrangements have been printed and will be put in the hands of the shop chairmen of the various shops to give out when the strike is called. All workers will be instructed to go at once to the nearest hall and register.

The strike will be called after more than a month's unsuccessful negotiations between some of the bosses and the union. Most of the bosses have refused to take any part in the negotiations. The shops that have union help want to continue the agreement that is now in force for another year but the union demands a new agreement.

The union is demanding the five-day 40-hour work week on the basis of 44 hours. They also demand unemployment insurance.

The Chicago garment workers will have the backing of the International union in their strike. The strike will be in charge of a strike committee recently elected to carry on negotiations with the bosses and call a strike if the negotiations fail.

The strike when it is called will be the biggest thing that has happened to the union here since the general strike in the industry in 1917. The 1917 strike was called because the conditions in the industry had become intolerable for the workers. Union officials say the same conditions exist today.

The union has not the industry organized thoroly, they admit but they are confident that they will be able to get all the workers in the trade to respond to the strike call.

One of the main concerns of the union will be to protect the work-

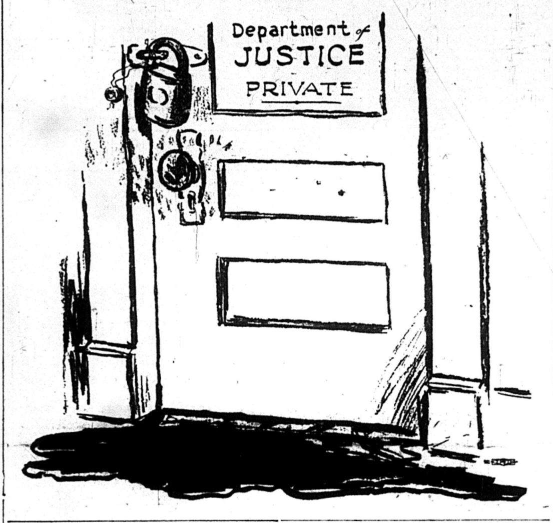
DAUGHERTY ON THE JOB



CONGRESS MAY REDUCE J. D.'S GIFT BOODLE

Tax Escaping Millions Are Due for Cut

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—A gift tax to end evasions of the inheritance tax probably will be written into the new revenue bill today by the Democratic-Progressive coalition in the House.

Republican leader Longworth said that it is well known that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., now holds $600,000,000 in Standard Oil and other securities, presumably gifts from his father. This is the situation the coalition wants to reach by the new tax.

At the request of Representative Garner, Texas, ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee, Chairman Green will revise his gift tax amendment, providing the same rates as the inheritance tax adopted yesterday.

Green's amendment provides a one per cent levy on gifts between $10,000 and $14,000 graduated to 10 per cent on amounts over $46,000. Garner proposes to start the tax at one per cent on $10,000, increasing to 40 per cent on $10,000,000.

If the gift tax can be disposed of today, the excise taxes will be taken up. A bitter fight impends over the amendment of Representative Clancy, Michigan, to cut in half the five per cent levy on auto trucks and accessories.

Women Deans—The School Spies Who Investigate Radicals—Are Assembled At N. E. A. Convention

Hundreds of well-dressed women, master spies by occupation, are gathered in the ballroom of the Blackstone hotel this week, to discuss their problems. They constitute the division of deans of women in the National Education Assn., whose department of superintendence is holding its annual meet in Chicago.

"The National Education Association," says Upton Sinclair, "is a political machine, maintained by big business to do a certain job in the interest of big business."

Spy Out Radicalism.

A very special part of this certain job is performed by the deans of women in the schools. (The art of deaning is spreading to factories employing women workers.) They keep watch over the girls. They are on the lookout for all sorts of things that may make the college unpopular with the public.

A girl with radical opinions may make herself too notorious thereby. She gets a talk on good form from the dean. Perhaps that does not squelch the young agitator. Then the dean may be able to fasten some sex scandal or rumor of scandal upon her and force her into silence or out of school. Two girl students, one at Wisconsin, were recently expelled for marrying while still in school. "Not because they married, but because they eloped, which we do not approve of," one dean explains.

Deans Use Stoolpigeons.

How the deans get hold of their information was a secret jealously guarded at the convention. At last a former dean at Northwestern University broke the ice by admitting that she used all information brought to her by volunteer spies among the students. It was freely admitted that the dean of men at Pennsylvania

Wild Flurry in Senate as Teapot Dome Probers in Secret Session Peruse 100 Wires Sent Fall and McLean in Florida

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—A hundred telegrams sent to former Secretary of the Interior Fall and Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, during their December stay in Palm Beach, Fla., were presented to the Senate Teapot Dome Committee today.

H. T. Taff, general superintendent, Western Union Telegraph Company of Washington, gave the committee a bundle of records from files in his office and the committee immediately went into secret session.

The telegrams were called for in the committees efforts to learn the source of suspected "leaks" to persons involved in the oil scandal.

Taff protested against submitting the telegrams on the ground that they were confidential communications and that his company had no right to make them public without consent of the persons who sent them. The committee, however, decided unanimously to go into all records and Taff agreed under protest.

In executive session the committee then began perusal of the messages to determine if any government officials had advised Fall or McLean as to what course they should pursue.

Reason for Executive Session.

Before the committee went into session, Chairman Lenroot made the following statement:

"The chair will state that the session is to enable the committee to determine which of these telegrams are relevant and which are not. Those which are found to be relevant will be read in public session later."

Before the meeting Walsh said he had no present intention of summoning Attorney-General Daugherty for questioning about his dealings in Sinclair oil stocks.

Lenroot indicated no move would be made in this direction until after the examination of brokers' books had been completed.

Walsh also announced he had no intention of subpoenaing Will H. Hays, former postmaster general. Walsh said he had told his clerk to issue a subpoena for G. D. Wahlberg, former private secretary to Harry F. Sinclair and that he expected Wahlberg to appear tomorrow.

Wahlberg will be questioned about references he made in previous testimony to a "Mr. Hayes." The committee took it that the "Mr. Hayes" was an employe in the Sinclair office but because of recent developments they wished to make certain of his identity.

Wilton J. Lambert, attorney for McLean, appeared at the committee room, saying he intended later to confer with Walsh.

Senators Frightened.

Action of the committee in examining the telegrams behind closed doors caused excited comment among the hundred or more spectators crowded in the hall outside, because of recent reports that two members of the committee might have been authors of some of the big stack of messages to Fall and McLean.

All Wire Records Asked.

In a further effort to trace reports that government officials guided the course of former Secretary Fall after the "scandal" disclosures, the Senate Teapot Dome committee called for all telegraph and telephone records.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh took this step when informed Fall had received advice from men high in the government and even, perhaps, some members of the investigating committee.

Strong indications were given that some definite information along this line had been discovered in the files of telegraph companies.

The committee wants every telegram addresed from Washington to Fall and Edward B. McLean, his host—or to any of McLean's attaches—during their sojourn in Palm Beach in December and January. General managers of the local telegraph companies were summoned for this purpose.

Additional subpoenaes were served today upon telephone officials for records of long distance telephone calls from Washington to Palm Beach to Fall or later while he was in New Orleans. These subpoenaes are returnable tomorrow.

To Quiz McLean, Sinclair.

A subpoena also was issued for service upon G. D. Wahlberg, former secretary to Harry F. Sinclair. When Wahlberg was last on the stand he mentioned something about giving bonds to "Mr. Hayes." The committee thought at the time "Mr. Hayes" was probably an attache in the Sincair New York office, but Wahlberg will be asked about it when he returns.

Demands have been made upon the committee from certain sources to have Will H. Hays, former postmaster general, summoned to tell what he knows of the charges made by Senator Heflin of Alabama that the leasing of the naval reserves was the result of "a deal" made in the Blacktone Hotel, Chicago, before the late Preident Harding was nominated as presidential candidate.

Subpoenas probably will be issued today or tomorrow to bring Sinclah and McLean to the stand later in the week. This move is Walsh's final trump card and he does not wish to play it, until all other "leads" have been followed to the end.

The survey of brokerage books for records of stock transactions may open up the way for renewed inquiry. A report from the experts who have been conducting the examination is expected to be completed by tomorrow.

Karl G. Schuyler, Denver attorney, who represented J. Leo Stack in the Denver Post, who obtained $1,000,000 for claims to Teapot Dome, is to take the stand. Schuyler is reported to have some "sensational correspondence" relating to the deal.

Daugherty Saved Again.

For the second time in two days Republican Senate leaders this afternoon thwarted Democratic aims to begin a probe of Attorney-General Daugherty's administration, while President Coolidge and his cabinet advisers sought vainly for a solution of the curious situation, during several conferences at the White House.

Immediately upon the opening of the Senate session, Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, asked for unanimous consent to take up immediately the Wheeler resolution authorizing a special committee to investigate Daugherty's conduct of the justice department. Senator Lodge, Republican leader, promptly objected, so consideration of the resolution which was reported favorable from the Senate contingent expenses committee today goes over until tomorrow.

No Coolidge Statement.

While this action was taking place in the Senate, President Coolidge, after the regular cabinet meeting, conferred first with Daugherty, Senator Weeks, Postmaster-General New and Secretary of Labor Davis. Daugherty was the first to leave this session, declaring there was nothing to be said on the subject of his remaining in the cabinet.

Later, Weeks, who was the last to leave the White House, indicated no new development in the situation would occur immediately.

This was confirmed when it was officially stated at the White House on behalf of President Coolidge that there would be no statement from the president on the Daugherty case today.

Secret Sessions Till Thursday.

Tomorrow the committee will examine files of the Postal Telegraph Company.

Open hearings will not be resumed until Thursday when all the telegrams relating to the inquiry will be made public.

Some of the telegrams to McLean were in code but these related especially to McLean's finances and business. The committee does not intend to go into McLean's finances except that evidence which might tend to indicate he did not have $100,000 at the time he said he wrote checks in that amount for Fall.

"There is a difference of opinion as to whether the telegrams could be considered 'sensational,'" Senator Adams, Colo., Democrat, who sat in the hearing, said.

DAILY WORKER Greets the Striking Garment Workers

THE DAILY WORKER, on behalf of the Workers Party, expresses its solidarity with the 10,000 striking members of the International Garment Workers Union and pledges its aid in bringing the strike to a speedy and successful conclusion.

Nothing will please the DAILY WORKER better than to be able to record in the near future the complete defeat of the bosses, the organization of the open shops and a 100 per cent victory for the union.

Two-thirds McLean Messages Related to Oil Mess; Had Leased Wire Installed Day Walsh Went to Quiz Him; New Story of Crooked Intrigue Bared

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—The name of a big politician—not an official of the government—was drawn into the oil lease scandal when the Teapot Dome Committee delved today into telegrams of Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post.

The identity of the politician was not definitely established in the telegrams, but if he is the man the committee thinks he is, a new sensational story of official intrigue is expected to be revealed.

One member of the committee considered the evidence might prove sufficient to "wreck another political career."

Telegrams were examined by the committee in executive session to trace connections between high officials and former Secretary of Interior Fall, who was a guest of McLean in Palm Beach when the lid was first torn off the scandal surrounding the leasing of naval oil reserves.

Startling Disclosures.

Perusal of the telegrams by the committee also revealed:

1.—That Fall, thru McLean, was in intimate touch with every thought and action of the investigating committee which was sitting in Washington.

2.—That the day Senator Walsh, leading investigator, arrived in Palm Beach, to seek evidence from McLean and Fall, the former put in a leased wire from Washington to Palm Beach.

3.—That of the hundred or more telegrams sent to McLean and Fall, two-thirds of them were considered "pertinent" to the oil scandal investigation and will be made public later.

4.—That no member of the investigating committee comunicated by Western Union with Fall or McLean.

CAL ASKS AID FOR OUSTING OF DAUGHERTY

Attorney-General On Trial By Wheeler Resolution

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—President Coolidge today asked his cabinet to help him decide what to do about Daugherty.

The President was to place before a meeting of his advisers these alternatives, respecting the attorney general:

1.—That he be permitted to remain in the cabinet pending a senate hearing of the charges against him. Under this arrangement, it would be understood that Daugherty would place his resignation in the President's hands at once to be accepted after the senate inquiry was ended. If the senate "acquitted" him, Daugherty then could resign without "quitting under fire." If it "convicted" him he would have to resign.

2.—That Daugherty be asked to resign at once. This would put the President in direct opposition to John T. Adams, chairman of the republican national committee, and other political leaders but would find him in agreement with senatorial leaders like Lodge, Pepper and Borah.

Because of the belief that some action regarding Daugherty was impending at the White House, senators backing the Wheeler resolution for investigation of the Department of Justice indicated they might not attempt to pass the measure today. It is to come up and debate on it will constitute in a sense a preliminary trial of Daugherty, as the charges made by Senator Wheeler and others are to be thoroly discussed.

Its adoption, however, may go over until tomorrow, unless the expected announcement from the White House decides senators to put it thru at once.

Daugherty Has Defense.

Daugherty wants the investigation started without delay and is ready to meet it with a partial defense which he has placed in the hands of Senator Willis, Ohio.

The attorney-general in a letter to Willis admitted he speculated in Sinclair oil stock. He bought it before he became attorney-general, he said, and six months after Teapot Dome was leased to Sinclair, Daugherty sold some of his stock in an effort to recoup losses. Then he bought it back again. Finally in the Fall of 1923 he sold all his Sinclair holdings, taking a loss of about $28 a share.

He denied that in his stock dealings he had any "tip" or that he ever used any information that came to him as a government official.

No opinion was ever asked of him regarding the leasing of the naval reserves, Daugherty wrote, and he never gave one. He said he had no connection whatsoever with the leasing.

Hits Reed's Candidacy.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 26.—Senator James A. Reed of Missouri is not a bona fide candidate for the presidency, but is furthering a scheme of "Hearst and Murphy and Brennan" to prevent the nomination of McAdoo at the national convention, Breckenridge Long, assistant secretary of state under Wilson, charged today in a letter to Green Terrill of Moberly, Mo., a member of the state democratic committee.

Hurt by Falling Timber.

Several persons were injured, some fatally, when a load of timber fell 22 floors from the Straus building to the street here today. The timbers slipped from a hoist and fell within a few feet of crowded Michigan Boulevard. Huge splinters struck pedestrians and one timber bounced into an automobile, injuring the driver.

Invoke Quarantine.

OMAHA, Neb., Feb. 26.—Because of foot and mouth disease outbreaks in California resulting in quarantine of Fresno and San Luis Obispo and all counties north, shipments of live stock originating in or passing thru California will not be received or unloaded at the Omaha yards, according to an embargo issued today by the local stock yards company.

Another Movie Report Denied.

PARIS, Feb. 26.—Madame Peters, mother of the wife of Max Linder, French film star, announced today receipt of a telegram from her daughter, who is in Vienna, denying reports that Linder and his bride had taken veronal and were dying. The rumor, which reached here Saturday is believed a hoax.

Painful But Worth While.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 26.—Helen Ferguson, screen actress, today displayed to friends a "worked over" nose of which she is very proud. It is minus a "bump" that was the bane of her existence because she had to dodge all profiles. The operation was painful but worth while, she declares.

Bandits Busy In St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 26.—Six bandits today herded employes of the Citizens Bank of Maplewood, a suburb, into a back room and escaped with $8,500 in a hail of shots from a watchman. Payroll bandits yesterday netted $4,600 here in three successful holdups.

Chicago Dressmakers Striking Today to Eliminate Sweatshops and Unionize the Entire Industry

Chicago's biggest labor struggle for 1924 begins this morning when thousands of dressmakers leave their plants for the 40-hour week and the union shop.

The workers in this terribly sweated industry will have the whole-hearted support of the DAILY WORKER and of the entire labor movement of Chicago. The very life of organized labor in the dressmaking industry is at stake.

Union and Non-Union Out.

Union and non-union dressmakers are going on strike together. The unionists are fighting to save themselves from the open shop fate that their employers ordained for them and the workers from the non-union shops are taking this general strike opportunity to end the miserable conditions under which they have been toiling in the scab plants.

The following strike call has been sent to every shop by the General Strike Committee of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, which is managing the walkout:

General Strike Order

General Strike in the Dress Industry Declared

Today, Wednesday, February 27, 1924

AT 10:30 A. M. SHARP

All workers in the dress industry, cutters, operators, finishers, pressers, drapers, beaders, examiners, etc., are hereby ordered to cease work at

10:30 A. M. SHARP

Leave your shop in an orderly manner. Take your tools with you. Avoid having any arguments with your employers. On another page of this strike order you will find the place where the workers of every shop will meet. When you leave the shop, proceed to the meeting place designated for your shop.

The workers did their utmost to avoid this strike. It was forced upon us by the employers, and the time has come when the men and women in the dress industry will make their employers realize that the Union cannot be destroyed. That the working conditions and wages of the workers must be improved and that the workers will not return to work until their just and reasonable demands will be granted to them.

Long Live the Unity of the Workers!

By Order of the General Strike Committee of the Chicago Locals,

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

TEACHERS FIGHT PLATOON SCHOOL AS ROBOT MAKER

National Educational Ass'n Boosts It

The people who are advocating the platoon system for the public schools before the department of superintendence of the National Education Association are all neglecting to tell the teachers and superintendents just how the platoonizing of the schools affect the teachers.

Rose Phillips, the director of platoon schools in Detroit, in speaking before the department of elementary school principals yesterday, urged its financial economy, its effect on the normal life of the school children, its effect on the teaching of the three R's and on social relationships, but did not say anything about the effect of the platoon system on the teachers.

The Chicago school teachers who are opposed to the platoon system are opposed because of its effect on the teacher and teaching.

Teacher Becomes Machine.

In the perfect platoon school system all lessons on all subjects are prepared by one person who supervises the teaching of each subject. That means that one person would prepare the lessons, for instance, on history for all the children attending school in Chicago. At the same time in all the schools in Chicago, if it were run under the platoon system, history would be taught. At the same moment in all the schools history would cease to be taught and the next subject on the program taken up.

The real danger of the platoon system rests in the fact that a person who does not come in contact with children prepares the lessons and the teachers merely repeat like parrots what has been prepared for them.

Standardized Education.

No provision is made for the exceptional class or child. Everything is standardized to the last degree. The teacher is told what to teach and is assigned so much time in which to teach it. A given amount of ground must be covered in a given amount of time.

A supervisor who had any prejudices or ideas would undoubtedly work them into the preparation of lessons. The teachers would be bound to teach these ideas whether or not she agreed with them.

Much has been made by advocates of the advantages of the use that the school auditorium could be put to carry on certain kinds of propaganda. The teachers who oppose the standardized lessons could and no doubt would be used to spread propaganda.

Away From Freedom.

The teachers are made mere parrots under the platoon system the teachers say. They point out that the modern trend in education is all toward freedom in the schools and classes and away from fixed standards. More reliance is placed on the individual pupil and less and less on the prepared lessons under all plans advocated by real educators. The platoon system leaves no place for individuality of any sort. The lessons and schedules are prepared and teachers and pupils alike are made to fit into this schedule.

The U. S. Bureau of Education in conference on platoon schols begins in the Hotel Sherman tomorrow. The conference on platoon schools begins dreds of school superintendents and principals who are in Chicago attending the convention of the National Education Association.

This conference is the big bid of the Bureau of Education for the platoonizing of the schools and the robotizing of both the teachers and the pupils.

School Spies Are Attending Sessions of the N. E. A. Here

The industrial angle of this spy work is just beginning to be apparent. Employers are fishing around for some way to control the "morale" of their girl workers, to keep them away from unions, to keep them satisfied with low wages and long hours and no hope of advancement. The girl agitators in the department stores must be spotted and weeded out, the wage grumblers must be silenced.

Industrial "Deans" Are Spies.

The bosses are beginning to appoint their own deans of women to do the job. Sometimes they call them personnel directors; sometimes, like People's Gas Co. of Chicago, they call them deans of women.

College girls looking around for a future job see this new industrial opening. They ask their deans of women for advice on how to prepare for the work. And they get the advice. They learn that capital and labor have identical interests. They learn that "even a millionaire is discontented with his income." And so on.

Last summer a course specially for deans of women was given at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York. The woman professor who gave the course was asked point blank:

"Did you teach them about running spy systems?"

"Yes, but we didn't call it that," she replied. "We called it personnel."

The regular program of the deans of women at the Blackstone this week says nothing about espionage. There are speeches on mental hygiene, on social and moral problems, on patriotism. All are uttered in modulated, disciplined, authoritative and insinuating voices. The real works of the dean business are discussed outside of convention sessions.

Dicks in Big Business.

Then the deans reveal themselves as the academic dicks for big business, keeping the college name unblemished by economic or other heresy so that these well oiled propaganda plants can function for the existing order at their highest efficiency.

Industrial espionage is an established department in the American economic scheme. The special job of the college end is taken care of by the deans of men and women. The factory and department store deans are their understudies.

violence of the hired thugs of the bosses. During past strikes here the bosses have hired sluggers to beat up the workers and try to intimidate them.

The action of the sixteen expelled members of the union in offering their services to the joint board to help win the strike for the workers has aroused the sympathy of the members of the union and scores of them are demanding that the expelled members be taken back into the union without delay.

Headquarters for the strike have been established in the Hotel Atlantic, 316 S. Clark St., where the strike committee will direct the strike activities and settle with the bosses who want to open their shops under union conditions.

LUDENDORFF ON TRIAL FOR BEER CELLAR PUTSCH

Pressmen and Witnesses at the Opening

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MUNICH, Feb. 26.—In the gloomy chambers of the old war academy, all entrances to which were protected by barbed wire and armed soldiery General Ludendorff, his step-son, Lieut. Heinz Pernet, Adolf Hittler and seven former army officers and doctors were tried today for treason.

Ludendorff stalked at the head of the little procession of prisoners as they were marched into the dock.

Hittler, notorious monarchist agitator, brought up the rear, lugging a huge portfolio of defense documents under an arm.

Ludendorff and Hittler entered the trial chamber where sixty newspapermen and fifty witnesses were the only ones besides judges and guards admitted.

Of the prisoners, only Lieut. Robert Wagner was in uniform.

Ludendorff's bearing was proud and sneering, as tho he ignored the somewhat ignominous position with which he was confronted.

The crime with which the prisoners were charged was of plotting against the state in that they led the ludicrous beer cellar putsch that failed so completely Nov. 8, 1923.

The trial opened at 8:30 a. m. The complete list of prisoners included: General Ludendorff, Adolf Hittler, Lieut. Heinz Pernet, Ernst Poehner, Dr. Wilhelm Frick, Dr. Friedrich Weber, Capt. Ernst Rohem, Lieut. Wilhelm Nrueckner, Lieut. Robert Wagner.

Colonel Hermann Kriebel and Chief Judge Ladgericht presided.

Altho it was understood that the defense of the accused was to have involved throwing most of the blame for the putsch that failed upon General von Kahr and General Lossow, plans were changed by defense counsel at the last minute.

Von Kahr, dictator of Bavaria, and Lossow, head of the army, resigned last week. The defense will insist they co-operated in the putsch plans.

The defendants planned to claim they were not guilty of treason since they did not aim to separate Bavaria from the reich, but to establish a new form of government, namely a monarchy.

The trial began after the judges had filed solemnly into the chamber. District Attorney Stenglein read the indictment, which was a lengthy recital of events on that fateful beer cellar night.

ANTI-LANDIS MEN NOT INFORMED OF CONFAB, THEY SAY

Conference on Chicago Issue, March 17

Representatives of those building trades unions which refused to recognize the Landis Award and have a separate building trades council charge that they were not notified about an important conference to be held March 17 for the purpose of determining which is the authorized building trades council.

Yesterday it was announced that the conference is to take place with the members of the executive council of the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor and international officers participating.

Landis Crux of Trouble.

The situation which finds Chicago with two rival building trades councils grew out of the arbitration award of 1921. Some of the building trades unions agreed to arbitrate their demands with Landis as arbitrator while some of the unions, notably the carpenters and the painters, refused to arbitrate. Landis handed down a decision adversely affecting not only the men who had agreed to accept him as arbitrator but also affecting all trades which had not agreed to arbitrate. As a result of the refusal of most of the unions to accept the award rival building trades were set up.

The split in the ranks of the building trades workers was the signal for the open shoppers, under the leadership of T. E. Donnelly to try to force the employment of non-union workers in all the trades which refused to agree to the terms of Judge Landis.

Meeting Just Held In New York.

The painters have been demanding that the building trades unions be brought together in one council. At the Portland convention of the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor the executive council was instructed to meet with the international officers of the unions and straighten out the matter. As a result the executive council called a meeting which was held in New York City last Monday. The building trades department of the American Federation of Labor refused to recognize either of the Chicago building trades councils.

At the New York meeting all the building trades unions with the exception of the carpenters were represented by their international officers. The carpenters are not a part of the building trades department. Their president, James Hutchason, was invited but declined to attend the meeting.

HAVANA, Feb. 26.—The United Railway and Dock Workers' strike ended, with the workers winning concessions.

UPHOLSTERERS IN APPEAL FROM AN UNJUST VERDICT

Amazed at Decision for Scab Employers

The upholsterers' union ask for a new trial for the four members of their union and Fred Jurish, a member of the painters' union, who were convicted of conspiracy to boycott in Judge Wells' court.

The verdict of guilty came as a complete surprise to the men on trial who felt confident that they would be acquitted. The jury was out several hours before it brought in its verdict. The jury not only found the defendants guilty but fixed the punishment. Thomas O'Shea and William Riordon were fined $100 and Gus Dahl, Michael J. McKenna, and Fred Jurish were fined $50 each.

A Compromise Verdict.

The verdict was evidently a compromise one reached by the jury after it had deliberated some time.

The men on trial were indicted last December following unsuccessful efforts of the employing upholsterers' association to break a strike which had lasted since May first. Dudley Taylor, attorney for the upholstery bosses, was the prime mover in having the men indicted and brought to trial.

The entire case, boiled down, consisted of the charge that the men on trial had pasted stickers appealing to building trades workers to ask upholstery workers with whom they came in contact to show their union cards.

So flimsy was the case against the defendants that they did not put up a defense, considering that the state had not proven that a conspiracy existed.

Life of Unionism at Stake.

The men who were on trial have repeatedly said that conviction would be a court declaration to the labor movement in Chicago that union activities were illegal "If we are convicted it may be legal to strike but it will not be legal to tell anyone about the strike. When a strike is called it will have to be kept a secret" is the way one of the men put it.

As soon as the jury had returned its verdict the lawyers for the defense notified the court that they would make motions for a new trial. The court has set March 8th as the date on which the motions will be heard.

The fines will not be collected until after the motions for a new trial have been heard.

Foster to Speak Tonight on Lessons of Miners' Convention

"The Lessons of the Miners' Convention" and the effects of the decisions of this body on the labor movement in general will be the subject of a lecture by William Z. Foster on Wednesday, Feb. 27, at the Northwest Hall, at the next regular monthly meeting of the Trade Union Educational League.

To militants coming to hear William Z. Foster, the program assures additional features.

Earl Browder, editor of the Labor Herald, will review the new labor developments in England in his talk on "The Strike and the Labor Government in Great Britain."

This review of the most interesting developments in the field of labor from the view of the militant is, according to a new decision of the local board, Trade Union Educational League, to become a feature of every monthly meeting.

Besides these two features, enough to insure the success of any meeting there is another of great interest to the large group of needle trades workers, as well as to all militants—a report on the recently held national trades conference by Phil Aronberg.

The meeting, beginning promptly at 8:15, promises to be the most successful held in months.

Two Mexican Bulls Drive Away Whole Herd of Fascisti

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 26.—Altho there has been more real fighting in this rebellion than in previous Mexican revolutions, the whole affair is not devoid of its comic opera side. Today's newspapers gravely announce a victory in Saltillo. A band of fascisti (size not given) under ex-Col. Jimenez, attacked Saltillo in order to replenish their supplies. Two policemen, whose names should be cited for heroism, were on the outskirts of the town and when the fascisti arrived began firing at them. After a brief exchange of shots, the fascisti fled in confusion and Saltillo was saved.

Klansmen from Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and other states are expected to attend the meeting.

The announcemnt states that free speech has been suppressed and other rights have been taken away by leaders of the present organization.

May Bore From Within!

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 26.—Ku Klux Klan malcontents from many sections of the country gathered here today with the expressed intention of "curing or killing" the secret order.

E. Y. Clarke, former imperial wizard of the organization who issued the call for the gathering, declared he would oppose any effort to organize an order to oppose the Klan.

New York Labor in Big Drive for German Workers Aid

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—The local drive to aid the famished workers of Germany is proceeding with enthusiasm and success. Volunteer workers are covering local unions every night, committees are organized in outlying sections, house to house canvasses are arranged and mass meetings are being arranged to spur up interest in the work of saving the workers of Germany from the capitalist-created famine.

The labor unions are responding magnificently to the appeals for funds. Bankers' Local No. 1 donated $1,400, and Bakers' Local Executive Board No. 3 voted $1,000 to be approved by the union later on.

The executive board of the Painters' union gave $25.00. The unions are cordially receiving speakers from the New York local of the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany, under whose auspices the drive is organized.

A mass meeting held in Linden, New Jersey, netted $150.00. A mass meeting will be held in Hungarian Home, New York, on March 15.

Headquarters for the drive will be organized in the following places: Williamsburg, 715 Broadway; Brownsville, 1844 Pitkin Ave.; Downtown, 208 E. 12th St.; Yorkville Labor Temple; Harlem, 143 E. 103rd St.; Bronx, 1347 Boston Road; Queens Labor Lyceum, 785 Forest Ave.; Boro Park and Bath Beach at 40th St. Club House.

The proposal to start a drive for clothing was held in abeyance pending communfcation with the national office in Chicago.

Hughes Will Not Say Whether Russia Balks U. S. Internationalism

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Secretary Hughes declines to "speculate" with regard to future decisions as to calling or taking part in international conferences. He will not say whether the presence of Russia in an international conference will keep the United States out.

This response was given when he was questioned as to his attitude on the appeal sent him by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, which quoted President Coolidge's peace talks and asked him to invite the president to call a "conference of the debtor and creditor nations." This proposed conference would "make definite settlement, in concrete terms, of reparations, interallied debts and disarmament, in order to achieve a new peace."

Mr. Hughes points out that he has recently explained, in a letter to Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, that he cannot approve any of the disarmament conference plans now suggested. As for the war debts, they are in the hands of a debt commission created by Congress. And the reparations matter is being dealt with, at present, by the Dawes committee of experts. In short, he will not move.

Chicago Papers Lied in Stating Labor Endorsed Small

(By The Federated Press)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 26.—The Illinois joint labor legislative board has not indorsed Len Small, republican, for re-election as governor of Illinois. Neither at its Chicago meeting Feb. 8 and 9, nor at any other meeting has it done so. Chicago and down-state papers gave wide circulation to a story saying that the joint labor legislative board had given Small an indorsement.

Guy Young and Irvine D. Strain, United Mine Worker members of the joint board, has requested The Federated Press to say that "at no time during the recent meeting of the Illinois joint labor legislative board was the name of Len Small mentioned for indorsement."

Farmers and Trade Unionists of Nebraska in Progressive Party Vote to Go to St. Paul May 30th

By JOSEPH MANLEY.

Secretary of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party

Altho the Nebraska Conference for Progressive Political Action was not "thrown over a transom"—as one disgruntled democrat expressed it—its delegates were by an overwhelming vote refused seats in the conference of the Progressive Party, held at Grand Island, Neb., on February 22nd.

Following this action, the conference unanimously endorsed the May 30th convention to be held in St. Paul, and elected 49 delegates to attend.

A resolution was then unanimously adopted demanding withdrawal of the democrats, headed by Governor Charles Bryan, filed for the coming primaries, on the Progressive party ticket.

The state law of Nebraska provides that a legal political party such as the Progressive Party shall hold its regular annual convention in the month of April. But because of the mixed political situation in the state, due to the fusion efforts of the democrats and the confusion tactics of the recently organized Conference for Progressive Political Action, prominent members of the Nebraska Progressive Party felt obliged to call this February conference.

C. P. P. A. Gets the Gate.

The Grand Island conference was attended by over one hundred delegates from various counties. These for the most part represented the poorer farmers, with a small sprinkling of rank and file trade unionists. The element which had tried to break into the conference, headed by the State Conference for Progressive Political Action, was composed mostly of trade union officials, rich farmers and professional politicians—appointees of Gov. Bryan. The purpose of this group—an effort to capture the conference—was so apparent that even prior to the opening of the conference great indignation was shown amongst the dirt farmers and the rank and file trade unionists. And as soon as the conference opened, the fight was on.

The Credentials Committee recommended that only those belonging to or affiliated with the Progressive Party, and who intended to support its candidates, should be admitted to the conference. A substitute to this motion was proposed by Joseph Gilbert, late of Minnesota and the Non-Partisan League, now editor of a newspaper at North Platte. This substitute motion said that the only qualifications for participating delegates should be that they believed in maintaining a third party movement in Nebraska. There was bitter and prolonged debate on this point—Gilbert and Orton, State Chairman of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, taking prominent part in the discussion. In the course of the debate it was argued that if the original motion were adopted this would prevent members of the Progressive Party from supporting "good men" in the old political parties, if they might desire to. And that argument seemed to "settle the hash" of the Conference for Progressive Political Action group—with the farmers, particularly—because when the vote was taken, shortly afterward, only nine delegates supported the substitute motion. The original motion carried, with Gilbert, Orton and several others voting against it. Following which, these members withdrew from the conference; and with their withdrawal went the only note of disharmony that had been heard there.

Thruout all the discussions that followed, on the various matters brought before the conference, there was apparent the finest spirit of friendship and co-operation between the remaining delegates, of the dirt-farmer and rank and file trade unionist constituencies. The two exceptions to these classifications consisted of Delegates Bigelow and Paul, the first a lawyer from Omaha, whose practice is mostly amongst the trade unionists; and the second a farmer who is now practicing law, among the farmers locally.

Brother of Darwin's Foe Banned.

William H. Green, of Omaha, Executive Secretary of the Progressive Party, was chairman of the committee that brought in the resolution demanding withdrawal of the names of Bryan and the other Democrats as candidates of the Progressive Party. In supporting this demand, speaker after speaker vigorously denounced the attempts at fusion. One of these—a farmer, 82 years of age—recalled the old Populist Party, which had been "swallowed" in a similar manner by the Democrats. All were strongly for getting the Democrats off the Progressive Party ticket, at all costs. All the committee's recommendations were unanimously adopted.

Great enthusiasm was shown for the May 30th convention, and the growing farmer-labor movement. The writer, as National Secretary of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, addressed the conference and appealed for support of the St. Paul convention on May 30th. The conference elected eight delegates from each of the six Congressional districts to attend that convention and elected Rev. J. L. Beebe, State Chairman of the Progressive Party, as a delegate at large—thus completing the delegation of forty-nine.

In addition, a resolution was passed providing that upon return to their homes the delegates to this conference should make every endeavor to influence all trade unions and farmers' organizations, to have them send delegates to the St. Paul convention on May 30th.

The conference continued along into the night, and a full slate for the various state offices was nominated on the Progressive Party ticket.

Demand LaFollette Quit Teapot Party

The candidate nominated for United State Senator was W. J. Taylor, a well-known Nebraska farmer and a popular champion of the cause of the poorer farmers, especially. Mr. Taylor was easily the best orator present in the conference, and his speeches were filled with illuminating facts in connection with the growing bankruptcy situation of the farmers whose interests he spoke for. He was the author of the motion which decided the fate of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, in this conference, and his right to make the closing address on this measure he cannily took advantage of. Mr. Taylor is more than 60 years of age; but he is in vigorous health, and will no doubt become a prominent figure in the growing farmer-labor movement.

A resolution was also unanimously endorsed in this conference calling upon Robert M. LaFollette to get out of the Republican Party and help lead the farmer-labor movement.

Althogether, this conference of members of the Progressive Party of Nebraska has gone a long way toward "cleaning house," of those elements which have been seeking to destroy it. Their regular State Convention will be held in April. And it is almost certain that, if legal technicalities will allow—and the champions of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, do not prevent it—the Progressive Party of Nebraska will become tht State Farmer-Labor Party. And the conference will have the direct effect of organizing a large delegation, truly representative of the real farmers and industrial workers of the state, to attend the May 30th convention. It will also be committed to the policy of joining hands with sister states, for the organization of a great national Farmer-Labor Party.

Mexican Governor Cuts Expenses by Opening Prisons

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 26.—Amid groans and jeers on the part of the capitalist press, Jorge Manrique, Agraristo governor of San Luis Potosi, is pushing a big program of social reconstruction in the state of which he has recently become governor.

Finding a pilfered treasury and no money to feed the prisoners, he investigated their cases, talked to them individually and then opened the door to almost all of them. He thinks petty theft is a result of poverty, exploitation and starvation and not of human cussedness, so those charged with petty thefts were the first to go.

Then to prevent the repopulation of the jails, he shut down all the cantinas (saloons) on Sundays and holidays. There is nothing of the Puritan blue laws about this measure, nor of hypocrisy either. His very enemies admit that the saloons have closed and stay closed. At the same time he cut out bull fights. Then he summoned the state teachers before him and told them that their rigorous, military discipline, imposed upon the school children, was antiquated and they would have to abandon it.

The new municipal president of the state capital, inspired by the example of his superior, called a meeting of the workers of the city and told them that they were entitled to go home at the end of eight hours of work, and that he wanted them to stop at the end of eight hours and he would personally see to it that they suffered no evil consequences. Now the eight-hour law is being enforced.

Strike of Linseed Mill Workers Is Won at Superior

(By The Federated Press)

SUPERIOR, Wis., Feb. 26.—The strike of the linseed mill workers at the plant of Spencer Kellogg & Sons here, came to an end after the company's unsuccessful attempt to operate under the new regulations against which the men were striking. The rule was that each crew of three should operate nine linseed presses, instead of eight. The men quit in a body, and only two of the strikers returned under the new conditions, one of whom subsequently resigned because of the added burden.

The officials recruited inexperienced and casual help which was available in quantities insufficient to produce one-fourth the usual output. After a week the company conceded the demands of the men for the old conditions. The mill has resumed full operations.

OLD WOMAN WHO WITNESSED FIRE MOVES AUDIENCE

N. Y. Women Organize to Fight Fire-traps

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—A meeting for working class women was held here under the auspices of the United Council of Working class women, to protest against the housing conditions on the East Side which make dangerous fire-traps of the tenements. About fifty women were present. There were eight women speakers, among them an old women who lives across the street from the place that had burned down and destroyed thirteen workers lives last week.

Her simple story (she had never been on a platform before) which she told while she wailed as one wails for the dead, made the audience weep so loudly, it seemed as if the meeting itself was turned into a funeral service. At the end, an appeal was made to the women to organize themselves into a Neighborhood Council. Thirty-three women enrolled and promised to get their neighbors to join. They will be given an organizer familiar with organization work.

A resolution was adopted demanding that the city abolish the fire-traps and build houses for the workers, to rent at cost. The women were eager for organization. Even the children seemed to understand. One kiddie kept saying to his mother, "Mama, mama, did you give your name. Go on, hurry up! give your name." Several young girls enrolled with the idea that it would be a good thing to form a junior group. They are the daughters of women who enrolled.

A couple of capitalist party politicians came in, but were ignored. Congressman Dickstein of the 12th District and a local assemblyman. The keynote of the speeches was: The working class, if strongly organized can do anything for themselves. The working class women, as part of the working class must stand together to make a better life for the workers and their families.

Olgin and Epstein Speakers at N. Y. W. C. Protest Meet

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—A big mass meeting of Arbeiter Ring (Workmen's Circle) members was held tonight in Clinton Hall here to protest against the action of the reactionary machine of the organization in depriving two members, Abe Epstein and D. Siegal, of their full rights, by making them members at large, and to protest against the campaign of terror instituted by the reactionary officials against the Left Committee of Action and the revolutionary party of the Workmen's Circle membership.

This meeting was the outcome of an immense wave of protest thruout the organization, twenty branches thus far having passed resolutions of protest.

The meeting was addressed by Comrades Olgin, Bourgin, and by Comrade Abe Epstein, who is one of the two above-mentioned members of the Workmen's Circle.

Comrade Epstein was received with great applause. In his speech he said: "This is not a question of the expulsion of myself or of Siegel. We have come not merely to protest. We have come to build a movement which will restore the Workmen's Circle to its former position: a non-partisan progressive workmen's organization."

Comrade Olgin in his speech said that in his tour over the country he found everywhere that the progressive workers are bitter against the bureaucratic methods of the present leadership in the Workmen's Circle.

Warns Against Too Much Optimism Based on Labor Party Victory

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—A London trade unionist contributes a long letter to the current number of Advance, organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in which he tells of shocking conditions in clothing sweatshops working in competition with American shops, and ends with a warning against a too great optimism based on the political victories of the English workers.

The real reason for these, he writes, "is the fact that the mass of the workers, seeing our most powerful unions suffering defeat after defeat, have lost faith in the industrial organization as a force for their betterment. As a result of their despair, they have used the ballot box to a greater degree. But we must not, comrade, exaggerate the victory. . . . The mass of the workers are apathetic, indifferent. Their support of the Labor Party is more like a man in despair groping in the dark, than a class conscious effort. Still our one ray of hope in the coming year, is that when the next general election comes labor will be powerful enough to bring relief from the present slavery by appropriate legislative measures."

Kisser Comes Back.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 26.—E. E Damon, who resigned as printing instructor in the Kansas City, Kansas high school after the had kissed Margarette Pratt, 18 year old senior, returned to his job today. His letter of resignation was withdrawn at a meeting of the board of education.

Detroit, in Big Come-Back in Daily Worker "Sub" Drive, Says Chicago Has Got a "Fat Chance"

To THE DAILY WORKER.—We in Detroit read with a lot of amusement the boasts of the Chicago "DAILY WORKER Booster" outfit. Our amusement springs from our knowledge that Chicago has earned the name of "Windy City" because its people are past masters of the Art of Blow. We accept the handicap of a double population. We accept the handicap of Chicago being the home city of the DAILY WORKER. We accept these handicaps because we can say, with commendable modesty, that when it comes to the "go-getter stuff" Detroit can run circles around Chicago.

The Campaign for the DAILY WORKER is going forward with such gratifying results that we are putting on a full time City DAILY WORKER Representative. Bud Reynolds, king of the go-getters, will devote his boundless energy and incomparable ability to making Detroit the first DAILY WORKER city in the country. And with our DAILY WORKER organization hitting on all cylinders, supervised by the irrepressible Bud, Chicago has a fat chance.

Gladys Cable Sings Silly Song So Well It Sounds Good

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Mabel Lyons, a young Chicago pianiste, was soloist with the Civic orchestra on Sunday, February 24, playing the MacDowell second concerto. Miss Lyons is a thoro musician of unusual gifts, and she played in a way that showed excellent musicianship at its best.

The Civic orchestra is a symphonic organization founded by the Civic Music Association for the development of players for established symphony orchestras. Most of its eighty odd players are young musicians, and the results they obtain under the leadership of Mr. Stock and Mr. DeLamarter make them not a student orchestra, but a serious and worth-while alternate for the Chicago Symphony.

* * * *

Other local musicians played in other halls on the same day. Robert MacDonald, well known as an accompanist, and a young violinist, Aldo Del Missier, not so widely known, gave a joint recital at the Playhouse. We heard them play a sonata by Sjogren for violin and piano, in a thoughtful and studious, if not very brilliant manner. Del Missier possesses a beautiful tone, tho his interpretation lacks somewhat in depth and feeling. It is rather unusual for MacDonald to play solo, but his performance of the first movement of a sonata by Glazunoff showed his remarkable capabilities in this field.

* * * *

Goldie Gross, cellist, and Gladys Cable, soprano, also gave a joint recital at the Studebaker. Miss Cable has a small voice, incapable of any very big effects, but she showed ability to take some most idiotic sentimental songs and make them sound like real music. Where a less skilful singer would have only bored one with a song like Reichardt's "When the Roses Bloom", Miss Cable made of it a really enjoyable performance.

Miss Gross made an equally delightful impression. Hers is the soft and feminine tone that a woman's touch generally imparts to an instrument. Her performance of a composition by Jensen called "Murmeludes Lueftchen" demonstrated an enviable technic.

* * * *

The Chicago Business Men's Orchestra, the finest amateur orchestra in the city, played a concert at the Edgewater Beach hotel. It is not entirely composed of business men, for there are a good many professional men and workers in it as well. This is about the only amateur orchestra in these parts that maintains a full symphonic instrumentation without the assistance of a single hired professional. We were able to hear a movement of a Bruch concerto played by Carleton Kaumeyer, the concertmaster of the orchestra, and the finale of Chaykovski's fourth symphony, both played with a surprisingly good ensemble, tone quality, and vigor.

The director, Clarence Evans, viola player in the Chicago Symphony orchestra and in the Gordon quartet, has done wonders with the men under him, and too much credit can not be given him. His orchestra is worthy of better things than a free concert to a perhaps not over-attentive audience in a swell hotel, and Mr. Evans should lose no time in advancing it.

PHILADELPHIA IS MAKING BIG FIGHT ON DAVIS LAWS

All-City Conference Is Coming March 10

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 25.—The Council for Protection of Foreign-Born Workers, organized here several months ago, is urging all labor organizations of this city to send delegates, Monday, March 10 at 8 p. m., to a Philadelphia conference at 521 York avenue for the purpose of planning definite action against the alien slave acts.

The coming conference is expected to be still bigger than the original organization conference several months ago at which 50 organizations were represented.

Reasons for organized action by labor is given in the following letter of invitation to labor bodies sent by the council:

25 Anti-Labor Laws.

There are now pending in Congress not less than twenty-five bills which propose, thru "Selective Immigration, registering and finger printing of all foreign-born workers, to create for the employers an army of serfs who cannot organize or strike. Thru these laws the big employers hope to smash the unions and reduce the standard of living of native and foreign-born alike.

The American Federation of Labor at its Portland convention, adopted a resolution vigorously denouncing these laws as strike-breaking measures intended to provide the employers with a slave army of workers. The Portland convention of the A. F. of L. pledged itself to combat these attempts of the employers with all means at its disposal.

Council To Resist.

It was because of the urgent need to carry on an effective struggle against the attempts of Congress to pass these strike-breaking laws that the Council for Protection of Foreign-Born Workers was organized in this city. A conference of all labor organizations of Philadelphia is called by the Council for Monday, March 10, 8 p. m., at 521 York avenue, near 5th and Spring Garden streets. The conference will work out ways and means how best to fight the slave laws which are a menace to the entire working class of this country.

Brother workers, the interests of labor and of your own organization make it imperative for you to send delegates to that conference without fail. Let us act before it is too late.

Wall Street Nervous Over Results Oil Probe Revelations

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Wall Street is more than concerned by the oil scandal. It had hoped, and its representative men are frank to say so, that the year would be politically quiet—that the country would sit back and accept Cal Coolidge without a thought

One industrial banker is quoted as follows: "The blowing of the dome off the Teapot means more than just a scandal of political interest only. It means, for one thing, that the country is in for a 'political year,' and it is this phase of the question that is disturbing to capital. Until the Washington scandal broke, everyone had settled back in anticipation of an orderly and easy election campaign; now there is doubt in some minds as to whether this will be the case; in fact, it looks as if it would be the reverse. As every observer knows, a strenuous and bitter election campaign always has the effect of making business nervous."

COMMUNIST-CHILDREN'S-COLUMN

THE LITTLE GREY DOG.

By Herminia Zur Muhlen.

HE WAS an ugly little grey dog with long silken-soft ears and a bushy tail. He was born in a splendid stable that belonged to a rich man. This rich man lived on a large estate in which were many fields and meadows. And in these fields grew sugarcane, in great quantities, great, round, smooth canes that contained the sweet sugar. On the sugar plantation worked hundreds of Negroes, men and women, and all the Negroes belonged to the rich man who had bought them in the market as he would buy cattle, for this story happened long ago, in those days when slavery existed in America. The rich man could do anything he wished with his slaves. If he was in a bad mood he would permit them to be whipped; if they dared to protest against this cruel treatment they were more cruelly punished—they were stripped naked, smeared with honey, and tied to a tree. The smell of the honey attracted the bees that came in large swarms, settled on the body of the slave sucked the honey and stung the bound man till he collapsed with pain. Also, the master could sell his slave, did this frequently, without the least consideration tearing mother from child, separating man and wife, sister and brother. The poor Negroes were entirely helpless, they had to work all day long in the hot sun, received very poor food, lived in wretched huts, separated from the house of the rich man, near a mighty river. Here lived the Negroes, crowded together; the children played about in front of these huts, played happily, because they did not yet know that they were slaves and that a hard, difficult life awaited them.

In one of the Negro huts arrived the little grey dog who had been born in the splendid stable, and this is how it happened.

Once when the rich man walked thru the stable, he noticed the little grey dog who was playing in the straw. He looked at the little dog, and said angrily to the coachman, "What is this ugly little creature doing here in my beautiful stable? Take it out; drown it in the river."

The coachman promised to do this; indeed he pitied the lively little animal, but the master was strict and he did not dare to disobey the command. He called the little dog, who came running joyously, and started toward the river. As he came near the homes of the slaves, a little black boy ran out of one of the huts and cried, "O, the lovely little animal! Where are you taking it?" And he ran quite close to them and patted the dog, who mischieviously jumped at him, barking.

"I must drown the dog," answered the coachman.

At that the eyes of the little boy filled with tears, he took the dog in his arms, held him close, and begged "Don't do it, just see how darling [illegible] is."

[illegible] must do it, Benjamin. The master has commanded me. If I don't obey him he will punish me severely."

The little grey dog licked Benjamin's face, looked at him with his large eyes that seemed to implore him, "Save me, save me."

"Give me the dog," pleaded Benjamin. "I will hide him carefully so that the master will not see him."

The coachman thought for a moment, then replied, "Good, you may hide him. But," he said warningly, "you must not betray the fact that I have given him to you. If the master should ever see him you must say that you saved him from the river. Then he will give you a bad beating. . . ."

"That doesn't matter," cried Benjamin eagerly. "As long as the little dog is allowed to live."

The coachman laughed, removed the string from the neck of the dog, and Benjamin ran to the hut with him, patting him, kissing him, full of joy. At evening when Benjamin's parents came home, he showed them the dog, and the parents also were happy because they had to be away from home all day and always feared that the little boy might go to the river, fall in and be drowned. But now he would stay near the huts with his playfellow, so that he might hide himself quickly in case the rich man might pass by.

It was as tho the little grey dog knew that Benjamin had saved his life. He did not leave the side of the little boy, obeyed him, and showed himself to be quite intelligent. Benjamin spoke to him as to a person, and the dog looked at him as wisely as tho he understood every word.

Benjamin's parents were young and strong, the best workers on the sugar plantation. Therefore the severe overseer was satisfied with them and beat them less than he did the other slaves. On that account they were both, in spite of their hard life, satisfied, and in the evenings when they returned to their hut and their little Benjamin, all three of them were gay and happy.

Benjamin's mother, Hannah, was also an excellent seamstress. She knew how to weave pretty baskets from reeds and rushes, and was a very good cook.

One day the eldest daughter of the rich man, who lived with her husband in the north, came to visit her father. She was glad to see her old home again and everything seemed to her more beautiful than in the north. She complained of the trouble she had in getting servants in the city. "These whites are not nearly as desirable as the blacks," said she. "They cannot be driven to work with whips. You should present me with a good slave, father, so that life will be more comfortable for me. My husband will be quite angry about it, for the people in the north are crazy; they claim that the blacks are also human beings, and that slavery must be abolished. But he loves me very dearly, and will be glad if he sees me happy."

WORK SLACKENS AS CAL DENIES UNEMPLOYMENT

500,000 More Jobless Since June

By LELAND OLDS.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

Yes, we have no unemployment today, is the latest song hit jointly produced by the president's accomplished cabinet and officially okayed by Coolidge himself.

Will it be popular among the tens of thousands hanging around the employment agencies where there are reported to be 166 applicants for each 100 jobs?

500,000 More Jobless.

Evidently the cabinet members leave the hard facts behind when they go to confer with the chief executive, for the most recent report of the U. S. department of labor indicates that at least 500,000 workers who had work in June, 1923, are out of a job. And that takes no account of the steady increase of the population which would normally add at least that many more. In Illinois and Indiana there are tens of thousands of coal miners out of a job or working only two or three days each week.

Then there's the scientific labor market indicator of the federal reserve board which shows a steady decline in the number of jobs available for each hundred applicants. Since the high point in 1923 this barometer has fallen more than half way back to the depression level of 1921. That means unemployment, but somehow the president and his cabinet can't see it anywhere. Perhaps they are looking too high, over the heads of the workers, at the senate. There's full employment there, at least in the Teapot committee.

White House Bunk.

This official White House utterance goes on to assert that everything that can be manufactured in the country seems to be finding a ready market. That's putting it a little strong. How about the great locomotive concerns, Baldwin and American, working only 25 per cent of capacity because they can't get orders? Baldwin laid off more than 14,000 workers during the last months of the year.

How about the car building plants that laid off more than 36,000 workers between October and December so that the Illinois department of labor refers to the collapse of the car building industry?

Shoe Industry Down.

When, however, this White House utterance turns to individual industries it is most unfortunate in its choices. The boot and shoe industry, it says, is active and able to dispose of products as fast as they can be made. How about it? According to the Feb. 12 statement of the U. S. department of commerce production of shoe factories fell off 8,000,000 pairs between October and December and reached a point 5,000,000 pairs below production of the same month a year ago.

And incidentally in January the boot and shoe industry was employing 8 1-2 per cent fewer men than in the preceding year. Hoover's engineers' committee reported this industry badly overexpanded.

Textiles Worse.

The textile industry is an even more unfortunate choice. All reports show that the textile industry has been unable to dispose of all its products for many months with the situation growing worse. As a whole it has laid off one-tenth of its employes since March, 1923. During December woolen mills consumed about one-fifth less wool than in the preceding December.

While the cotton mills are averaging less than 86 per cent of single shift capacity with most northern mills operating only two or three days a week. Some have shut down altogether.

Business will probably pick up somewhat as the spring approaches. But not enough to absorb all the unemployed workers. And for an official utterance from the chief executive of the nation to blink the existence of very considerable unemployment today suggests that he is supposed to be either an official ostrich trying to avoid the sight of danger ahead by burying his head in the sand, or a dispenser of false optimism to the people.

Russ Co-operatives Taking Charge of Silk Cocoon Industry

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

MOSCOW, Feb. 26—The All-Russian Union of Consumers' Co-operative Societies (Centrosoyuz) entered on an entirely new field during 1923. In the south of Russia the silk worm industry is just beginning to recover from the disorganization it suffered during the civil war. Centrosoyuz organized the sale of silk cocoons last year, taking over the raw cocoons from the peasants to sell them on a commission basis. Centrosoyuz pays the peasants a large part of the sale price on the spot in cash or goods.

The population of South Russia has become greatly interested in this organized marketing of the silk cocoons as a result of which, during the year, the raising of silk worms and the planting of mulberry trees developed rapidly. Centrosoyuz purchased over 17,000 poods of silk cocoons for export, representing about 40 per cent of the total export of Russia's silk cocoons. Twelve thousand pools, valued at $193,500, were exported to France.

B. V. D.'less Russian Prince Says He May Get Job

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—This is the sad, sad story of Prince Simon Nicolas Korsakov. The prince was an aide to General Wrangel, at one time the New York Times' favorite defender of civilization. Prince Korsakov did what he could to hamper the Russian workers in their effort to build a new government, and what he could to help starve the peasant. That done, he got away and went to Monte Carlo.

What money he had left he spent there, and borrowed some more. Then he came to America. He knew that in this democracy, and only in this democracy, do people crowd around the feet of titled loafers from the old world. Counts and dukes and princes wrote him that the going continued good in the land of the free, and he managed to get here. Luck brought him up against a "friend" whom he had met in Monte Carlo; and this friend invited him for a visit in Boston. The prince went and ran up a hotel bill at the Copley-Plaza Hotel, which is a toney one, and his next move was to a police station.

When he said he was a prince they treated him gently, and supplemented their respect with reverence when he said he had fought the Bolsheviks. His friend, he explained, had $200 and all the prince's nicest underwear, and then disappeared. He was released. Somebody paid his hotel bill. The prince says his brothers in arms are scattered over the world from Sofia to Peking and Chicago suburbs; and he says further that he thinks he may go to work. Some of the others have tried that, and told him it wasn't so had.

Kaufman Betrays Militant into Hands of Canadian Officials

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Morris Kaufman, president of the Fur Workers' Union, added another shameful deed to his black record when he betrayed Fanny Warshafsky, a member of Local 15, of the Fur Workers' union, to the Canadian authorities when she was on her way to Canada to make a tour on behalf of our Jewish organ, the Freiheit.

Morris Kaufman was on the same train with Warshafsky, and there is every likelihood that he took this train on purpose, as the tour of Fanny Warshafsky was announced a number of times in the Freiheit. When the authorities tried to send Comrade Warshafsky back she demanded to know more particulars. Thereupon she was led to another car of the train and was shown the president of the union who had given the government authorities information that she was a Communist, and that she was going to Canada to make tour in behalf of a newspaper that was in the pay of the Russian Soviet government.

One reason why Morris Kaufman attempted to render this little service to the Canadian government is that Fanny Warshafsky is one of the most active militants of the Fur Workers' union, which this same Kaufman rules with a "strong arm squad."

This time Kaufman failed, for the Canadian authorities permitted Comrade Warshafsky to proceed. Morris Kaufman will most likely console himself for his failure by having some more dastardly assaults made upon members of the Fur Worker' union by the gangsters in his pay.

World Women to Gather.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Delegates from 20 foreign countries will attend the fourth international congress of the Women's International League, to be held here May 1-7. Miss Jane Addams, international president, will preside over all the sessions, which will deal with after-war problems in all countries, leading up to a world reconstruction and reconciliation program.

STEEL PRESIDENT LAUDS FRAMING OF MACLACHLAN

Pats Prosecutor of Miner on Back

By RICHARD A. SCHAEFTER.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MONTREAL, Feb. 26.—In the Nova Scotia Legislature, Foreman Waye, labor member of Cape Breton county, took up the fight for "old J. B." MacLachlan, who was expelled by John J. Lewis from membership in the United Mine Workers for his firm stand in behalf of the Nova Scotia rank and file, and later on prosecuted and sentenced to a two years' term for seditious libel. Waye stated that the Attorney-General received a telegram from Roy Wolvin, the president of the British Empire Steel corporation, on the plants and pits of which the strike took place. The telegram congratulated the Attorney-General for his success in railroading MacLachlan. Waye asked the house if it was "not peculiar that Mr. Wolvin the head of the corporation that was squeezing the life blood out of the province could be so interested in the persecution of MacLachlan that he should have something in common with the Nova Scotia government to the extent of sending a congratulatory telegram."

We should say so.

Canadian "High Standard."

"Canada is a high standard country as regards labor, and full advantage should be taken to advertise this fact" was stated to press representatives by Dr. W. A. Ridell, former deputy minister of labor in the Ontario government and now in the International labor office of the League of Nations, when he arrived in Halifax to tour Canada on "league and labor."

Well, we don't know where the gentleman got his information from but the only high standard as far as we can see is the number of unemployed. Neither do the wages of those who are still employed look like a very high standard.

Spurn $15 Month Wage.

"We are very much disappointed with the failure of the organized British harvesters to accept the farm positions we have secured for them," said the superintendent of the government employment bureau in Toronto the other day.

Several hundred British harvesters, once lured over here by conscienceless immigration agents with fairy tales of steady employment and high wages, are now stranded, jobless and on loose ends in Toronto and provided for only by organized labor and the municipal authorities of this town while the government, provincial as well as federal, refused strictly to do anything to aid the poor devils. But that they refused in a body to accept the farmhand jobs offered them for the sky-high wages of $15 a month caused the officials go up on their hindpaws and claw the air.

"They refused to adapt themselves to Canadian conditions" the aforementioned governmental chairwarmer ended his story to press representatives when the expected rush for those eminently favorable jobs did not occur.

"Canadian conditions" that's the high standard.

An anti-labor legislation campaign is launched by The Employers Association of Manitoba demands that the provincial cabinet work for the abolition of all labor laws, including the workmen's compensation act, proposes laws prohibiting strikes on public utilities, protecting of employment contracts, forbidding affiliation of provincial and municipal employes with industrial trade unions, and the repealing of the Fair Wage Act.

Villard to Talk on Europe.

Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the Nation, will be the guest of honor at a dinner prepared by his friends at the Auditorium Hotel, March 6. He will tell of European conditions as he observed them in the Rhineland, the Ruhr and the Palatinate.

Every new DAILY WORKER reader means a new recruit in the ranks of militant labor.

Mexican Labor Notes

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 26.—One thousand railroad workers are threatened with the loss of their jobs here for alleged voluntary aid to the fascisti during the period that the latter controlled the railroads from Puebla to Vera Cruz and from La Barca to Guadalajara. A careful investigation will be made in each case, the government promises, before action is taken.

* * *

A strike of nurses and doctors of the state hospital of Puebla has broken out. The strike is due to the fact that it is almost two months since the institutional pay roll was met.

* * *

A textile convention of the Confederacion General de Trabajodores (anarcho-syndicalist) is meeting in the capital. It is to take up the problem of preventing wage reductions, partial or complete shut downs in the textile factories, avoiding appearance before the arbitration and conciliation commissions in the federal district because they are under control of the Laboristas, a labor political party controlled by the rival Mexican Federation of Labor. Freeing class war prisoners thruout the world is another subject up for discussion.

Striking Garment Workers Hear T. U. E. L. Speaker

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Feb. 26.—The second day of the Garment Workers' strike in Boston finds the workers in fine spirit. The previous day, five manufacturers were ready to sign up. The snow storm did not keep the men from the picket line. Another injunction has been applied for, which will be heard in the supreme court today.

The mass meeting held this afternoon listened to speakers from the Cigarmakers' union, and the New England organizer of the A. F. of L., who spoke along the usual lines of solidarity during the strike. The exception was Ida Rothstein, member of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, prominent member of the Needle Trades Section of the T. U. E. L. who last spring made a tour of needle trade centers in the United States and Canada on behalf of amalgamation. She pointed out the need of greater interest in the union, not only at strike times but during normal periods. If the union is not what it ought to be, it is our own fault, because of our own lack of interest. The forty-hour week was not the ultimate goal in the needle trades industry; in Russia, they became the arbiters of their own destiny. The workers responded warmly.

McAdoo's Dryness, Not His Oiliness, Angers Jim Duncan

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—James Duncan, of Quincy, Mass., first vice-president, American Federation of Labor has passed the black spot to W. G. McAdoo.

From offices just established in the Willard Hotel here, a press statement has been issued by Duncan, as chairman of the "Joint Legislative Committee of the American Federation of Labor, National Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Constitutional Liberty League of Massachusetts, Moderation League, Inc.," in which it is bleakly set forth that McAdoo, the presidential candidate, is a dry.

There seems to be nothing that McAdoo can do about it now. They went to his hotel here, when he came to explain his Doheny money to the senate committee, on Feb. 13, and they asked him where he stood. He said: "I'm dry. There's no use in discussing the subject. That's all there is to be said. I'm dry."

Duncan, for the A. F. of L. and its wet allies, says: "We represent a voting membership of over 5,000,000 members, comprising the A. F. of L. . . . etc." And "We present the facts to the people for their information on the attitude of Mr. McAdoo with respect to the modification of the Volstead Act."

MUSCULAR PARTY OF ATHLETES, IS CONFERENCE AIM

N. Y. Communists Start Sport Movement

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—The revolutionary youth of America must have sound bodies, declares the Athletic League of the Finnish Federation of the Workers Party which is calling an athletic conference at the Finnish headquarters in New York, 2042 Fifth Ave., for 11 a. m., March 23, with the co-operation of the district office and the Jugo-Slav and Cheko-Slovak Sport Clubs.

All branches of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League are urged to send delegates to work out plans for a vigorous athletic movement among the young people of the party.

Muscular Communism.

Urging the importance of muscular communism the Athletic League points to the fact that the capitalist class spends millions of dollars for the bourgeois sport movement in order to bring the young men and women where it can preach patriotism and hatred of the revolutionary movement to them.

On the other hand in Russia, it declares, the workers government is building up the sport movement among the workers and peasants.

Red Sport International.

An international working class sport and athletic movement is in existence with two international organizations, one of which has been organized by the communists of Europe. This is the Red Sport International of Moscow; it works in harmony with the Comintern and the Young Communist International which have discussed the sport problem and have told their sections in different countries to build rival sport organizations to the bourgeois sport organizations, to draw the young workers to them and propagate the principles of communism among them.

Outside of Russia there is strong working class sport movements in Germany, Cheko-Slovakia, Finland and many other countries embracing hundreds of thousands of members.

Athletes On Barricades.

In America it is our duty to start organization of a Workers Athletic League that is controlled by our party and the Young Workers League. Some comrades might think that when we organize an athletic club into our midst our activities in the class struggle cease. But experience shows us different. For instance in the civil war in Finland in 1918 the membership of the workers' sport clubs were among the first to step to the workers' side of the barricades to fight for the rights of the working class. And in the Workers Party branches where there already is a sport club the members of the sport clubs are just as active in the party work generally as are those comrades who do not belong to a sport club.

SCAB COMPANY HAS HUGE PROFIT DEBAUCH IN 1923

Baldwin Makes Over $40 a Share

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Baldwin Locomotive Company was forced to resort to obvious accounting tricks to tone down the outrageous profits made at the expense of the railroads during 1923. Profits of $25.58 on each share of common stock were reported by the company. These are large enough. But an examination of the annual income statement shows that before the juggling of figures profits actually stood at $40.59 on each $100 share. Among other things a reserve of $2,800,000 was set aside to cover the full 1924 dividends on both preferred and common stock.

Milking the Public.

Such looting of railroad treasuries will go on as long as the continuance of private ownership maintains the fiction that the railroads and their supply corporations are separate interests rather than two parts of the same combine out to milk the public.

The actual manufacturing profit on $102,762,075 worth of business was $10,184,755. Profits from the Standard Steel Works together with other income brought the gross profit of the owners to $13,867,922. After paying $2,348,147 interest, $1,400,000 taxes and setting aside $600,000 for depreciation there remained $9,519,775 for the holders of preferred and common stock or enough to pay their annual dividends three times over.

Reserves Set Aside.

But before showing such profits for the stockholders the corporation arbitrarily set aside two unusual reserves, one of $3,000,000 for removals and one of $2,800,000 for dividends in 1924. In other words dividends are assured for the coming year whether the corporation gets profitable business or whether it is altogether idle.

This illustrates the striking fact about modern industry that all the reserves piled up in years of activity go to protect the absentee owners during periods when orders fall off. No reserve is created to feed and clothe the families of the men who actually produce the goods. Today when $2,800,000 stands to keep the owners in cash during 1924 it is also published that over 14,000 wage earners have been totally cut off from the pay roll of the company on account of lack of business.

Buy From Themselves.

The excessive profits of Baldwin Locomotive like those of the other great railroad equipment and supply corporations are a result of the fact that financiers of the railroad combine are dealing with members of their own group when they determine the prices which the railroads are to pay for the product purchased. Thru J. P. Morgan & Co., the directorate of Baldwin interlocks with the executives of the great railroad systems of the country. It also interlocks with such corporations as Midvale Steel, Haskell & Barker, Wasston Piston Ring and other corporations forming the manufacturing end of the railroad business. Because of such connections Baldwin was able to get such profitable contracts during the period of business depression that in spite of only operating about 35 per cent of capacity it was able to show a very respectable profit.

$60,000,000 Graft.

In 1923 Balwin could have charged the railroads some $6,000,000 less for the goods furnished and still have secured profits sufficient to provide interest, dividends and normal depreciation reserves. Baldwin's business appears to have amounted to about one-tenth of the billion dollar railroad betterment expenditure which guaranteed prosperity to these interests. It is fair to assume that the carriers could have saved at least $60,000,000 if these allied corporations had not overcharged. But of course this is just one of the ways that railroad financiers are able to get around the limitations of railroad profits to a mere $1,000,000,000 by public rate making.

Altogether Baldwin has on hand $21,528,885 in undivided profits or more than the entire par value of the common stock. It has additional reserves deducted from profits amounting to $12,613,684. While its total working capital amounts to $43,871,835 or more than the entire value of its common and preferred stock combined.

What Do You Think of "A Week"

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have already published three installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its characters, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We will publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedents allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue the party has organized a Saturdaying expedition into the Public Gardens for firewood. Lisa, a school teacher in the Red Army, goes, glowing with ardor for the work. She returns to her rooming house where she finds Repin, the counter-revolutionists who is posing as a revolutionary "military observer."—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER VI.

A FROSTY wind had been blowing, but the sky had remained blue and the colors of everything were sharp and bright. Now, high up, blue-white clouds were floating and the wind with unseen hands carried them across the sky till they covered the sun, when everything became gloomy and dull. Stalmakhov walked hurriedly from his office thru the big square where the market was spread out.

Suddenly his attention was caught by a young fellow shrinking with cold, in a tattered jacket. Stalmakhov noticed the strong hands, dark with dirt and cold, the sack on his shoulders . . . probably a workman from the Depot who had stolen some tools from hunger and was exchanging them for bread.

But that forehead, that shaggy head of hair protruding from under his cap, seemed to Stalmakhov strangely familiar, and an irresistible impulse made him hurry after the fellow, lay his hand on his shoulder, and ask, "Comrade, what have you got for sale?" And the other turned, winked, looked round, and said in a dull, gloomy voice:

"Good day, Comrade Stalmakhov."

"Gornuikh! You? What are you doing here?" But Gornuikh already had Stalmakhov by the sleeve, and was pulling him out of the crowd. . . .

"Yes. Yes. I. . . . But you, don't you shout so loud. . . . Come along quickly."

They went to the wooden boarded-up booths, the remains of the old bazaar—nowadays used as a latrine by the market folk. They came there, and, looking round, Gornuikh said in his deep bass voice:

"And what are you doing here, eh? Walking about? Watching? Just so. There is work for us all here. It's a pity that you called attention to me. Today I had worked most carefully over my costume and face. In Winter, no one would have known. True, we met today. . . . Find Klimin at once and tell him. . . ."

Gornuikh looked round. He looked with his eyes only, not turning his head.

"Tell him that I waited for him two hours today in the Commission. And don't you look for him in the Commission. He does not go there in the evenings. Probably in the Party Committee. He got mixed up in this business of getting wood, and chucked his work in the Cheka. Altho, to tell the truth, there is nothing to be done there without him. He is a good organizer and more energetic than any of them. All the same it's a pity that nowadays he is so seldom in in the Cheka. Well, find him. He is either in the Executive Committee, or in the Party Committee, or with Karaulov in the Commissariat for War. Look for him all thru the town."

"But what are you so excited about?" Stalmakhov interrupted him; "he is sure to be in the Commission tomorrow. You will see him there, and can tell him yourself everything you want to."

Gornuikh gripped Stalmakhov firmly by the arm. In his made-up face there was an unaccustomed anxiety.

"Listen to me, Stalmakhov, and do as I tell you. . . . I fear tomorrow will be too late. . .. There is to be a revolt today. . . . Almost for certain."

"Revolt?" said Stalmakhov amazedly. "But what grounds have you got for thinking that?"

"Grounds for thinking it? There are and there aren't. See what a lot of carts from N—— Government on the market. I can always tell an N—— peasant from one of our own. I think they have got weapons hidden in them. But how am I to find them? A search would have to be made and the whole market surrounded, and now it's already late. Yes, and you can tell by the general feeling. Here they are always longing to see the end of us. . . . But today the market women are saying with such confidence that today, precisely, not tomorrow, will be the end of the servants of Anti-Christ . . . that's us, of course." Stalmakhov laughed. Gornuikh continued:

"You think it funny that Gorniukh should be listening to the babbling of women. But I know that sometimes it's well enough for a Chekist to pay attention to women's babble. You can always tell if, under the babble, there is the seed of a plot, or if it is simply hostile feeling towards us. . . . In general the mouzhiks need understanding. They do not see far, but what is before their eyes they examine and turn to account better than you or I. Well then, find Klimin, tell him, stir him up, and at least let him take some precautions. The rest of our Chekists are a useless crowd. Today I quarrelled with the whole lot of them. I tell them that we must be on our guard, and they make a joke of it. It's true, I've got no sort of clues. If there was anything to get hold of, I'd had it already. There's nothing; but I feel it in everything, in the last bulletins, in the answers of prisoners, in trivialities that you can't call proofs, but enough to make me anxious. They've just killed one Chekist, two hundred versts from here, and it seems to me that all this taken together speaks only one thing, and that is of revolt in the near future. . . ."

"Killed? What was his name?" Stalmakhov asked in agitation. "Not Surikov?"

"Surikov. . . . He probably got nervous, made a mess of the business and did for himself. A good fellow, but a bad Chekist. But did you know him?"

"We lived together. . . . Tell me more about his death. . . . Perhaps it's only rumor."

"No. Not rumor. Information from agents. . . . They buried him alive in the ground. . . . But that is beside the point. You go and find Klimin, without fail, do you hear? It's too late to declare a state of war, but at least let them get the Communist Company under arms. . . . Or they will cut the whole lot to pieces like chickens. Well, off with you."

He shook Stalmakov's hand firmly.

"Then it's true about Surikov?"

"Of course, true! There's nothing to be done; our work is like that, one must be ready for anything, and probably it was his own fault. . . ." And Gorniukh, bent and ragged, with a sack on his back, went off and disappeared in the crowd.

Stalmakhov walked home by the uneven, half-frozen road. His mind was empty, and thoughts ran thru it like mice thru a cold, bright room.

Killed him. . . . And in a moment he would be home, and on the threshold of the house door, the orphaned mother would ask for news of him, of Sergei. And hard tho it would be he would have to lie to her. He would have to, for in his pocket lay a note from Serezha (affectionate diminutive of Sergei) Surikov, written at the last station before he had gone off there into the blue steppe:

> Dear Stalmakhov, if I am killed, tell Mother that I have gone off for some years on a distant mission. To Germany or America. That will be my last request. In memory of our friendship, take my photograph. It is fastened to my old certificate, which is lying on the upper shelf of the what-not.
>
> Live and work well.
>
> SERGEI SURIKOV.
>
> P. S. In case of my death give the letter enclosed with this to the President of the Cheka, Comrade Klimin.

And when in answer to his emphatic knock the door opened, Stalmakhov saw her, just as he had expected to see her, a little thin old woman with a wrinkled face, and her kind blue eyes, over her spectacles in their tarnished copper frames, looked enquiringly up at him.

And he heard the question:

"Nothing has happened to Serezha? You do not know if there is a letter from him?"

Stalmakhov thought how Sergei, her beloved Serezha, the thread of silver light that held her joyless old age to joyful life, had died a terrible lonely death in the endless steppes away there to the south-east. Unaccustomed pity stirred in his heart.

"I know nothing fresh, Anna Petrovna," he replied, not looking her in the eyes. She stood on one side and let him go past her, and he went into his room where two beds stood, his and Serezha's, Serezha who had been killed in the far blue steppes.

"Do you not need a samovar, Andre Vasilievitch?" she asked, following him into the room. She sighed and sat down on a chair by the door.

Only Revolution Can Bring Republic to Fascisti Spain

MADRID, Feb. 26.—There will be no republic in Spain without social revolution. The "I'm mad at you" attitude of the liberal politicians here toward the king has ended in a sort of "Let's kiss and make up" affair on the occasion of his nibs' birthday.

When his high-and-mightiness declared on the occasion of signing the decree granting dictatorial powers to Prima de Rivera that the parliamentary ministers and parties were too corrupt for any of them to continue in charge of "his" government, the liberal leaders and, in fact, the heads of all parties, being thus insulted, loudly declared, "I won't play with you any more. The next time you send for me, I won't come. When the Marquis of Estella fails, you'll fall with him, and no matter how much you cry, we won't come to pick you up. We'll have a republic, so there."

But when the king heard them say, "Never, no more," he imagined that maybe they had added under their breath, "till next time," or being politicians, "till we get the chance." So, on the occasion of his serenity's most exalted birthday, he invited the Senors Maura and Sanches de Toca, the Count of Romanones and other political leaders to come and kiss the hand that had slapped them. They came—all except the Marquis de Alhucemas, who said he was in mourning, tho he had been seen in the box of a theater here the night before. He will probably be coaxed out of his sulk soon, too.

AMERICAN MILITARISM AND ANTI-MILITARISM

By HARRY GANNES.

WITH the United States assuming the foremost imperialist-capitalist role, the imperative necessity of increasing its military machine becomes a vital problem of the day. There is, in this country, a growing and active group of capitalists who recognize that if the United States is to maintain its position as an oppressor and exploiter nation, a large and well equipped army, navy and air force are absolutely essential.

"A war for democracy and to end all wars," was the slogan which baited the youth during 1917-1918. That an end to war is not yet is admitted even by those who most sublimely believed in the slogan advanced during the hysterical days of the conflict. The world war settled for the American imperialists the fact that to rely upon voluntary recruiting for military forces in a nation so capitalistically advanced as the United States, or to depend upon the quick training of the youth mobilized at the outbreak of the war, is disadvantageous if not disastrous in the face of the more drastic measures resorted to by most of the European and Eastern powers.

The youth movement in this country faces precisely the situation that confronted the youth of Germany in 1908-14 when Karl Liebknecht took up the cudgel against the German junkers and militarists who were building up a powerful military machine, on the one hand, to protect the established predominance of German imperialism, and on the other hand, to wrest, by force, the much needed world markets.

The United States, on a larger scale, is just in that situation today. Industrially and financially this country developed tremendously during and following the world war. America's formidable position in the world market is daily being questioned and contested by British, French and Japanese imperialism. The struggle for oil sharpens the competition. If this country is to maintain its imperialist predominance, as well as, (by the dint of necessity) double its role as oppressor in Mexico, South America and China, it must build and maintain a greater and more efficient military organization than it now possesses. This fact is known and propagated by the general staff of the United States Army, and is seconded by the foremost financiers of the United States, in an organized form, thru the National Security League.

The United States government spends more than 83 per cent of its total budget for military purposes (past and future wars)—more than junker Germany expended before the fatal days of 1914, and when Karl Liebknecht's anti-military activities were most energetic.

Just as the traitorous Social-Democratic Party of Germany, not only overlooked, but discouraged and sabotaged anti-military work and rebuked Karl Liebknecht for his fearless campaign against the growing military octopus, so in this country the official labor movement shields its gaze at the attempts of Pershing and his cohorts in their attempt to militarize the entire working class of this country.

Every revolutionary youth movement, per se, is an anti-military organization, not in the pacifist sense, but from the class, the communist point of view. In France today the major activities of the Young Communist League centers about anti-military work.

In the United States a struggle against increased armaments and the pernicious schemes to militarize the American working class must become one of the vital problems of the American Communist youth organization, the Young Workers League of America.

Every day vast numbers of the American youth are permeated with militarist propaganda, most particularly in the secondary schools, the high schools, and colleges. Experience has taught the American militarists that what is needed for effective warfare is a large and well trained group of officers. Devious plans have and are being prepared by the United States Army Department to be able to put into action millions of men under the leadership of the reserve officers being trained from day to day in all high schools and colleges in this country. Also, the standing armed forces have doubled in the last few years.

Practical plans of universal military training receive the serious attention of all legislative bodies, state and national. The citizens' military training camps are only an apetizer to the big meal for the military gormands that is to follow.

How completely the entire capitalist press is behind the scheme of citizen's military training camps and any other form of universal military training emphasizes the determination of American capitalism to create a monstrous and effective military force.

In this country the development of aircraft is solely a military monopoly.

Even the mildest of pacifist agitation is met with vigorous assaults as, for instance, the plethora of abuse that greeted the spineless action of the Wisconsin socialists in voting for the reduction of the state militia.

The whole weight of these facts rests on the shoulders of the Young Workers League of America, small as it is, since no other working class organization has a well-defined, workingclass anti-militarist program.

Anti-military activities in this country must assume special and varied forms due to the manifold make-up of the military forces. The American working class does not relish militarism, as many of them have had a taste of its blessings in the recent world war; and the stink of shattered putrid carcasses is as much a part of militarism in the mind of the ex-soldiers, as are the polished boots and shining sabres of the strutting and pompous officers.

'JIM THE TRUSTY' TOURING COUNTRY FOR BIG BUSINESS

Crook Talks to Boys' Clubs on Morality

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—New England has for the past few months been the scene of a tour by "Jimmy the Trusty," who has appeared in movie houses as the "reformed convict," has spoken to Boys' Clubs, and has shaken the hand of mayors of the provincial towns, including Springfield, and of business men. His picture is featured in the local press of most cities; his views on crime are considered good copy.

A career of crime, and the confidence man reforms, but instead of getting to work, he conceives the brilliant idea of redeeming mankind. He would preach to boys, paint the danger in such lurid colors that they would thru fear, tread the straight and narrow path. Easy graft he had for many years. In one of the pens where he did a bit, he was an untrustworthy cuss, chumming with the screws (guards), long before he reached his present exalted line, thru mounting from the lower forms of crime to the confidence game. Even before he became a trusty, he was a miserable, slimy creature, with his eye on the Warden's office, looking for favors.

He may have played the confidence game of late, but only as a step to some bigger graft. And playing up his attempt to fleece a leading society woman gives him that society finish before which we must inevitably bow.

Under Wing of Big Biz.

Jimmy is taken under the wing of big business, because of the slop he hands out. "If you're on the level with mother, you'll never go wrong; don't shoot craps, don't be dishonest—it's only the sucker who commits crime; do you realize, your honor (speaking to the mayor of Springfield), the moral message that the newspapers are going to carry to the men in gray behind these bleak walls." And after reciting his life history, he ended with an original poem, entitled "If Everyone Was Only on the Square."

Big business can use anyone who blames himself for not enjoying the good things of life; who proclaims that conditions in the country are all right, and that anyone who wants to make good can do so. The reds are continually hammering at the system of capitalist production, sweatshops, child labor, poor pay, unemployment, are hammered at; and child labor laws, a joke both in their text and their enforcement, the hollow mockery of the workers' safeguards, the blind alley jobs—these facts tend to grip the imagination of the workers. But it would not do to have the masses get the idea that economic inequalities form the mold for shaping criminals.

Never Blames the Rich.

Just as preachers tell us that we are poor sinners, and responsible for our misfortunes, so they have preachers like Jimmy the Trusty, to keep those from rebelling who are downtrodden victims of capitalist oppression. Just as preachers paint the horrors of hell, so Jimmy the Trusty of capitalism, warns against jail. Instead of condemning the rich, who are responsible for crime, he puts the blame on the individual. Crafty, treacherous Jimmy! Respectable munition makers and hell roarers get away with their graft. Why should we condemn a poor fish like you?
